CONGRESSIONAL RECORD AND APPENDIX,

FIFTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

Mr. ALLEN. Is not that a conclusive argument against this amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator knows of any argument that is conclusive against the other side I wish he would state it. I do not know of any, when they came up solidly to-day on the point of order, and as they will come up solidly for this amendment without batting eyes or making wry faces. But there is one tribunal, and I am getting a good deal shaky about it, and that is the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator mean to say that the other side of the Chamber would override a plain provision of the Constitution?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; they never override it; they always dig under it. They are not bold enough to come out and override it and say, "We defy this instrument." They will slip around it; they will mine under it; they will go under it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator, since he has broken the chain of his argument, allow an interruption? The Senator refers to the fact that this provision gives the President the power to dispose of all these lands to other persons whom we will appoint. I should like to ask the Senator if the President has not that power now?

Mr. MORGAN. No; and I want to show why.

Mr. BUTLER. Has he not that power without the enactment of this provision?

Mr. MORGAN. The Spanish law prohibited the sale of land or the gift of land except by the Crown. The President is not the Crown because he is administering the Spanish law.

Mr. BUTLER. May not the President in exercising his authority as Commander in Chief of the Army under the military occupation have such power and capacity as will allow him to dispose of the land?

Mr. MORGAN. He could not, because the Constitution of the United States says that no title of nobility shall be conferred upon any man, and it is in virtue of a title of nobility or royalty, the royal prerogative of the Crown, that the lands can be disposed of. I argued, as you will remember, in the opening of my remarks to-night, that the Constitution of the United States had shorn the President of all possible claim to the shadow of prerogative—that is, the prerogative right of the Crown. The President of the United States can not have a prerogative right. He can not inherit it any more than he can inherit a scepter from another government. So that settles that point.

The object is to get rid of these laws. It is to open a door for the disposal of these lands. Here is Judge Taft, who is a very able lawyer, and I have no doubt at all a man of very high character. That is his reputation, and I firmly believe he is entitled to it. He says that the lands can not be disposed of without an act of Congress, but the act of Congress that he proposes is to vest that right, first, in the President, and make him the conduit to vest it in some person he will designate, and then have the lands disposed of according to his direction. That is the way to get them out. This whole arrangement in regard to the lands is for the purpose of escaping from the strictures that Spanish law puts upon the lands and prohibits them from being sold by anybody. Any sovereign could grant them and does grant them and did grant them, a free gift, in thousands and millions of cases.

Mr. BUTLER. The President has almost imperial power there now, but this is one important point, then, in which this amendment would clothe the President with power that he does not now have.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator has used the word "imperial." Mr. Jefferson also used it, and Mr. Madison, and so have others used it in respect of this Republic, and called it an imperial Republic. The imperialism that has been suggested against the movement and principles that control the Republican party has been misnamed, I think. The right name is absoluteism—absolute, despotic, irresponsible power. It may belong to an empire or it may belong to a county; it may belong to a city government; it is absolute.

The powers that the Republicans have asserted, that the Democrats called imperialistic, are such as some emperors or autocrats have used, but absolute power is the thing that the despot, the autocrat, the tyrant, in whatever form he may exist and employ his powers, wants to have. That is the power that is in this proposed act. It is absolute power, the power of disposal without responsibility and without hindrance.

Now, just there, if you will allow me, I can characterize this thing still more pointedly by another feature of the amendment, which is a very important one and a very striking one. There is in the Government of the United States a peculiarity of our Constitution, somewhat resembling the British constitution, but not exactly. A much better establishment ours is. It is that the sovereign power of the Government, which we call the legislative, executive, and judicial, the triune power, is each vested in a separate department.

I have shown to-night how in regard to the legislative, the executive, and the judicial powers they are vested by the Constitution in departments to be constituted by act of Congress. This bill agglomerates these powers. These departments are run into one and placed in the hands of one man, the executive, legislative, and judicial powers. That is undeniable. If there was no other objection to this provision that is sufficient—the vesting of power in one man in order that he may vest it in other people, and in that investure of power the three departments that distinguish this Government from other governments of the world are run together in the hands of one man, and it disrupts the Government down to its foundation.

You might just as well tell me that you can invest the Committee on the Inaugural Arrangements, of which the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] is chairman, with the executive, judicial, and legislative powers of the District of Columbia, over which Congress has unquestionable paramount power and jurisdiction, and enable him to exercise all of these powers, as to invest Mr. McKinley as President of the United States with the executive, legislative, and judicial powers; and for a very much better reason the Senator from Ohio would be entitled to it, because he does not now hold any office except that of Senator.

He is entitled to a share in the legislative power as a member of the National Legislature, but if you can do what is proposed by this amendment in the Philippine Islands, where Congress has full, unlimited power, as it is contended and as I concede, short of the violation of the Constitution, you can take the District of Columbia and unite the executive, the judicial, and the legislative powers in the hands of any one man or any one committee or any one tribunal, and nobody in the world can question it, if you will admit the power of Congress to transfer the powers and authority of one of the constitutional departments of the Government into the hand of another.

Establish the doctrine that Congress has the right to pass this bill and to invest these powers in the hands of one man, the President or not, and then transfer it into the District of Columbia, where Congress has supreme and unquestioned constitutional power, and let us pass a law here that one man shall be the executive and the judge and the legislature, and you have got just as much right to do it for the District of Columbia under those conditions as you have for the Philippine Islands. The breach of right, the breach of constitutional duty, depends upon the fact that you violate the Constitution in blending the powers of these departments in the hands of one man. There is where it is.

I do not think there is any laughing matter about that in this bill. If I understand the Constitution in the slightest particular at all; if I have any conception of it, that is a gross, inexcusable violation of it, and one that will break it down whenever it strikes the judgment of a court that has got authority to question it.

This measure—ominous and dangerous—if enacted, will become an instrumentality of evil and excessive power, but when it comes to its final end it will sink out of sight in a second, and the sword of justice will strike it in the name of the Constitution, and it will go down, never to revive. It is a thoroughly unconstitutional measure.

In regard to the powers that are to be exercised in the Philippines there is another which I will dwell upon to some little extent, although I am satisfied in doing so I shall strengthen the measure with the Republican side of the Chamber. I refer to the power to enact laws for the collection of customs duties in the Philippines. Amongst all the opportunities that are presented by this measure, the inducements, the enticements, and the temptations, there is none that strikes the attention of the Republican leaders of this country so forcibly as the opportunity to convert the Philippines into a kitchen garden of the United States and to work it for all it is worth. The symptoms of this trouble broke out in Porto Rico, and that which was in the President's mind a plain duty became so clouded under the inducements and the persuasions and arguments of his friends that he turned against it and kicked it off like an old slipper.

It was the tariff question, it was the power to hold dependent islands and colonies that you could tax at pleasure and that you could compel to go into the channels of trade that would carry all the cream of traffic into the pockets of a few men in the United States. It was, in other words, that organic trouble of the Republican party, which has appeared in every prominent act of legislation in this country since the organization of that party, whether relating to finance, relating to the tariff, or relating to the distribution of the revenues of the country into channels that would make men rich, including the national-bank system, etc., and breaking down the State-bank issues by taxation—it was the abuse of the power of taxation.

That is the strong card of the Republican party; it has been and it will be; and it is in this bill; it is in the Porto Rican bill; it is in the Cuban suggestions that are to be put as a wing to this bill—the opportunity to grow rich by the abuse of the power of taxation.

What is the power of taxation in the United States as to the sum that may be levied or the extent of it? Suppose you levy a direct tax upon a piece of property or a license tax, or any other form of taxation, an impost, a customs duty, upon any piece of property or any class of property, what amount would you put on? Any amount that you please. There is no limit to the amount.

In order to have the Supreme Court sustain your tax you have nothing to do except what was done in the act taxing the State banks—profess in your bill that it is a revenue measure and that that is your purpose in levying the tax. It does not make any difference how infamous and black a cause may be proven by surrounding circumstances, the Supreme Court can not look outside of the four corners of your act, and they say, "Inasmuch as Congress says that this is a revenue measure, that is all we can make of it; we accept that on their statement," and you can raise your tax to absolute prohibition, so that not one dollar will come into the Treasury and so that the industries upon which it is levied will be absolutely extinguished.

But if you stand there and lie like gentlemen and say, "That bill is a tax bill for revenue, because the bill so expresses it," the Supreme Court will say, "Well done; that is your right, and we sustain the law;" whereas if you express in the bill the real purpose of it, the court would not sustain it. Therefore, the power of taxation, both as to the subjects of taxation and the amount that can be levied, is entirely beyond the control of the courts of this country.

There never was a despot, there never was a usurper, who undertook to march at the head of armies for the conquest of the liberties of people, his own people or those of other countries that he might choose to visit, who did not begin by the abuse of the power of taxation. He filled his coffers by wringing the money from the people through that abuse. That has been the chief, startling, uniform abuse of Bourbon Spanish power in Cuba, in Porto Rico, in the Philippines, and in all countries subject to their jurisdiction, particularly of their colonial dependencies.

What else but that was it that provoked the Cubans into war? What but that caused the Tagalogs to become skillful and brave and powerful in battle through two centuries of resistance? The Spanish Government took the church and the friars and made the friars the assessors and the collectors of taxes on the people and gave them power to confiscate estates to pay the taxes; and they so oppressed those people that once in a while they would fly out in a spasm of despair and anger and make an assault upon that great power. That is the history of Spanish rule in the Philippines, and that is the root of the matter.

When we come to answer the question why is it that the Filipino hates every white man in the world, it is because the white men, the Spaniards, have been their oppressors in this form of taxation.

I have the statement here of Mr. Edwards, the great grandson of Jonathan Edwards, who delivered the statement to me after having lived in Manila, in the Philippine Islands, for more than twenty-five years, one of the most elegant gentlemen I ever met, a large wholesale merchant and importer and exporter there. He said he had seen a friar meet a Filipino in the street, with an assessment in his pocket, which he had made up as to the amount of taxes that man was to pay, and he would go and demand of him the money in the street. The man would say, "I have not got the money with me." "Never mind, sir; walk off to jail," and, according to the Spanish custom, whenever a man is put in prison upon any accusation of disobedience to governmental authority, he is required to make a deposit, as you all know. That money is deposited to cover all the expenses of his living and all the probabilities of cost that could be inflicted upon him before he is allowed to come out of incommunicado or even employ counsel. This man was incarcerated, and while he was thus incarcerated his friends came and made the deposit for him, whereupon he had the right to employ counsel for his defense; but in the meantime, before his counsel could come to the court and enter his plea, his property had been confiscated.

Here were two brothers by the name of Cortez, who came here with a claim of a million dollars that had been wrested out of them by the Spanish Government in this same way—by confiscation of their property for refusal, as it was alleged, to pay taxes. The Government seized the property and sold it; but they got the money just in the nick of time, so that when our troops entered Manila they found the money on deposit and it could be identified; and they came here and asked to have it restored to them. After a long effort made with the Secretary of War he became finally satisfied with the facts and restored the money to these two gentlemen. I saw them frequently while they were here. They were seeking my advice and assistance in getting their money back.

Mr. President, the Spanish régime in these islands brought upon Spain and is now entailing upon us all of these troubles of insurrection, murder, death, and rapine growing out of the fact of the abuse of the power of taxation by Spain. I could not give you a better illustration, nor one more true.

This bill is to be and is the root of the power which will result in the abuse of taxation. How? We have a very great amount of sugar in consumption, and our friends of the beet sugar persuasion and some of our friends along down on the coast—I do not know whether they are in Florida or not—are insisting upon the maintenance of a pretty high sugar tax, notwithstanding the opportunity it may afford to the trust to fix the price.

The production of the Philippine Islands must not be admitted into the United States like the sugar production of Louisiana is admitted into Mississippi and Texas. That will not do. They must be held in such a way as that, being in the Union, they are out from under the protection of the Constitution, and are the subjects of taxation unlimited; and this bill is of a piece precisely with the Porto Rican act.

Upon the subject of the tariff it is animated by the same purpose of abuse; its execution will be upon the same lines; and if it is possible to make it work through the decision of the Supreme Court now about to be made, or through their failure, as was announced to-day was probable, to decide the question, here is a great field for working this kitchen garden of the United States through taxation, discriminative taxation. Hawaii got in before they formed their plans.

I had the honor of being in that commission with my friend the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and we brought Hawaii in so as to enjoy fully and perfectly the same rights that New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma enjoy, as a Territory of the United States, without any discrimination against her sugar, and yet she produces enormous amounts of it. She makes more to an acre than any other country in the world every made, or, I suppose, ever will make. Eleven tons of beautiful, bright, brown, sugar to an acre of ground I think must be the maximum of sugar production, and yet I have been on three plantations in Hawaii where that was the production for the whole crop, running to over 1,500 to 3,000 acres of land on a plantation.

The Philippines must be kept so that certain classes of men in this country can reap harvests of riches through the abuse of the power of taxation; and if you will put them under this bill in the hands of the President of the United States and allow him to control the destiny of that country and to manage these taxes to suit his friends, they will make out of it all that they want before the Government and people of the United States can ever undo it again and get their rights.

Not that alone, but various other markets will be held in the United States, not for the enrichment of the Philippine people, not for the enrichment of the great body of the consumers, the people of this country who consume things, but for the enrichment of the men who have got the capital to make the trust combinations and control the profits of the business. That is where it is going to.

Mr. President, I set my face against that one proposition whenever and wherever I meet it, and against any measure, it makes no difference who may advocate it, which contains any symptom of this enormous outrage against the people of this country—the abuse of the power of taxation.

Another temptation, which has been spoken of by Judge Taft in terms of commendation and hopefulness as to its great outcome, is the introduction into the Philippine Islands of corporate combinations. He invites them; he pleads that they shall be brought there; and he says that they will be great instrumentalities in developing that country. Mr. President, I have been in the sound of that siren note since I was a child, and in trying to come to the real truth of the situation, I find, in my judgment, the man who does the work well, faithfully, and skillfully is the man who develops a country, not the man who lends the money to do it and gets his percentage out of the wages of the laborer.

What we want to do in the Philippines for the benefit of those people after we have introduced Christian ideas among them—and yet they are all Christians in a certain sense—is to educate, to lift them up, to inspire them with confidence through the cultivation of their faith in our honesty and our good intentions, and stimulate them to industry by making at least a fair deal between them and the people of the United States. That is what we want to do to lift them up. We can not lift those people up by covering up that country with corporate power and putting all its rich resources into the hands of monopolies and trusts. Disaster will come to the common, miserable, poor people, ignorant and untrained, if the benefit of being employed at day's wages or upon their own lands and working for themselves is denied to them, and the profit of their labor is to go to the trusts, if ever they get in the grasp of these great combinations.

Mr. President, I have been an expansionist, and I am now, but I have never thought of expansion as a means of injuring the people over whom our authority should extend. God knows that if I had detected or could have detected or now were to detect in a movement for expansion a purpose to lift up these men who have usurped all the great industries of the United States and put them in the grasp of trusts, and fasten them upon those people in the Philippines, in Porto Rico, or elsewhere, I should be in favor of getting rid of those islands in order to drive those men off. I would not give the islands back to Spain, but I would make some other provision. I would save them from a fate of that sort.

By taking those people into the jurisdiction of the United States I believe, Mr. President, we have conferred blessings upon them that are indescribable in their greatness, in their variety, and in their far-reaching effect. This is not the proper place or a necessary occasion for a man to express views upon the actual guiding hand that has developed these great powers, but I can refer here to some facts in connection with them that you will not deny the importance of, and which, I think, you are prepared to admit.

One of the troubles, and perhaps the most important and serious trouble under which these people have labored from Porto Rico to the island of Sulu, has been the union of church and state, the church being used as an arm and instrumentality of civil government, and the state living off the division of tax spoils of the church, which have been wrung out of the people of that country. When Thomas Jefferson, in the house of burgesses in Virginia, first proclaimed, as he did, in the midst of tumult and scorn and hissing, that great and universal doctrine which lies at the very foundation of republican institutions—the divorce of church and state—he inaugurated the soul and spirit of the movement that to-day witnesses its consummation in the assemblage of this august body within this great Chamber.

When the blow was struck which gave Porto Rico American liberty, the liberty of the United States—to Cuba the promise of it when she has the wisdom to exercise it, and to Porto Rico the right to it, which she now in some sense repudiates; but I am glad to see she is coming around—when that blow was struck it severed a cord, never to be reunited, which bound those islands fatally to despotism and depravity.

That blow severed the relations between church and state; and from thence forward the divorce was consummated. Never will they be united again. Through that principle operating amongst those people, as the same principle operated in the American colonies, there will come light, freedom, liberty, conscience, self-reliance, justice, and aspirations, and these men will feel that in fact and in deed they are men, and not the mere puppets of power. That has been accomplished.

In connection with that, there is one fact in our history which stands out preeminent above all other facts of the recent past to show the wisdom—whether it was Divine or human makes no difference—of our having established ourselves by the treaty of Paris upon the islands of the Philippine Archipelago. When this same union of church and state in China opposed itself to treaties guaranteeing the right of Christian denominations to go there and disseminate truth among a populace who had a double prejudice—one against Christianity and the other against foreigners and all friends of foreigners in China—there came an outbreak such as no nation in this world ever witnessed, certainly not in modern times.

Mr. President, if we had been in a state of profound peace in this country, without any drilled and hardened soldiers in the field, or if we had been without such officers to lead them as Chaffee, who came up from the ranks to a major-generalship, or if we had been without the preparations that were attendant upon the recent war with Spain, in which glories of military renown were won that have not been paralleled in the best battles Napoleon ever fought—if we had been without these troops in the Philippine Islands and those offenses came we would have been buffeting about through this country for volunteers or soldiers, and before we could have reached Pekin to the relief of our beleaguered legation, they, too, would have fallen like the German ambassador, a prey to the brutality of the pagan Chinamen.

It was the fact that our flag floated in the Philippines, that our ships were there and our splendid soldiery were there, that enabled us to go immediately upon that continent and to lead the van for the relief of the legations.

Suppose the first two hundred men we sent there had not got into Pekin, what would have become of those men, women, and children, those splendid people who were there under the protection of our treaties? They would have been lost.

Perhaps not a tear would have watered the eye of Senators upon that account, because the world has become so hard-hearted of late that it is scarcely to be expected that human sympathy will be expressed in political circles beyond the ordinary proprieties. But as to those sensibilities which belong to high character as well as to common people, there would have been a loss among men, women, and children whom we know that would have afflicted the hearts of this country very seriously.

Then have we had no advantage in a military point of view and in the protection of the rights of the people of the United States in consequence of the fact that some hidden hand, unled by human thought, had placed our feet upon the islands of the Philippines? Do we forget these things? Do we ignore the fact in our desire to be called a world power—in which I confess I have not any remarkable degree of pride, for we have always been a world power since we were first created—but do we forget the fact that these grand events that have clustered into our history with such brilliancy of renown in the latter days are due to the circumstances that we were in the van, pressing to the front, and were led and controlled in a way that we knew not? Do we forget that?

The slightest reflection ought to satisfy any sensible man, it seems to me, or any reflective person, or any person who is responsive to the high calls of duty, that in what we have done in China and have been compelled to do in defense of the treaty rights of our people in that pagan land we have triumphed signally, splendidly, and without just cause for any criticism upon anybody, civil or military, for the course we have pursued in that curious and great event in China. The end is not yet.

We do not see it, but we know one thing—we are within 500 miles of the coast of China, with a very strong fleet, with a seasoned army, with proved, experienced, skilled, and courageous officers, and that the world understands it all. We know that when we lift our hand in protestation in the face of the powers of Europe in China they pause and say, "We will consider what the United States has to say about this."

As far as it has been possible to do so we have saved life and averted famine and death in that pagan land. We know that. These facts have come to us, not by our contrivance, perhaps, for there is not a man in this Chamber who three years ago imagined the first step would be taken in that direction; but yet it has come, and there is much else behind it—much else.

The divorce of church and state in China is just as complete as it is in the Philippines. It is a different church and a different state, but the divorce of church and state in China is absolutely essential to the progress of civilization, trade, and commerce, and to the acceptance by those people of that light which has illumined Europe until it is the center light of the earth, except America, where we have the new-born star that excels them all in its brilliancy.

Mr. President, we ought not to ignore things like this. We ought to think them over maturely, and certainly when the opportunity comes—I do not care how it comes or through whose hands it comes, so that they are not our own bloody hands or so that we have not contrived it in fraud for our own advantage—the people of the United States ought to stand ready to receive it, to act upon it, and to realize its blessings, which will come also upon China. The United States is to-day by far the largest producing country on the face of the earth, and is one of two countries alone that are receiving population now from the balance of the world—the Argentina and the United States. We have resources here that no human mind would undertake to calculate, and are supported by 45 sovereign and independent States, any one of which is the equal of almost any state in the world in defensive power.

If we ourselves respect our own institutions and our own laws and cultivate amongst ourselves a feeling of faith that justice will come from the administration of this Government and that the people in all quarters of this country will receive from this Government with equity its benefits and its blessings, there is no reason why we should not accomplish dreams of prosperity, greatness, and glory that have not yet been dreamed. We will accomplish far more than we expect to accomplish or that has ever yet been expected of us if we obey that grand organic law that has kept us together and united us as a power that the world can not break down. Separated, divided, and given up to spoils, indulging ourselves in the enjoyment of what we can wring out of each other, we will soon become weak and powerless, and our prestige will be gone, our glory will have faded.

I trust, Mr. President, that through a proper, patient, honorable, just, wise, and an established policy recognized by all, we shall not on this occasion or on any other occasion enter upon doubtful ground for the purpose of gaining privileges that may at the moment of time promise to be rich in our favor. I trust we will not, and yet I feel persuaded that I am speaking to-day to gentlemen in this presence who will not be in the slightest degree influenced by what I have to say. But, Mr. President, I am to-night addressing myself to the people of the United States, and I have not uttered one questionable word when we come to compare it with the Constitution of the United States and a just and a wise policy for this Government.

I do not believe that the positions I have taken here to-night will be controverted seriously by anybody. To-morrow, if I am permitted to do so, I want to take up the question of delegated power and compare it with three decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the act for Hawaii and the three acts of the Eighth Congress in the third volume of the Statutes at Large, and to show that in that respect the Congress of the United States has no constitutional right to abdicate its powers in favor of anybody—the President or anybody else—and that this bill is only an abdication of that power.

Then I propose to take up the other wing of this question which has been thrust upon us at a time and in a way that are extremely unusual, to say the least, and that is the amendment which anticipates the disposal of Cuba—a question big enough to engage the Senate, if we had the liberty of speech upon it and were not compelled to smother our remarks in order to pass a bill of appropriations for the Army of the United States, seriously and soberly and at the best of its bent for at least a month.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask my colleague to yield to me in order to make a motion.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. Before the Senator from Alabama makes his motion, will he permit me to make a motion?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

KATHARINE J. GILMAN.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill (S. 5912) granting an increase of pension to Katharine J. Gilman was ordered to a third reading and passed, a similar bill having passed both Houses.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. 1293) for the relief of Francisco V. De Coster;

A bill (S. 3481) to permit certain burials of the dead in the lands of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 6050) to create the eastern division of the northern Federal judicial district of Georgia, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (S. R. 157) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to remove from the files of the Department of the Interior certain letters to be donated to the State of Iowa; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 159) extending the time within which certain street railroads within the District of Columbia may be constructed.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13705) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; recedes from its amendment numbered 88; further insists upon its amendments numbered 3, 7, 8, 9, 10, 23, 25, 26, 39, 40, 42, 60, 61, 65, 67, 79, 80, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, and 89; agrees to a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. CUMMINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to correct an error in the enrollment of the bill (S. 1203) granting an increase of pension to Lewis S. Horsey.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance, for trial and service, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEMENWAY, Mr. PUGH, and Mr. MCRAE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that during the remainder of the present session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, be suspended, and that the same may be written by hand; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 5,000 copies of the Fourth Report on the Agricultural Investigations in Alaska, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals for the calendar year 1899, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 6,000 copies of the Report on the Work and Expenditures of the Agricultural Experiment Stations for the Year ended June 30, 1900, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 5,000 copies of House Document No. 171, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled Agricultural Resources and Capabilities of Porto Rico, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 5912) granting an increase of pension to Katharine J. Gilman.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 879) for the relief of Levi Stoltz;

AGREEMENT WITH MUSCOGEE OR CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. THURSTON. I present a conference report and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD. I do not care to call it up for action to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska submits a conference report, which he asks may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11821) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate's first amendment on page 8, line 20, of the bill;

Also from the Senate's second amendment on page 8, line 20, of the bill;

Also from Senate amendment on pages 9 and 10 of the bill, striking out all of paragraph 11;

Also from Senate amendment on page 10 of the bill, striking out all of paragraph 12;

Also from Senate amendment on page 11, line 7, of the bill;

Also from Senate amendment on page 12, line 12, of the bill;

Also from Senate amendment on page 13, line 16, of the bill;

Also from Senate amendment on page 13, line 20, of the bill.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate's third amendment on page 8, line 20, and down to and including line 22, page 9, of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the Senate amendment insert: ", which said provisions are as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to survey, lay out, and plat into town lots, streets, alleys, and parks, the sites of such towns and villages in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Cherokee nations, as may at that time have a population of 200 or more, in such manner as will best subserve the then present needs and the reasonable prospective growth of such towns.

"The work of surveying, laying out, and platting such town sites shall be done by competent surveyors, who shall prepare five copies of the plat of each town site which, when the survey is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be filed as follows: One in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, one with the principal chief of the nation, one with the clerk of the court within the territorial jurisdiction of which the town is located, one with the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, and one with the town authorities, if there be such. Where in his judgment the best interests of the public service require, the Secretary of the Interior may secure the surveying, laying out, and platting of town sites in any of said nations by contract.

"Hereafter the work of the respective town-site commissions provided for in the agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes ratified in section 29 of the act of June 28, 1898, entitled 'An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,' shall begin as to any town site immediately upon the approval of the survey by the Secretary of the Interior and not before.

"The Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion appoint a town-site commission consisting of three members for each of the Creek and Cherokee nations, at least one of whom shall be a citizen of the tribe and shall be appointed upon the nomination of the principal chief of the tribe. Each commission, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall appraise and sell for the benefit of the tribe the town lots in the nation for which it is appointed, acting in conformity with the provisions of any then existing act of Congress or agreement with the tribe approved by Congress. The agreement of any two members of the commission as to the true value of any lot shall constitute a determination thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and if no two members are able to agree the matter shall be determined by such Secretary.

"Where in his judgment the public interests will be thereby subserved, the Secretary of the Interior may appoint in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, or Cherokee Nation a separate town-site commission for any town, in which event as to that town such local commission may exercise the same authority and perform the same duties which would otherwise devolve upon the commission for that nation. Every such local commission shall be appointed in the manner provided in the act approved June 28, 1898, entitled 'An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory.'

"The Secretary of the Interior, where in his judgment the public interests will be thereby subserved, may permit the authorities of any town in any of said nations, at the expense of the town, to survey, lay out, and plat the site thereof, subject to his supervision and approval, as in other instances.

"As soon as the plat of any town site is approved, the proper commission shall, with all reasonable dispatch and within a limited time, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, proceed to make the appraisement of the lots and improvements, if any, thereon, and after the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, shall, under the supervision of such Secretary, proceed to the disposition and sale of the lots in conformity with any then existing act of Congress or agreement with the tribe approved by Congress, and if the proper commission shall not complete such appraisement and sale within the time limited by the Secretary of the Interior, they shall receive no pay for such additional time as may be taken by them, unless the Secretary of the Interior for good cause shown shall expressly direct otherwise.

"The Secretary of the Interior may, for good cause, remove any member of any town-site commission, tribal or local, in any of said nations, and may fill the vacancy thereby made or any vacancy otherwise occurring in like manner as the place was originally filled.

"It shall not be required that the town-site limits established in the course of the platting and disposing of town lots, and the corporate limits of the town, if incorporated, shall be identical or coextensive, but such town-site limits and corporate limits shall be so established as to best subserve the then present needs and the reasonable prospective growth of the town, as the same shall appear at the times when such limits are respectively established: Provided further, That the exterior limits of all town sites shall be designated and fixed at the earliest practicable time under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"Upon the recommendation of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized at any time before allotment to set aside and reserve from allotment any lands in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, or Cherokee nations, not exceeding 160 acres in any one tract, at such stations as are or shall be established in conformity with law on the line of any railroad which shall be constructed or be in process of construction in or through either of said nations prior to the allotment of the lands therein, and this irrespective of the population of such town site at the time. Such town sites shall be surveyed, laid out, and platted, and the lands therein disposed of for the benefit of the tribe in the manner herein prescribed for other town sites: Provided further, That whenever any tract of land shall be set aside as herein provided which is occupied by a member of the tribe, such occupant shall be fully compensated for his improvements thereon under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior may, whenever the chief executive or principal chief of said nation fails or refuses to appoint a town-site commissioner for any town or to fill any vacancy caused by the neglect or refusal of the town-site commissioner appointed by the chief executive or principal chief of said nation to qualify or act, in his discretion, appoint a commissioner to fill the vacancy thus created."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate on pages 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, striking out all of paragraph 50 of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 7, line 19, strike out the words "1st day of July, 1900," and insert in lieu thereof "ratification of this agreement."

Also on page 20, line 22, strike out the words "1st day of July, 1900," and insert "ratification of this agreement."

And the Senate agree to the same.

ENGROSSING OF BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That during the remainder of the present session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, may be suspended and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the concurrent resolution may be adopted at this time.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHOUP. I hope the Senator from Alabama will withhold that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. PETTUS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I believe he is not in the Chamber. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded,

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who, I think, has been absent during the evening, and I will therefore withhold my vote. I would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that we transfer our pairs, so that both of us may vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree. I vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. I vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. I observe that he has not voted. I will transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. QUAY], so that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] can vote, if he chooses, and my vote can stand.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not care to vote.

Mr. PENROSE. I desired to have the arrangement made so that my vote can stand. I voted not observing that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] had not voted.

Mr. TURLEY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BATE] is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE].

Mr. HEITFELD (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed he has not.

Mr. HEITFELD. I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. BURROWS I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Allen,	Butler,	Turley,	Turner.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has charge of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He was here a few moments ago. That is the reason why the Chair laid the action of the House of Representatives before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PERKINS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TILLMAN were appointed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senators on the other side of this Chamber for their zeal in support of their party measures. It is a good thing to be a party man and stand by the party organization, and it is the only thing that the Republicans can do. There is not on the other side of the Chamber, I think, a gentleman who can mark out and define the exact ground upon which this bill proceeds, even the Senator who is in charge of it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to correct what he said to this extent, that the only thing about which the party on this side of the Chamber is not divided is their great desire to hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I am delighted that the Senator from Massachusetts is able to be in his seat, because I am never so encouraged as when I have the honor of attracting his attention in any way whatever. I had not observed the presence of the Senator from Massachusetts, or otherwise I would not have made my remark so general as I did in respect of the binding effect of party ties upon gentlemen to keep them here at late hours and to animate them with a zeal which is rather unusual, and has been so for months and months in the business of the Senate.

I now see that there is a determination to pass this bill, it makes no difference in what shape it may get, and that any shape that is sought to be given it on the other side of the Chamber will be that in which it will be passed by the Senate. I suppose that the arrangements are all necessarily made and prepared beforehand for the concurrence of the House under the cloture which obtains in that unfortunate body, which has been referred to very often as being no longer a deliberative body, and that this wonderfully important measure, affecting the only unsettled question to which the Government is related, so far as I know, will be dragooned through both Houses and will become the law of the land, till after while the Supreme Court of the United States can have a chance to pass upon its very peculiar, abnormal, and, as I conceive, desperately wrong principles and line of action.

I am not here, Mr. President, to hear myself talk or to compel Senators to sit by and listen to me talk. I am not here for the purpose of trying to delay the public business, and I think I have not said a word in the debate so far that is in the slightest degree irrelevant to the question. A man can scarcely say anything about this question or these questions which would be irrelevant if it relates at all to the public policy of the Government of the United States, which is, in my judgment, placed in a most perilous condition by this proposed act, so entirely unnecessary.

No one on this side of the Chamber has made any criticism upon the action of the Government of the United States in the Philippines. Some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have criticised the action of the Government as a Government in its dealing with this question, but I think the Senators on this side have not felt at liberty to criticise Mr. McKinley or the Secretary of War, Mr. Root, or Judge Taft or any member of his commission or General MacArthur for the method of administration with which they have conducted the government of the Philippine Islands, under great embarrassment with very remarkable success.

I am not in the habit, Mr. President, of giving advice, especially to my political opponents. I do not intrude my opinions upon them at all. But I have taken occasion with some of my personal friends to say, in respect to this measure, that I thought it was the most unfortunate demonstration that had ever been made at the most unfortunate people, not for the Government alone, but for the welfare of the party of great men who are united together and now have the helm in their hands and are controlling the ship of state in all of its courses.

I think that the Republican party of the United States, represented in the Presidential chair, and in the Senate and the House by a majority at this moment of time, is venturing upon the assertion of policies which are not justified by anything that I know or anything that they know. There has not yet been printed a portion, and a very important portion, of the report of the Taft Commission which came to us to-day after this subject had commenced to be investigated, and the Senator in charge of this bill, I dare say, does not know what is in that report.

He has never read it. I had never heard of it until it came into the Senate. I did not suppose that there were some ten or twelve legislative measures of the Taft Commission that had not as yet reached the President of the United States so as to be laid before the Senate. We are, in the midst of darkness and ignorance, legislating upon a question of which we have official information, but have not as yet had access to it so as even to hear it read.

Now, that argues a stress of political or some other kind of necessity that is at least very puzzling to me. I wish to make no accusation about it, to draw any inference, to indulge any innuendo about it; but I am astonished that these wise and venerable Senators, whom I have had the honor of knowing now for a quarter of a century, should at the heels of this Congress take up a question of this vast, indescribable importance and proceed by party cohesion and by party rule and party drill to pass upon it and force it upon Senators on this side of the Chamber or on the other side of the Chamber in ignorance of what we are doing.

We are ignorant of what we are doing, and when that remark can be honestly and justly made and proved by the record by a Senator in his place on this floor I am satisfied, Mr. President, that it is the first time in the history of this great body that it could be done. We are ignorant of what we are doing, and no man can deny it. For the purpose of wearing out an old man who is trying to serve his country, in the midnight hour, after days and weeks have been wasted in the Senate in idleness, here comes at this late hour, after an exhausting day's labor, beginning at 11 o'clock, the summons that I shall proceed until I leave the floor; and, Mr. President, I would rather leave it a dead man than to leave it a coward. I can not spend the balance of my days in a better way.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir. I will not allow anybody to interrupt me.

Mr. SPOONER. I only wanted to ask the Senator if he preferred to go on to-morrow; that is all.

Mr. MORGAN. I have indicated sufficiently about that, and I do not choose to be interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PENROSE in the chair). The Senator from Alabama declines to be interrupted.

Mr. SPOONER. Excuse me.

Mr. MORGAN. I have been through many scenes in this Chamber in the last twenty-four years and I do not think any Senator on the other side of this Chamber who has known me during that long period of time can impute to me a purpose to stop the wheels of Government or a purpose to shut off a man from an honest debate of a question in which he is most profoundly concerned. It may be it is folly to be so, but in this case, Mr. President, I feel that I should abandon the plainest duty that has ever presented itself to me for my consideration and performance if I skulked out of this debate because of my age or because of the lateness of the hour.

The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are still entitled to some respect in this body, and we can only dishonor ourselves by stopping our ears to the plain, palpable, unquestionable decisions upon propositions of constitutional law for the purpose of reaching a result that those decisions absolutely bar.

I had reached, in the course of my remarks, the proposition that the Congress of the United States has no right, or power, or authority to delegate any of the powers that have been delegated to it. It is mere hornbook learning, which in the more temperate times of our lives nobody disputes, that the powers of the Congress of the United States are all of them delegated. There was no predecessor of government or of authority of any kind from which the Congress of the United States inherited any power.

The framers of the Constitution expressly cut off the idea that any of the powers of Congress were inherited from any country or government, from Great Britain or from the previous government of the confederation, or that the powers of Congress as defined in the Constitution were to be construed by reference to any other government that had ever existed as a precedent either for the line of its action or for the construction of its powers. These are all delegated powers that are in the Constitution, and unless the power is found there to do something Congress can not do it.

General grants of power, delegations of power from the people, are made in the Constitution, and under those general delegations there are inferential propositions which grow out of them and are necessary to the support of the general proposition. But when you come to the root of the matter the Constitution of the United States is one exclusively of delegated powers, and unless you can find in that Constitution some authority for doing what you wish to do your oath binds you, in my judgment, not to do it. It binds me, at all events, and that is what I am doing now. I am acting in obedience to my oath in trying to convince this body that there is a proposition in this amendment that we have got no right under the Constitution to enact.

This matter has been under consideration by the Supreme Court in so many cases that it would be a task of supererogation to undertake to bring them altogether to the attention of the Senate, and I will read from only a few of the leading ones. I wish to refer to the judicial powers that are conferred here. I have already shown from the decision of the Supreme Court that a state of war does not exist in the Philippines, and you can not admit that it does exist there without destroying your cause and your measure.

The war which exists in the Philippines in the nature of hostilities is only an insurrection, and it is an insurrection because we are the owners of that country, the sovereigns of it. Our power is over it, and that power is disputed by a faction which is, I am happy to say, rapidly passing out of existence. That is not a war, and a state of war does not exist there. So there is no excuse or reason for the employment of any civil power, judicial or otherwise, for the purpose of helping out or supporting a state of war or a state of hostilities incident to a state of war.

Then the question arises whether in the situation we are in in the Philippines the President of the United States has the right under the Constitution of the United States to establish courts of judicature—courts whose jurisdiction extends to all questions of life, liberty, and property. The President of the United States as the representative or the successor to the Spanish sovereignty there has not the right to establish those courts now.

They are already established; and the most he can do, and what he has the right to do and ought to do, is to avail himself of the power of the courts there, to fill them up with competent judges, if it is necessary to do so, to correct the procedure and the practice, if that is necessary and proper, and to see to the adjudication of the rights of the people under the code of laws that exists in the Philippines, which is the Spanish laws so far as they are not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or the general acts of Congress that prevail in respect of Territorial government. That is the legal situation in the Philippines.

> All captures jure belli are for the benefit of the sovereign under whose authority they are made; and the validity of the seizure and the question of prize or no prize can be determined in his own courts only, upon which he has conferred jurisdiction to try the question. And under the Constitution of the United States the judicial power of the General Government is vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress shall from time to time ordain and establish. Every court of the United States, therefore, must derive its jurisdiction and judicial authority from the Constitution or the laws of the United States. And neither the President nor any military officer can establish a court in a conquered country and authorize it to decide upon the rights of the United States or of individuals in prize cases, nor to administer the laws of nations.
> The courts, established or sanctioned in Mexico during the war by the commanders of the American forces, were nothing more than the agents of the military power, to assist it in preserving order in the conquered territory and to protect the inhabitants in their persons and property while it was occupied by the American arms. They were subject to the military power, and their decisions under its control, whenever the commanding officers thought proper to interfere. They were not courts of the United States, and had no right to adjudicate upon a question of prize or no prize. And the sentence of condemnation in the court at Monterey is a nullity, and can have no effect upon the rights of any party.

The President of the United States, while war was flagrant with Mexico, appointed a chaplain of the Army as a judge in prize causes, and he went on in California after the war had ceased and made an adjudication to condemn a prize. That adjudication was questioned collaterally in a subsequent lawsuit in the Federal courts of the United States, and the Supreme Court said that the action of the President was a nullity; that while it was valid as an assistant to the arm of military power at and during the time war was flagrant in Mexico and actually existing there, it was not continuing in authority and was not a part of the judicial establishment of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, we want to constitute a court of the United States in the Philippines. We will call it a court of high jurisdiction, either original or appellate, of the sort and character that we find in what we call Territorial governments here, or we will call it a United States court either with a limited term of commission for its judges, or we will call it a district court of the United States, or a circuit court of the United States, whose judges have an unlimited tenure during life.

In any one of these phases of the judicial establishment Congress, and Congress alone, can create that court. No Territorial legislature ever created a court of the United States. You can not delegate the power to a Territorial legislature to create a court of the United States within the meaning of that phrase in the Constitution. Congress only can do that, and it must do it directly. The jurisdiction of that court must be transferred under the Constitution to the court by an act of Congress, and it can not be conferred or transferred by an act of a legislature or by an act of a State government.

Congress, and only Congress, can do it. It is a power that can not be delegated. The Constitution itself requires that Congress shall create the court, not a Territorial legislature; and whoever undertakes to produce or rely upon or to enforce the jurisdiction of a court in any part of the United States, in the name of the United States, that does not receive its charter, its powers, through an act of Congress, from the Constitution, violates the Constitution of the United States, and his court is not worth a snap.

But this measure confers upon the President of the United States the right to establish a court. All the judicial power of the United States is transferred to the President through this measure, to be vested in courts to be created by him and not by Congress.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator give way to me a moment in this connection? I have an amendment which I do not know that I will press——

Mr. MORGAN. No; I do not give way to amendments now.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have it read and go into the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. I notice that as fast as these points are developed in this bill, after it has been projected and perfected by two of the best lawyers in this body and kept a year on this Calendar in the shape it is, and as these points are suggested Senators on the other side rise with amendments. I do not know when we shall get through with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. No; he will not.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I will hear that to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I have got more to think of now than I can possibly get along with without having new ideas suggested to me as to what might possibly happen to this bill. Let the Senator from Nevada come out and attack the bill as it deserves to be attacked instead of trying to apologize for it and to perfect it by time-serving amendments.

Mr. President, whoever will attend one of our executive sessions and mark the anxious scrutiny with which we watch the exercise of the President's power of appointment will probably understand the value which the Senate places upon the participation it has under the Constitution in that matter. In this measure no office is described except by the most general words that can be used. The nearest approximation that you can get to the description of an office in this act is that it is judicial or legislative or executive.

How many officers may be appointed nobody knows. What salaries they may receive nobody knows. From what treasury they are to be paid nobody knows. What the tenure of office is is entirely unknown. And yet we are creating them. We are here erecting a hotbed for the creation of judicial establishments which are not defined in any way in the world except that they are courts, that they are judicial establishments. Take the proposed act and read it through and ask yourself the question. What are the courts? What are their powers? Are they courts of the first instance? Are they nisi prius courts? Are they appellate tribunals or are they tribunals from which appeals can be taken? Does Congress concern itself to put any limitation at all upon these judicial establishments and the officers who are to fill them or their qualifications? Not the slightest.

In a spirit of generosity toward the President of the United States that marks this Senate as being willing to surrender every power that it possesses on the demand of party requirements, we go ahead and we empower the President to establish courts by vesting in him the whole judicial power in the Philippine Islands, to be given to such persons as he may choose in such measure and number as he may choose, with such jurisdiction as he may choose, their powers to be exercised under his direction according to the express provisions of this amendment.

I think, Mr. President, that any American who can call that a court in the American sense must have forgotten all that he ever knew or felt about the independence of the judiciary or about the necessity of having it free from the direction and the control of any superior authority. And in that particular our blindness is voluntary. It is not like that which has been forced upon us here by the withholding of papers or the nonproduction of papers such as were sent to us to-day.

We blindfold ourselves voluntarily and take this tremendous power to affect 10,000,000 of human beings. Whether they are citizens or whether they are not citizens of the United States, we bundle it up into a compact package and deliver it into the hands of the President and say to him, "Take this power and distribute it according to your own will and purposes, and let the men who exercise it understand that they exercise all of this power subject to your direction."

What provision is in the bill requiring or allowing the Senate of the United States to give its advice and consent to these appointments or to any other appointments, and who dares to violate the rights of the Senate of the United States by saying that great officers who have the control of all the material and important interests of mankind amongst 10,000,000 of population shall be appointed, confirmed, and commissioned by the President without the advice and consent of the Senate?

Do I offend you, Senators, at this late hour of the night, by calling your attention to this simple surrender on your part of the most important constitutional functions that you have—functions in which neither the House of Representatives nor any other department of the Government can participate, and which are conferred by the express terms of the Constitution of the United States?

You are not to be notified of these appointments; you are not to be informed under this act of the constituent elements of the court or the powers, whether appellate or original, that they are to exercise; you are to have no concern whatever, either as legislators or as a part of the executive power, on the question of confirmation in respect of this exercise of delegated power to the President of the United States. If, after the weary hours of this day's work, you can go home and put your head upon your pillows and sleep with a consciousness of innocence in respect of the Constitution of the United States, I do not envy you your hardihood.

In all of these functions of government that are conferred in this way upon different people we hear nothing at all about the advice and consent of the Senate. Even the civil governor of the Philippines is to be chosen and designated and confirmed by the President of the United States without the advice and consent of the Senate, and so on down. Why, the most insignificant of the Territories we have in the country is not abandoned to a fate like that.

Those governments that have not any representation that can voice their wishes in either House are not neglected and abandoned under the Constitution of the United States by the Senate in this untimely and unseemly way, and I challenge the Senate of the United States that it stultifies itself when it thus marches off from its constitutional duty and abdicates its constitutional powers.

All this and much more was attempted to be done under the authority of an act of Congress in the Eighth Congress, which was unfortunate enough to receive the signature of Thomas Jefferson, and if this had been signed by such a man as I could name amongst our Presidential incumbents of past times, it would be reckoned among the most defensible of all the public exhibitions that were ever made by a President of the United States, provided it is subject to the construction that is put upon it by the Senator from Wisconsin. But it is not. That is a construction which is entirely without warrant, entirely outside the record, and it would do infinite injustice to Mr. Jefferson, to his great fame and name, which is great not only in this country but great throughout the world amongst political economists.

I must enter here into a definition to which I will invite your attention by asking you a question. Is there no difference between an act of Congress that expires at a certain time by its own limitation and becomes functus officio and an act of Congress that requires another act of Congress to repeal and get rid of it? Can you see no difference between those methods of legislation?

Where an act of Congress is passed during a session of Congress to expire with that session, or upon some event occurring before that session has passed out under the laws of the land, it has no sort of relevance as a precedent or a right rule of construction to an act of Congress signed by the President of the United States which can not be afterwards removed except by repeal.

If there should be a grant of power, for instance, or a delegation of power in an act which contains the terms of its own destruction, which contains the measure of its own life, it would necessarily follow that that delegation—if you call it a delegation—was for some temporary purpose and was not to stand as a final surrender of the power delegated into the hands of the agent selected. That was the nature of the act which was signed by Thomas Jefferson on the 31st day of October, 1803:

That until the expiration of the present session of Congress—

When that act would die—

unless provision for the temporary government of the said territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers—of the existing government.

Not granted by the President to any officer, but—all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner, as the President of the United States shall direct, for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, in a moment. If the Senator wants to go to sleep, I am willing to yield.

Mr. DANIEL. I would very much prefer to listen to the Senator, of course.

Mr. MORGAN. The man who wants to counterfeit a silver dollar is very apt to use the imprimatur or the stamp that is on that dollar and imitate it just as closely as he possibly can; and without the fraudulent purpose of counterfeiting the authors of this bill have given it as much of the appearance of the act of 1803 as possible to make it go current, and they have nothing in the world on which to defend the bill they now have but a partial resemblance—not a full resemblance, but a partial resemblance—to the act of 1803, under different circumstances and different conditions for different purposes, containing what this bill does not contain—the lapse of the power of attorney of the party to whom the authority is delegated at the expiration of that session of Congress.

Mr. President, the Senate of the United States has often authorized men, committees and otherwise, to act in its name pending a session of Congress, to do certain things that the Senate might as well have done by a joint resolution or a concurrent resolution. They have delegated powers to these gentlemen to go and act for the Senate, not to extend into the vacation of Congress at all.

What authority has an attorney to whom such power is delegated to act for the Senate? It is the power of the Senate, not power delegated to him to be exercised at his discretion when no Senate is present, but it is the power of the Senate, and the Senate continually supplies him with authority, and he is continually under its control, and that power can be withdrawn at any moment. It does not create an office. You can not refer to a word or a line in this proposed amendment to the Army appropriation bill that creates an office.

What is an office created by law? It is something that is recognized in the Constitution of the United States; it is a certain representation of official authority committed to somebody, some individual or individuals, who are confined to what is therein permitted in their representation of the Government of the United States. It is something to which a man may be appointed as soon as the bill is signed by the President of the United States, with a full knowledge of what his powers are, a full knowledge of his official duties and responsibilities, and of his pay.

I think it would be rather a laughable incident if someone should call upon the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who has so long conducted the financial affairs and appropriations of this Senate, and ask him to devise an appropriation of a sum of money to pay some officer under this law. How would that Senator go about it? This bill contains no appropriation; it does not even designate the source from which the appropriation is to be made; it creates no office; it defines the limits of no office; it does not designate the number of offices that are to be created, legislative, executive, or judicial; and if the Senator from Iowa were called upon to make an appropriation to carry this act into effect out of the Treasury of the United States, or out of the treasury of the Philippine Islands, he would come to a dead standstill, and could not move one hair's breadth.

It is not until after this act has been signed and the President has created the office, has measured its rights, duties, and responsibilities, its tenure, and the amount of money that is to be paid under it, that anybody can make an appropriation for it or could ever get a dollar out of any treasury under the control of the United States Government.

Under such circumstances am I wrong in saying that if this power is capable of being delegated at all it can not be delegated in this general and universal way? The act is void on its face, unless it is true that we can concenter and combine all the powers that belong to Congress in one act, confer them upon one man, and give to him the discretionary right to distribute them amongst the men he shall select to assist him in performing his functions of government under that law. I am astounded, Mr. President, that old legislators and Senators can sit here and take this kind of stuff as lawful legislation.

The act of 1803 applied to a government then existing. Does this act apply to a government now existing? It is to a government to be hereafter established. It is not a government existing in the Philippines; it is one that the President has the power to create under this act—legislative, executive, and judicial, going through the whole business. He may recognize the government that is there as a fit part of the machinery of carrying out his intentions and purposes, which nobody has a right to question once you give him the authority; but there is no government there to which this money is made applicable by this act.

Possibly if this act had said the government of the Philippines, now headed by Judge Taft and the officers created by him or tolerated as coming over from the Spanish Government, it might be possible that we could delegate to the President the power to fill up those offices by appointment; and it would be possible, no doubt, if the right had been reserved under the Constitution that the Senate of the United States should give its advice and consent; but without that, it is not possible. But under the act of 1803 there was a government which had officers.

All the military, civil, and judicial powers, exercised—

Legislative powers are not mentioned in that act at all, because they had a governor there who had been appointed. That is the reason of it. Governor Claiborne was there then, and, as Mr. Jefferson said in his message, which was read by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to-day, Governor Claiborne was there in possession of the gubernatorial office; and hence it is omitted from that act—

All the military, civil, and judicial powers, exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same, shall be vested in such person and persons—

Mere appointments to offices already existing, the duties of which were then being exercised by the officers of the existing government, which made that act nothing more nor less than the appointment to fill these offices by the President of the United States.

and shall be exercised in such manner—

As has always been the case, prescribing the duties and making the regulations—as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining, etc.

You pass an internal-revenue act and you enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make regulation for the enforcement of that law, and prescribe the manner in which the law shall be enforced by the subordinates of his department. Our statutes, our rules, our decisions of the Supreme Court give to those regulations the force and effect of law. The statute prescribes it. There was the case in this act, which we have perceived from that time to this, in enabling the head of a Department to adopt regulations for the execution of the law, where it was impossible at the time of its enactment to foretell all of the exigencies that might arise, and the different circumstances to which different regulations ought to apply, for the sake of having the law well and properly administered. That is all there is in it.

Now, what authority has a lawyer to borrow from that act this universal proposition to create a government and to create the offices and fill them? Why was that made a temporary arrangement to terminate at the end of that Congress? It was because the offices themselves were to be temporary, the appointments were to be temporary, and those holding them were not officers within the meaning of the Constitution, but mere employees. Hence it was not necessary to bring them before the Senate for confirmation.

In that same Congress a law was passed organizing two Territorial governments out of the great territory of Louisiana, the government of the Territory of Orleans and the Territory of Louisiana. Before that session expired Congress did that, and provided officers for that Territorial government in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, who were to pass through the ordeal of confirmation by the Senate. These temporary employees, these mere clerks, who filled these official positions for the occasion only, passed out, and a government was instituted in that same Congress—a regular formal government of the two Territories into which that area of country was divided.

In the concluding part of the act organizing that Territorial government there was this provision, which evidently is one of convenience:

The act passed on the 31st day of October, 1803, entitled: "An act to enable the President of the United States to take possession of the territories ceded by France to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 30th of April last, and for the temporary government thereof, shall continue in force—

The act shall continue in force—until the 1st day of October next—

This was March 26, 1804—

anything therein to the contrary notwithstanding, on which said 1st day of October this act shall commence—

The act organizing the Territory—

shall commence, and have full force, and shall continue in force for and during the term of one year, and to the end of the next session of Congress which may happen thereafter.

Again planting the seeds of death in the act and putting a period to its existence without the necessity of a repeal, a mere temporary expedient, not intended to operate as a law for that country, regulating the rights of officers and the powers of officers and their duties, and giving to the Senate the right of confirmation.

That is the whole story of this case, and it is a plain story and an undeniable one, that these clerks, who were employed by the President for the purpose of executing these powers, were as much under the direction of Congress all that time as the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is under the direction of this body.

I should like to know what parallel in law there is between that act and one that gives unlimited power to the President of the United States without a definition of the term of its extension, not in favor of any existing government, but to create one; not defining the officers of an existing government or any other officers, but permitting the President to create and define officers and their powers.

As I have so often observed, what parallel is there between the two cases, and how can a majority of this body, with its heart set upon reaping the harvest of this act for its friends, appeal to that poor, meager precedent for justification? When I am dead and gone, Mr. President and gentlemen, these words I am speaking to you now will be quoted, and you who live will be ashamed that you ever abandoned your constitutional rights and powers at the demand of any man, President or what not.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to a motion to adjourn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator feels any inconvenience; yes.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no purpose on this side of the Chamber to force the Senator from Alabama to conclude his remarks to-night, although there is business that should be taken up that ought to be disposed of. I am prepared to make a motion to adjourn if it be agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not disagreeable to me. If the Senator desires to make a motion to adjourn, that is all right, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 26, 1901, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 25, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock . Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEWIS S. HORSEY.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 23, 1901.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills is hereby authorized to correct the enrollment of the bill (S. 1203) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis S. Horsey" by striking out the words "Company K, Nineteenth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Company D, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry."

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary
By HENRY M. ROSE, Chief Clerk.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAVACA BAY, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13951) authorizing Calhoun County, State of Texas, to construct and maintain a free bridge across Lavaca Bay, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special committee to investigate the employees of this House may sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the special committee making investigation of the employees of the House may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House. Without objection, this order will be made.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13705) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments not agreed to, and asked a further conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12904) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments not agreed to, and asked a further conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. THURSTON, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13801) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. BATE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4718) to regulate the collection and disbursement of moneys arising from leases made by the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. BUTLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13850) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4176. An act to preserve the place of burial of Gen. Daniel Morgan;

S. 5935. An act to authorize the Montgomery and Autauga Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.;

S. Res. 159. Joint resolution extending the time within which certain street railroads in the District of Columbia may be constructed.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 112.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, be authorized to make loan of such tents or other quartermaster's stores to the National Guard of the several States attending the coming inauguration of the President as may be necessary for their comfort during their visit to Washington: Provided, That he shall take the receipt of the adjutant-general of the State borrowing such stores, and hold the same as a charge against the State's quota until the return of such tents or stores in good order.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5912) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Katharine J. Gilman."

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. RICHARD A. WISE, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tributes be paid to his memory.

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM D. DALY, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tributes may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Secretary to the family of the deceased; and that as a further mark of respect the Senate will, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, stand adjourned.

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN H. HOFFECKER, late a Representative from the State of Delaware.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tributes be paid to his memory.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration of the House the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13705) making appropriations for the naval service.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if this is a conference report?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia calls up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. DAYTON. Inasmuch, Mr. Speaker, as the conference report has been read and is a part of the Senate proceedings of Saturday in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement only may be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and that the statement only be read. Without objection that will be done.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the the gentleman from West Virginia a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly, I yield for a question.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to know whether the statement contains all the points of disagreement between the conferees?

Mr. DAYTON. I will say to the gentleman that the statement is full and complete, in my judgment, as to every amendment agreed to, disagreed to, and concurred in.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to ask whether unanimous consent will preclude the expression of a desire of any member for a separate vote on any single proposition?

The SPEAKER. The reading of the conference report will not affect that one way or the other. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[For the report see Senate proceedings of Saturday, February 23.]

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives make the following statement of the resolution of the first conference with the managers on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to H. R. 13705, making appropriations for the naval establishment.

The Senate receded from its amendments, as follows:

From No. 5, providing for pay for the expenses of labor boards at naval yards and naval stations.

From Nos. 17, 27, 30, 54, 55, 59, 70, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, and 83, the object of which was to change the name of the League Island Navy-Yard.

From Nos. 28, 31, 33, 35, and 36, providing masters of tugs at a salary of $1,200 at the navy-yards of Portsmouth, N. H., Washington, D. C., Pensacola, Fla., Key West, Fla., and Mare Island, Cal.

From Nos. 29, 32, 34, 37, 38, and 53, involving clerical computations.

From No. 43, requiring further legislation to expend money heretofore appropriated for the fire-protection system at Portsmouth, N. H.

From Nos. 50, 51, and 52, appropriating $150,000 instead of $100,000 for building No. 19 at the navy-yard, New York.

The House receded and concurred in Senate amendments as follows:

In No. 1, giving commutation of quarters to boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, warrant machinists, pharmacists, and mates.

In No. 6, giving the Secretary of the Navy discretion to pay actual expenses instead of mileage to officers traveling repeatedly between two or more places.

In No. 11, increasing the appropriation in the Bureau of Navigation for transportation, recruiting, and contingent expenses from $100,000 to $180,000.

In No. 12, providing for outfits for naval-hospital apprentices.

In No. 13, involving a clerical computation.

In No. 14, reimbursing the "appropriation for the naval training station at California, 1901," the cost of securing a supply of fresh water from Oakland, Cal.

In No. 15, providing for certain lectures in the Naval War College at Newport, R. I.

In No. 16, involving a verbal repetition of language.

In Nos. 20, 21, 22, and 23, involving a division of the House paragraph and appropriation under the head of "Equipment of vessels" into two paragraphs and appropriations, under the heads of "Coal and transportation" and "Equipment of vessels."

In Nos. 44, 45, and 46, involving verbal errors.

In Nos. 47 and 48, changing the House language from "Steel doors for naval prison" to "Extension of naval prison," and increasing the appropriation therefor $25,000.

In No. 49, involving clerical computation.

In Nos. 56, 57, and 58, providing for the purchase of land at Algiers Naval Station, $100,000, and authorizing condemnation proceedings to secure same.

In No. 62, providing for a survey of the waters of the island of Porto Rico to ascertain the advisability of establishing a naval station there, but making no appropriation.

In No. 63, providing for the establishing and marking of the boundary line of the Government's property on Blythe Island, Georgia, lay out a rifle range on same and construct boat landing, appropriating $2,000.

In No. 64, making the appropriation for the naval torpedo station at Newport, R. I., immediately available.

In No. 66, providing for payment of the land lying within the boundary circle as established by the joint resolution of August 1, 1894, and authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to sell at such time and in such manner as may be most advantageous, but at a price not less than that fixed in 1894 by the board of appraisers, such lands of the Naval Observatory Reservation as are situated without the limits of said circle.

In Nos. 68 and 69, providing for the care and maintenance and treatment of the insane of the Navy and Marine Corps on the Pacific coast.

In Nos. 77 and 78, providing for temporary quarters and recitation rooms for the cadets at Annapolis, pending the rehabilitation of the Naval Academy buildings there.

In No. 87, reducing the enlistment period of the Marine Corps from five to four years, to correspond with the term of enlistment in the Navy.

In No. 90, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to remit certain time penalties to the Iowa Iron Works, of Dubuque, Iowa, incurred in the construction of the torpedo boat Ericsson.

In No. 91, authorizing the President to reclassify the vessels of the Navy and formulate appropriate rules governing the assignment thereof.

The House recedes and concurs in amendment numbered 2 with an amendment which provides that $50,000 is made immediately available, under the head of "Pay of the Navy," for pay of additional men and warrant machinists, and further giving to officers detailed for shore duty in Alaska, the Philippine Islands, Guam, and elsewhere beyond continental limits of the United States the pay for "shore duty beyond seas."

The House recedes and concurs in Senate amendment numbered 4 with an amendment whereby officers of the Navy and Marine Corps when advanced in rank for service rendered during the war with Spain under sections 1506 and 1605 of the Revised Statutes shall be carried as additional numbers in each grade to which they may be promoted, and shall not in consequence of such advancement interfere with the regular promotion of officers otherwise entitled to promotion, but preventing any promotion made vacant by promotion, retirement, death, resignation, or dismissal of any officers so carried as an additional number of his grade by reason of such advancement.

The House recedes and concurs in Senate amendment No. 18 with an amendment the effect of which is to restore the House paragraph appropriating, under the head of "Civil establishment, Bureau of Ordnance," for the navy-yard at Washington, D. C., with the addition of one clerk at $1,200, which was accidentally omitted when the House considered the bill.

The House recedes and concurs in Senate amendment No. 19 with an amendment which simply corrects the total amount appropriated under the head of "Civil establishment, Bureau of Ordnance," made necessary by the addition of said clerk.

The House recedes and concurs in Senate amendment No. 41 with an amendment the effect of which is to give the Secretary of the Navy authority to prepare specifications and receive bids for the improvement of channel approaching the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., and appropriating $1,000 for the expense thereof.

The House recedes and concurs in Senate amendment No. 71 with an amendment whereby the total appropriation of $250,000 for a naval station at Cavite, or other place in the Philippine Islands, is stricken out and omitted, and there is given to the Secretary of the Navy authority to have an examination and report made to Congress of the waters of the Philippine Islands as to the advisability of establishing a naval station there.

The conferees have been unable to agree upon Senate amendment No. 3, providing for additional pay for clerks at certain navy-yards.

Upon Nos. 7 and 8, touching the emergency fund.

Upon No. 9, providing an inspector of naval accounts.

Upon No. 10, providing for the detailing of assistant chiefs of bureaus.

Upon No. 24, increasing the appropriation for depots of coal.

Upon No. 25, providing for the acquisition of land for coaling station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

Upon No. 26, providing for the maintenance of colliers.

Upon No. 39, striking out the appropriation for fire protection system and inserting an appropriation for office building for construction and repair for the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H.

Upon No. 40, appropriating for office building for steam engineering at Portsmouth, N. H.

Upon No. 42, providing for the total amount to be appropriated for the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H.

Upon No. 60, providing for dry dock at Charleston, S. C., and for transfer of unexpended appropriations to Port Royal to said navy-yard at Charleston, S. C.

Upon No. 61, fixing the total amount to be appropriated under the head of "Public works."

Upon No. 65, increasing the appropriation for grounds and roads at the Naval Observatory.

Upon No. 67, providing for a board of visitors at the Naval Observatory, and that the superintendent of said observatory shall be hereafter a line officer.

Upon No. 79, striking out the House provision for the commissioning of cadets who have completed the four-year course at Annapolis.

Upon No. 80, authorizing the President to appoint to the grade of ensign certain boatswains, gunners, and warrant machinists.

Upon No. 81, authorizing the President to appoint to the Naval Academy certain acting cadets temporarily appointed during the war with Spain.

Upon No. 82, authorizing the President to appoint 10 additional cadets to the Academy.

Upon Nos. 84 and 85, providing for marine barracks and officers' quarters for the Marine Corps at Annapolis.

Upon No. 86, fixing the total amount to be appropriated to the Marine Corps.

Upon No. 88, touching the naval programme for the increase of the Navy.

Upon No. 89, authorizing the construction by contract of 3 Holland submarine torpedo boats.

GEO. EDMUND FOSS,
ALSTON G. DAYTON,
AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. DAYTON. Before I yield, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement to the House. It is understood between the members of the Naval Committee that upon certain items embraced in this conference report there may be, if asked by them, so far as the managers in charge of the conference report here are concerned, a separate vote. I desire, therefore, to ask the Speaker a parliamentary question. Will a motion to adopt this conference report and further insist upon a disagreement, and a request for a further conference, if agreed to, preclude any gentleman from demanding a separate vote upon any of these amendments?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. DAYTON. I desire, then, to make the formal motion to adopt the conference report.

The SPEAKER. That question has been put.

Mr. HEPBURN rose.

Mr. DAYTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia and then to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. RIXEY. Perhaps I could have got the information later, but I want to know as to two or three points of difference. I was unable to follow the report of the committee of conference. I wish to know what was done in regard to amendment 9, as to the inspector of accounts?

Mr. DAYTON. There was a disagreement between the Senate and House conferees and so reported.

Mr. RIXEY. And as to amendment 10, for the assistant chiefs of bureaus?

Mr. DAYTON. The same thing—disagreement.

Mr. RIXEY. Amendment No. 26, for the $400,000 for colliers?

Mr. DAYTON. A disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. RIXEY. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not he concedes that that amendment is for practically a duplicate purpose, as the emergency fund provided for by the Naval Committee of the House?

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say, in answer to the gentleman's question, that the appropriation for colliers, as I understood it when the bill was considered by the House committee, was regarded as a part of the emergency fund. The House provided for an emergency fund of $500,000, with the idea and impression that these colliers would be paid for out of that fund. The Senate subsequently reduced it to $300,000 and placed these separate items in here providing for colliers at $400,000.

Mr. RIXEY. The gentleman from West Virginia and I agree that they are practically for the same purpose?

Mr. DAYTON. Practically for the same purpose, although not wholly, but the one includes the other.

Mr. RIXEY. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if the conferees disagree as to the increase in the Navy?

Mr. DAYTON. Entirely.

Mr. RIXEY. I desire to ask for a separate vote on that at the proper time.

Mr. DAYTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I understand the gentleman asks for a separate vote upon the increase of the Navy.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make that request later.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised as to what is embraced in the report. Is this a matter agreed to in the report or is it left to conference?

Mr. RIXEY. I desire a separate vote on amendment No. 88.

Mr. DAYTON. It is a matter of disagreement.

Mr. RIXEY. I have no objection to the adoption of the conference report, and will make my request afterwards.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Virginia wants a separate vote on this amendment now?

Mr. RIXEY. At the proper time, Mr. Speaker, I want a separate vote on amendment No. 88, and I shall submit a motion that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the report is adopted the Chair understands that will be left subject to disagreement.

Mr. RIXEY. Would the motion be in order now if the report is adopted?

The SPEAKER. If the report is adopted, if any gentleman wishes to move to instruct the conferees as to a matter left in conference, it will be in order.

Mr. RIXEY. I do not propose to leave it in conference. My idea is to have that done now.

Mr. DAYTON. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman if amendment No. 4 has been agreed to?

Mr. DAYTON. It has been agreed to practically by an amendment changing the language.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman briefly explain what that means, or I will ask him a question. I understand, under sections 1506 and 1605, it is competent for the President of the United States to advance an officer 30 grades. Now, take a captain who now stands as 25 on the list, and advance him 30 grades, would that authorize his being commissioned as a rear-admiral?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, I understand that this provides that all of these officers who are advanced are to be in addition to the number now authorized by law.

Mr. DAYTON. Not in addition, but to be carried as an additional number so long as they remain in that grade.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose there were 10 captains who should be advanced 30 numbers, bringing them up to rear-admirals, as I understand the gentleman to say they would be, do I understand from this amendment they would be commissioned as rear-admirals?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. In other words, instead of having 13 rear-admirals we would have 23?

Mr. DAYTON. They would have that grade; but after death or retirement nobody else could be promoted to it; and the Naval Register would show just why they occupied that position. Let me give you the reason for that. The House will very well remember that by the recommendation of the President and the confirmation of the Senate, the officers in Dewey's fleet were promoted certain numbers. These men were advanced over other officers. Take for example the captain of the Oregon. For his remarkable service in taking that vessel around the Horn on that 14,000-mile trip, for his gallant conduct in battle at Santiago, he stands two numbers lower than he did before that time, simply because of the fact that these other officers by these promotions have been put above him.

Now, the effect of this provision is simply, as I understand, that the officers who were thus promoted for gallant service in war shall be carried in their grade certain additional numbers until they either die or retire; but no other officer can be promoted to their grade in their stead or on account of their promotion.

The example which the gentleman has given—of officers going up to the rank of rear admiral—might be true theoretically; but practically it would be an impossibility, because not more than one or two would be advanced to the rank of rear-admiral, which would be held by reason of this promotion at the instance of the President as a separate rank or degree until their death or retirement, when no man would advance to their place, and the number would return to what it was before.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, whether or not the contingency would happen would depend entirely upon the President of the United States, and he would have the power to select the persons who would thus be promoted.

Mr. DAYTON. No; he would be restricted to those who had had war service.

Mr. HEPBURN. Of course; but within that limitation his discretion would be absolute.

Mr. DAYTON. The discretion of the President of the United States would be limited to the officers in the Spanish war and to the advance of 30 numbers.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then the only limitation would be the discretion of the President and the limitation to 30 numbers. In other words, the President might, if he saw fit, promote 30 captains to be rear admirals under this provision.

Mr. DAYTON. No; that would be an impossibility.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why an impossibility?

Mr. DAYTON. Simply because there were not 30 captains employed in the war with Spain who could be thus promoted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I supposed that every officer in the Navy was at that time engaged in the war with Spain, and that the President of the United States might so say. Now, is it not equally true in regard to every other grade? In other words, could he not promote 30 commanders or 30 lieutenant-commanders or 30 lieutenants?

Mr. DAYTON. He can promote under the present law.

Mr. HEPBURN. But by this amendment you create places for them. The President can not appoint them before places are created, for no officer can fill a place that does not exist. In other words, under this provision is it not possible for the President of the United States, if he so elects, to add 180 officers to the present list of officers?

Mr. DAYTON. Not at all; he can not add a single officer. He can not in any way exceed his present discretion under the statutes of the United States.

The only object and purpose and scope of this amendment is to prevent just such instances of injustice as that which was done to Captain Clark, of the Oregon. In other words, it will keep the President of the United States from promoting officers above a certain officer so that he may lose in numbers by reason of such promotion. The President can not appoint a single additional officer. Suppose, for instance, a man is promoted, by reason of the act of the President, from the list of commanders to that of captain. The commander list will be one short, the captains list will be one in excess. But that captain will be carried—and it will be so set out in the Naval Register—by reason of the President's commission until his retirement or death, when nobody else can be promoted to any such grade by reason thereof.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, it certainly appears to me that there might be at least 30 appointments in the higher grades——

Mr. DAYTON. Not at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. Thirty new places in the higher grades under this bill, and 30 promotions in each of the lower grades.

Mr. DAYTON. No; that can not be done.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has a misconception of this provision. Nobody is commissioned by the President by reason of promotion under the provisions of this section. These officers take a relative rank. In other words, this is a mark of distinction only.

It may result in increasing the officer's pay, but not in increasing the grade of his commission. For instance, if a man is a captain the President may advance him 30 numbers, but he does not receive a commission as rear-admiral. He receives the relative rank of a rear-admiral and probably draws the relative pay of that rank.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose an officer stands No. 1 in a given grade and is advanced 30 numbers; where would he be then?

Mr. WHEELER. He remains on the Naval Register as No. 1, but he would take relative rank by reason of being advanced 30 grades, and would probably draw the pay for such advancement. But when it comes to actual promotion in line, he is promoted just to the extent that the man above him is at the time this mark of distinction is conferred.

Mr. HEPBURN. What would his grade be, suppose a captain is advanced in that way?

Mr. WHEELER. He would have the relative rank to which the 30 numbers advance would entitle him.

Mr. HEPBURN. What would his pay be?

Mr. WHEELER. I think perhaps his pay would be in accordance with his advancement.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then would he not have the rank of a rear-admiral and draw the pay of a rear-admiral?

Mr. WHEELER. Probably he would.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then he would have the command of a rear-admiral, would he not?

Mr. WHEELER. No; as I read the section, when it comes to actual line service, he would hold his original place and be promoted as though no mark of distinction had been conferred upon him.

Mr. DAYTON. I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to this proviso, which settles the matter:

Provided, That no promotion shall be made to fill a vacancy occasioned by the promotion, retirement, death, resignation, or dismissal of any officer who at the time of such promotion, retirement, death, resignation, or dismissal is an additional number of his grade under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is, it only creates the office for the purposes of this officer. I do not insist that it creates it at all times, but I insist that under the provisions of this proposed legislation there may be 30 additional rear-admirals if, in the estimation of the President, the conditions justify it.

Mr. DAYTON. Just as there could be anyhow. The only effect would be that the President could do what he might do anyhow. He could send to the Senate the name of every captain for war service with an advance of 30 numbers, and if that advance would place him in the rank of rear-admiral and the Senate should confirm that nomination we would have 20 or 30 additional rear-admirals.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, without additional law, because the law says there shall be 13 rear-admirals, this provides 30.

Mr. DAYTON. No; not 30 more. This amendment provides that those men who have been promoted to rear-admiral shall be held as a separate grade, so as not to interfere with such officers as Captain Clark, who stand two numbers below what he was.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to read over the report. I want to ask the acting chairman of the committee if there is anything in this agreement or in this report which in any way affects the status of the Schley and Sampson controversy or interferes with their present rank.

Mr. DAYTON. Not the slightest in the world.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that the question in dispute acts simply as a brevet would act in the Army; nothing more.

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman from West Virginia yield to me for a question?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. Do I understand the gentleman from West Virginia to say that this would act merely as a brevet in the Army?

Mr. DAYTON. That is the statement of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAGE. Is that the fact?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not know.

Mr. MORRIS. I understood you to say that would be the fact, that that has merely the purpose of a brevet.

Mr. WHEELER. It is merely a distinction.

Mr. MORRIS. As I understand the amendment, it goes much further and has a far-reaching operation. It has this operation: If a man is No. 10 in the list of captains and is promoted 15 numbers, that would give him 5 numbers in the list of rear-admirals.

Mr. WHEELER. No; it does not.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to call attention to the fact of the operation of the law that the gentleman from Iowa called my attention to, and its effect upon these officers. It may carry his pay, but it would not create an additional rear-admiral, because of the other provision. We provide that the rear-admirals shall be limited to so many. It might give him only the relative rank of it, but still it would not operate to increase the number.

Mr. MORRIS. What would be his title?

Mr. DAYTON. He would be called rear-admiral.

Mr. MORRIS. Suppose he happened at any time in a fleet with the last rear-admiral on the list. Who would take command?

Mr. DAYTON. The last rear-admiral, as I understand; but I may be mistaken.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, the man who stood tenth on the list of captains, who was promoted 15 numbers, would still be of the lowest rank above the last man on the list of rear-admirals. Is that the effect of the amendment?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not state absolutely about that. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the matter is of so little importance, I think—it is a Senate provision, and is of so little importance in practical operation that it seems to me we are spending a good deal of time over it. It is a well-known fact that the President of the United States has not in any case ever exercised his discretion of advancing a man 30 numbers. So far as I know, that has never been done. It is simply on account of the promotions made in Dewey's fleet, where there was an advance of some of them 10 numbers and others 5, 3, and 2.

Mr. MORRIS. But suppose that the President did advance a man.

Mr. DAYTON. Suppose! We can stand here and suppose a good many things. We have got to be guided by the experience we have and remember what has been done; and we have got to remember, too, that the Senate, which originates this provision for the known purpose of preventing such injustice as has been done to such men as Clark, must confirm those advances and finally settle the matter. I now yield to my colleague from California, a member of this committee.

Mr. METCALF. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Have the House conferees disagreed to the Senate amendment providing for the appointment of inspector of naval accounts?

Mr. DAYTON. They have; and insist upon their disagreement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote upon the motion to adopt the conference report.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the remaining amendments?

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. DAYTON. I did not understand the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RIXEY. I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 88, and to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. A parliamentary inquiry——

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. WHEELER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. The House had adopted the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, to agree to the conference report, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. It will not do for the gentleman to converse with the Chair in the present condition of the House. He must make some effort to have the Chair hear him. It is impossible to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. My point is, the motion of the gentleman from Virginia comes too late. My inquiry is—the House having adopted the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, adopted the report of the whole—that it is now too late to ask to have a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The report is adopted, but the amendment is still before the House. The House may recede or may concur. This was outside of the report; and the Chair thinks that the gentleman's motion is in time. Besides, the gentleman from Virginia gave notice that he would ask for a separate vote, and can not properly be taken off his feet. He has a right to it. If there is no other amendment except No. 88 that a separate vote is demanded on, the motion to insist on disagreement to the other amendments will be submitted to the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that amendments 88 and 89 are connected with this subject.

Mr. DAYTON. These are two separate amendments.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to have a separate vote on amendment 89.

Mr. DAYTON. Does the gentleman desire to have a separate vote on 89?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia desires a separate vote on amendment No. 88 and the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. HOPKINS. I will withdraw that, from a statement made to me by the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, can we have that amendment reported?

The SPEAKER. That is reserved until the other amendments are disposed of. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his demand for a separate vote on amendment No. 89.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do so on a statement made by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House further insist on its disagreement to the other amendments, except amendment 89?

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 89, and concur in the same. The Clerk will now report the amendment.

Strike out from line 16, page 72, to end of line 4, page 74, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That, for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, in accordance with the latest improvements in the construction of ships and the production of armor and armament therefor, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to prepare the plans and specifications of two seagoing battle ships and two armored cruisers, carrying the most suitable armor and armament for vessels of their class, and to submit to Congress a general description of such battle ships and cruisers on the first Monday in December next; and said Secretary, in preparing said plans and description, shall review and further consider the questions whether said ships should be sheathed or unsheathed; what should be the weight and extent of the armor therefor; what should be the form and location of the turrets; whether any changes should be made in the number and kind of guns of the various sizes heretofore constituting the armament of similar ships; what, if any, torpedo tubes should be built into large ships; to what extent electricity should be used for auxiliary purposes, and all other questions which have arisen and are now pending among naval architects and ordnance experts concerning the construction of battle ships and cruisers under modern conditions; and said Secretary shall, to such an extent as he may deem expedient, report to Congress in connection with said description his opinion upon the foregoing questions; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to exercise his discretion as to the sheathing and coppering of naval vessels herein and heretofore authorized to be built.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, before I yield to the gentleman from Virginia, I want to make a plain statement of what this question involves. Then I desire to yield to the gentleman such time as he may desire.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RIXEY. As this is my motion, am I not entitled to be recognized before the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not. This motion has preference, and must first be disposed of, but does not take the floor from the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the House, in its discretion provided for contracts to be let for the building of two battle ships and two armored cruisers. This was the entire number embraced in the proposition of the House, comprising the programme for the building of the Navy.

The Senate struck that provision out, and in lieu of that substantially suspends and destroys the House provision providing for the letting of contracts for these vessels, and in lieu thereof inserts a provision that it seems to me has as little reason and good sound sense in it as can come from a body legislative in its character.

This provision means that the Secretary of the Navy is required to present a report to Congress upon plans for these vessels, setting forth all the disputed and controverted scientific questions that have been involved in the construction of our battle ships, for Congress to talk over, for Congress to disagree about, for Congress to try to settle.

For instance, we are to have a report upon the most suitable armor. We shall have a further consideration of the question whether the ships shall be sheathed or unsheathed; what shall be the weight and extent of the armor thereof; what shall be the form and location of the turrets; whether any change shall be made in the number and kind of guns and of the various sizes thereof heretofore constituting the armament of similar ships; what, if any, torpedo tubes shall be built in the ship; to what extent electricity shall be used for auxiliary purposes, and all other questions which have arisen and are now matters of difference among naval architects and ordnance experts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that by voting to concur we simply agree with the Senate that Congress wants to discuss and consider and attempt to decide the scientific questions and deal with the things that only experts should deal with and determine.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DAYTON. I will for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. If Congress is to authorize the building of battle ships and cruisers, is it not quite essential that Congress have some knowledge as to the quality of armor plate, whether it be harveyized plate or the Krupp or some new process that may be discovered by scientists?

Does the gentleman think it would be wise to appropriate five or seven million dollars for a great battle ship and authorize it to be covered with armor plate without having any knowledge whatever as to the character of that armor plate?

Mr. DAYTON. Why, the House provision, if the gentleman will pardon me, is that they shall carry the heaviest armor, the most powerful ordnance of vessels of their class upon a trial displacement of about 14,000 tons each, to have the highest practical speed and radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,800,000.

We provide that it shall be the heaviest armor, the best armor, and we provide that it shall be of the highest practical speed, but we leave the question to the experts to determine what is the best armor, and what is the most powerful ordnance, and what is the best method as to all of these questions.

We simply provide that we shall have the best. The Senate amendment proposes to bring it in here, and attempts to make experts out of everyone of us, and have us determine those questions. We leave it to the Naval Construction Board.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it not a fact that the Senate amendment simply requires the Secretary of the Navy to present all the information upon these various types of armor plate, so that Congress can have some intelligent information upon the subject when members of the House vote to have a battle ship constructed?

Mr. DAYTON. Not a bit of it. Gentlemen of this House will bear me out that the official information furnished to the House and to Congress upon the armor-plate question alone will cover 1,000 pages, and that the last Congress in its wisdom saw fit to throw up its hands and leave the whole question to the Secretary of the Navy, as to the different methods and as to the different kinds of armor plate that had been discussed over and over again in this House. This proposition is to bring in a lot of additional scientific testimony and facts, which will only be bewildering.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the gentleman from West Virginia know that it was the Congressional investigation as to armor plate for vessels that were being constructed and accepted by the Navy that brought about the revolution on this subject and has resulted in giving us the best armor plate in the world?

Mr. DAYTON. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from West Virginia yield to me for a question?

Mr. DAYTON. I can not; I must yield to the gentleman from Virginia, who is the author of the motion. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RIXEY. We want some time on this side to discuss this proposition.

Mr. DAYTON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RIXEY. Well, I will say an hour on this side.

Mr. DAYTON. I do not understand that I have control of that much time. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Is it proper for us to have an agreement as to how long a debate there shall be on this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The House has entire control of it.

Mr. DAYTON. Can not the gentleman from Virginia get along with half an hour on each side?

Mr. RIXEY. I think there ought to be an hour.

Mr. DAYTON. Will not the gentleman agree to three-quarters of an hour on each side?

Mr. RIXEY. There are several gentlemen that have spoken to me for time.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that there be a debate on this proposition of one hour on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for debate of two hours, one hour on each side; one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from West Virginia and one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAYTON. Having already spoken, Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman take out of his hour the time he has occupied?

Mr. DAYTON. No, sir; I do not desire to do that.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the Senate seems to me to be such a fair business proposition that I am somewhat surprised that the gentleman in charge of this bill is not willing to accept it. The proposition of the Senate is practically a committal to the building of these two battle ships and two armored cruisers, but directs that the authorization shall be postponed until the first Monday in December, when the Secretary of the Navy is to inform the Houses of Congress as to certain disputed facts which go into the building of these ships. One is as to whether these great ships shall be sheathed or unsheathed; another is in regard to the turrets, another is as to what shall be the thickness of the armor plate. There are many experts who believe that we have gone to too great an extreme in the thickness of armor plate for the battle ships, and are now recommending that the thickness shall be reduced. There are others who believe that the ships shall no longer be sheathed; others again differ as to turrets.

Mr. WHEELER. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. RIXEY. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senate had struck out the provision providing for the increase of the Navy, would not my colleague have supported that amendment?

Mr. RIXEY. My colleague on the committee knows that I would be glad to.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not true that the gentleman supports this amendment because it postpones further increase of the Navy?

Mr. RIXEY. I support this amendment because, while first it does not go as far as I think it ought to go, it is in line of postponement, and is a business proposition in addition. Now, we have a Naval Committee of this House. I do not pretend that the members of that committee are experts in the building of ships, but they ought to be informed as to whether ships should be sheathed or unsheathed, and what kind of armor plate should be used; and before we authorize these ships to be paid for by the people we ought to have this information and decide these questions for ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, the committee which reported this bill to the House used this language in regard to the increase of the Navy:

OUR NAVAL PROGRAMME.

For the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the committee recommends that the President be authorized to have built by contract two unsheathed seagoing battle ships, carrying the heaviest armor and the most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class, upon a trial displacement of about 14,000 tons each, to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,850,000 each, and two unsheathed armored cruisers, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class, upon a trial displacement of about 14,000 tons each, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each. Maximum cost of the vessels herein authorized, exclusive of armor and armament, will be $15,700,000.

The Department has recently contracted for the construction of the 5 battle ships and 6 armored cruisers authorized by the acts of March 3, 1899, and June 7, 1900, at a cost approximated at $40,000,000. On the 1st of February bids will be opened for the 3 protected cruisers authorized by the act of June 7, 1900. In view of the fact that the shipyards of the country were likely to be well filled with work during the coming year in consequence of the recent letting of these large contracts, your committee thought that the above programme was one that would be considered adequate and would meet the approval of Congress in its policy of building up the Navy.

Within the past ninety days we have contracted for 5 battle ships, 6 armored cruisers, and have either contracted for or have bids for 3 protected cruisers, making 14 war ships—whether you call them battle ships or armored cruisers or protected cruisers. These ships contracted for within ninety days will cost this Government $60,000,000. The four which the House provided for would cost not less than $20,000,000. Mr. Speaker, can we not well afford to wait until the first Monday of December next before authorizing the contract for the four additional battle ships and armored cruisers?

Admiral O'Neil has testified that the shipyards of this country are now building not less than 50 ships for the American Navy. No one can estimate the amount of work already authorized. The shipyards of this country, I take it, are all full. I ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether he can name a shipyard in this country which can now undertake to go on with one of the ships whose construction he wishes to authorize? I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the shipyards are all full; and it is a business proposition that we should give some time for the consideration of this question before authorizing the construction of additional ships.

Mr. DAYTON. In that connection I want to say to the gentleman that I have in my pocket a telegram from the shipyard in his own State saying that they can build, without trouble, these four vessels there.

Mr. RIXEY. Now, will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. How many battle ships and armored cruisers is the Newport News Shipyard now building?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not know. I do not know what contracts there may be for other governments. I simply know that they can build right along three or four more ships over and above what they have now in hand, because they have so wired me and written me.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman say how many that shipyard is building for this Government?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not know. The gentleman ought to know; the shipyard is in his own State.

Mr. RIXEY. Did it not receive a contract for one or two in December last?

Mr. DAYTON. I think so.

Mr. RIXEY. Did it not then have upon its docks certainly two others?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not remember. The gentleman or anyone else can ascertain that fact without asking me by looking at the Naval Register. It is simply a question of fact, to be settled by memory or by reference to the Register.

Mr. RIXEY. Now, will the gentleman answer another question? That shipyard unquestionably is now building or has contracted to build not less than three battle ships or armored cruisers for this Government. When could it build additional battle ships?

Mr. DAYTON. At any time they can get the contract. And the shipyards at the Union Iron Works say in a telegram, which I have in my pocket, that they can build three additional ones. The Moran Brothers can build two or three, the Cramp Brothers three or four. So when the gentleman states that the shipyards are full he is simply speaking without information from these concerns. We can to-day have in course of construction without a moment's delay 15 more battle ships than we now have under construction.

Mr. RIXEY. It is true that I have not been in communication with the shipyards of the country. The Newport News Shipyard has never sent me a telegram or written me a letter as to whether it wants to build these ships or not; and so far as I am concerned, it does not make any difference.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman that they have furnished this information to me in answer to a telegram sent to them and other shipbuilders, in order that I might meet just the argument and the statement which the gentleman has made.

Mr. RIXEY. I will ask the gentleman another question. Did those shipyards also inform the gentleman whether they would build as cheaply, now that the yards are full, as when the yards are not full?

Mr. DAYTON. I have no information from them on that point. Their yards are not full. And besides, the contract prices are fixed by this bill.

Mr. RIXEY. I do not understand that the contract prices are fixed by this bill. The bill simply says that the prices paid shall not exceed a certain amount; but there is no reason why the Navy Department should in every instance go up to the limit.

So far as I am concerned, I would not consider the interests of the shipbuilding yards of this country. I say again that those yards are full. It may be that they could do this work by means of an additional plant or possibly with the plants they now have, but they would charge the Government enough to pay for increasing their plants.

I have not understood until very recently that there were more than three great shipyards in this country that could build the battle ships and the armored cruisers. Now, there seem to be a number of shipyards, all of them bringing pressure to bear on Congress to authorize at every session of Congress the building of great ships for the Navy. I am willing that we should build all the ships that the Government needs; but when within ninety days we have authorized contracts or made contracts carrying $60,000,000, I am not willing that we shall authorize at this time the construction of additional battle ships or additional cruisers.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Does the gentleman think that the present Navy of the United States is sufficient?

Mr. RIXEY. I think the strength of our naval establishment is sufficient under present conditions.

Mr. DAYTON. The gentleman has asked me several questions; now let me ask him one.

Mr. RIXEY. Let me first answer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to state that we should not increase the size of our Navy in the future. I would be willing now to let this provision for two battle ships and two armored cruisers remain in the bill if there were any assurance that we would go over the next session of Congress without duplicating this provision.

Mr. DAYTON. Let me ask the gentleman this question: How long does it take to build a battle ship?

Mr. RIXEY. Three or four years.

Now, an additional word. The report of the Naval Committee states that in view of the fact that seventeen years ago, when we started to build up a new Navy, our rank was that of the twentieth and that to-day we stand the fourth, no one will dispute that in the intervening years we have made magnificent progress. Seventeen years ago we had a Navy standing twentieth in rank as compared with the navies of the world. To-day we stand either fourth or third. There is no present danger that any nation will outstrip us, in view of the progress we have made.

Mr. DAYTON. Let me ask the gentleman this question: How long will that be the fact when as Japan, for instance, is building 12 vessels this year; Russia 16, Germany 18, France 31, and England 16?

Mr. RIXEY. It appears by the gentleman's own statement that Japan is building 12 ships while we are building 50.

Mr. DAYTON. But I am speaking of the naval programme for this year, not of those vessels on the stocks and those which have been authorized heretofore. I make the assertion that Japan is building this year 2 protected cruisers, 2 cruisers, and 8 destroyers, making a total increase to her navy of 12.

Mr. RIXEY. Is she building any battle ships?

Mr. DAYTON. She is building 2 large cruisers and 2 smaller ones.

Mr. RIXEY. According to the gentleman's own statement, Japan is not in the same class with us.

Mr. DAYTON. I admit that she is not building the same class of vessels; but I ask the gentleman how long shall we continue to occupy the relative position that we now do when the nations of the earth are increasing their navies so rapidly, and we are haggling over four ships? As to the policy of building four of these large ships, we are to consider that, while at the present time we have some 60 or 70 gunboats and 30 or 40 torpedo boats, we have only 8 battle ships and 10 building. This is our position, while these other nations have been building their battle ships.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the illustrations given by the gentleman from West Virginia amount to anything. There are no armored cruisers provided for in either case. In the report of the Naval Committee last year, in speaking of the building programme of the navy of Great Britain, it is stated that it was the policy of Great Britain to have a navy twice as large as that of any other country, and during that fiscal year it was proposed, not that they had contracted for, but it was proposed to lay down two battle ships and two armored cruisers, three small cruisers, two gunboats, and two first-class torpedo boats.

Great Britain proposed, as is seen, to build 2 battle ships and 2 armored cuisers. We have contracted for 5 battle ships and 6 armored cruisers within ninety days past.

A good deal has been said, as was stated when the naval bill was under consideration, as to the policy of Germany. I refer to it now because I understood from that statement that the impression was made that Germany was building much more rapidly than we. Now, let us see what the facts are. I take the following statement from the speech of my colleague on the committee, General MEYER of Louisiana. I take it to be correct because he makes it. Mr. KITCHIN asked him this question:

> Mr. KITCHIN. But while the German Empire was planning to accomplish a certain increase in sixteen years our increase last year was four times as great as Germany's would be under that programme. Is not that correct?
> Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Of course, if I understand you correctly. But with reference to that I would observe that the Empire of Germany is in commercial energy and a thirst for foreign domination and colonies not behind any other power. Her Emperor is at the head of this movement, and he is well aware of the necessity for a strong navy to support it. The keynote of the policy is that "Germany requires peace on the sea."
> It is apparent that Germany is not willing to occupy a place in maritime power second to Russia or France, which have so long excelled her in naval strength. The programme embodied in the German law of April 10, 1898, contemplated a force of 17 battle ships, 8 coast-defense vessels, 9 large cruisers, 26 small cruisers as a fighting fleet ready for sea, and a reserve of 2 battle ships, 3 large cruisers, and 4 small cruisers.
> The law of 1898 was carried out before the expiration of the period contemplated, but a new proposed programme, which I understand to have been adopted, contemplates an increase of this force by 1916 to 29 battle ships, 20 large cruisers, 51 small cruisers, and 16 divisions of torpedo boats.

Now, take the statement that in 1916 Germany is to have 29 battle ships. Why, we authorized last year contracts for 5 battle ships. It would not take us more than six years to have as many battle ships, to build as many battle ships, at that rate, as Germany will have in her entire navy by 1916, 29 battle ships. Granting that she started in 1898 without a single battle ship. In eighteen years she will build 29 battle ships. How many will we build in the same number of years at the rate at which we have been going?

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman that Germany now has 27 battle ships. She has inaugurated a programme providing that the number, the entire number, of ships in her navy shall be duplicated by 1916; and ten years of that has been cut off, and that programme is to be completed by 1906.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman from West Virginia asking me a question; but prefer that he make his speech in his own time.

Mr. DAYTON. I simply ask you if that is not a significant refutation of your argument?

Mr. RIXEY. The statement which I have made was taken from the figures given by the gentleman from Louisiana. I have talked with him about it and he says he believes it to be correct.

I reserve the balance of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to be as familiar with this subject as the members of the naval committee. It was with some reluctance when this bill was brought in that I voted for the proposition to authorize the building of two new battle ships and two new cruisers that will aggregate in cost when they are constructed and ready for sea not less than $20,000,000.

But in view of the report then made, I followed the committee upon that proposition. Since that time this question has been presented to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, composed of men of long experience in public affairs, men equally as familiar as the gentlemen of the Naval Committee of the House with all the questions involved.

They have taken a totally different view of this subject from the members of the House committee, and instead of authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to enter into contracts to build two new battle ships and two new cruisers, they provide that—

> For the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, in accordance with the latest improvements in the construction of ships and the production of armor and armament therefor, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to prepare the plans and specifications for the two battle ships and two cruisers, carrying full armor and armament of vessels of their class, and to submit to Congress a general description of such battle ships and cruisers on the first Monday in December next; and said Secretary, in preparing said plans and descriptions, shall review and further consider the questions whether said ships should be sheathed or unsheathed; what should be the weight and extent of the armor therefor; what should be the form and location of the turrets; whether any changes should be made in the number and kind of guns of the various sizes heretofore constituting the armament of similar ships; what, if any, torpedo tubes should be built into large ships; to what extent electricity should be used for auxiliary purposes, and all other questions which have arisen and are now pending among naval architects and ordnance experts concerning the construction of battle ships and cruisers under modern conditions; and said Secretary shall, to such an extent as he may deem expedient, report to Congress in connection with said description his opinion upon the foregoing questions; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to exercise his discretion as to the sheathing and coppering of naval vessels herein and heretofore authorized to be built.

Now, it is apparent that all that is desired by the amendment offered by the Senate is that this question shall be postponed until December next, and that during the period that intervenes between now and the convening of Congress in December, the Secretary of the Navy shall perform the duties and gather the information provided for in the Senate amendment and present the same to Congress in the form of a report, when the House and the Senate reassemble here on the first Monday of December, 1901.

The gentleman in charge of the conference report says that this subject suggested in the Senate amendment is nonsensical. I take issue with the gentleman. It seems to me, in view of the situation as we find it in the Navy Department, that the Senate has acted with great wisdom and discretion in proposing this amendment. Senators say, first, that they would like information as to whether these cruisers should be sheathed or unsheathed.

Now, anybody familiar with this subject knows it is a disputed question to-day in the Ordnance Department of the Navy whether these cruisers should be sheathed or unsheathed. Some experts say they should be, and others equally as well qualified say they should not be; and they are all men of great intelligence, great experience, and great knowledge upon this subject.

In view of the fact that there is a dispute about this matter, I think it is a proper and a correct thing for us, Mr. Speaker, to postpone definite action until December, and have this information presented to Congress.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman pardon a question? Do you think it is better to leave it to the Secretary in his wisdom to follow out the conservative policy of building ships of both classes, sheathed and unsheathed, or leave it for Congress to determine which shall be done?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will answer the question, Mr. Speaker, that I do not. And I will tell the gentleman why I do not.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HOPKINS. Permit me to make my statement. The reason why I think we should not leave it to the Secretary of the Navy, as suggested by the gentleman from West Virginia, is this: I claim that men of scientific knowledge and experience ought to determine that one or the other is the preferable style or type of cruisers to be constructed.

Mr. DAYTON. Why so?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not willing to experiment to the extent of $20,000,000, when even the Ordnance Department of the Navy are unable to determine this question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. HOPKINS. In that minute of time another proposition that I wish to present is upon armor plate. I undertake to say that there is no agreement to-day in the Navy Department in regard to the character and quantity of the armor plate that should be used upon these great battle ships.

There has been a wide range of sentiment upon that subject since this question was first brought before Congress, and they now believe in an entirely different armor plate from that which has been used on the Texas and other battle ships. I wish this evidence brought before Congress.

I wish the scientific men and experts, through the Secretary of the Navy, to send in their reports to Congress. We can then judge whether the battle ships and cruisers shall be completely covered with armor plate, or only the vitals of the ships; and can also have an intelligent opinion as to the thickness of armor plate that shall be put upon the different parts of the battle ships.

With this and the other information called for before us, we shall be as capable of forming an intelligent opinion on all these questions now mooted in the Navy Department as a gentleman who has plans and specifications for the construction of a brick house is in determining the character and quality of brick to be used in the building of his proposed house.

Mr. WATSON. Does my friend know a single man in the United States, along this line, who is in favor of using harveyized armor on modern battle ships?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should say not.

Mr. WATSON. Why does my friend say there is a difference when there is an absolute unanimity of opinion upon the part of all persons having any information upon the proposition?

Mr. HOPKINS. I beg to say that there is no disagreement in the Navy Department to-day as to the character of the armor plate. I think there is a division of sentiment or opinion as to whether the great battle ships shall be completely covered with armor plate or only a certain portion of them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have been interrupted, and I ask for two more minutes.

Mr. RIXEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois two more minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is another division of sentiment in regard to the form and location of turrets, and that is a question where Congress should have the views of all these scientists and experts. Congress can then exercise an intelligent discretion in contracting as to what shall be done in the construction of our cruisers and other vessels.

The Senate amendment calls for information as to the kind of guns and the sizes, etc. Now, great progress has been made in that respect in the last few years, and there is a wide difference of opinion even in the Ordnance Bureau of the Navy on that subject. I am credibly informed, Mr. Speaker, that we are making a great mistake in authorizing the construction of any of these great battle ships to-day.

It is claimed by gentlemen who profess to know that one shot from a Gathmann gun will blow into atoms a five or seven million dollar armored battle ship, and this Congress is appropriating $115,000 for the purpose of experimenting to determine whether those claims made by these gentlemen are correct or not.

If these experiments prove that these gentlemen are right, then I undertake to say that we have authorized the construction of the last battle ship that will ever be constructed under the authority of Congress. It is claimed by these men that battle ships will become obsolete. Why, then, is there any great hurry for us to adopt this proposition of the House to authorize the construction of two new battle ships?

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not be interrupted now. As the gentleman from Virginia says, to-day we have 50 different ships, ranging from a battle ship and cruisers to smaller vessels, already in process of construction. Since this Congress convened the Secretary of the Navy has entered into contracts involving an expenditure of some $60,000,000 for battle ships, cruisers, etc.

Mr. DAYTON. That is $20,000,000 more than is the fact.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, $40,000,000 then. Since this Congress convened the Secretary of the Navy has entered into contracts for the construction of battle ships and cruisers amounting to $40,000,000. Now, I insist that with the enormous appropriations that are being made in the aggregate in this Congress it is time for us to call a halt. It is better for us to postpone this expenditure, or proposed expenditure, of $20,000,000 more until the next session of Congress, and then we can determine whether we want more battle ships or whether we want cruisers, sheathed or unsheathed.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman to answer questions.

Mr. HOPKINS. Or as much as may be necessary to answer the questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAYTON. No; two minutes. I ask the gentleman if he does not know that the reason why we have entered into contracts for $40,000,000 of construction is because the construction has been piling up for a number of years by reason of the very disagreement of Congress about these technical questions, and one of them the armor-plate question? How long should we go on piling up these contracts or disagreements; and if we did it, how should we come out in the construction of ships?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman's colleague on the Naval Committee says that no man to-day would authorize harveyized plate upon great battle ships. If we had not been delayed in this House by investigation of this subject, three or four of the best battle ships that will have Krupp armor plate on them would have been constructed and put afloat with harveyized armor that the gentleman from West Virginia to-day condemns.

Mr. WHEELER. Harveyized armor is used on all the ships to-day.

Mr. HOPKINS. I deny the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER. If you do, with all due deference to the gentleman, I will say that the gentleman is not informed about it.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Kentucky says it is used on all the ships, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] says that no intelligent man would put that armor plate on a tugboat.

Mr. WATSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I said no such thing.

Mr. HOPKINS. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. WATSON. I do not know where my friend has been, that he talks about armor plating tugboats.

Mr. HOPKINS. Did not the gentleman say that harveyized plate would not be put upon any vessel?

Mr. WATSON. I said the harveyized armor plate would not be recommended to completely armor any battle ship.

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not hear the gentleman use the word "completely."

Mr. WATSON. That was because the gentleman was talking all the time, and did not listen to what I said.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the gentleman from Indiana say that he would recommend the harveyized plate for any battle ship?

Mr. WATSON. To a limited extent.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Maryland five minutes.

[Mr. MUDD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I should like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question. If the House should insist on its disagreement to amendment No. 89 and the House provision should finally prevail, when would these vessels which we are authorizing to be constructed be completed?

Mr. DAYTON. Just as rapidly as the plans could be prepared and the contracts let. I would say within two years and a half, or possibly six months longer.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is there any advantage in letting these contracts now?

Mr. DAYTON. There is. There has been a very healthy increase in the number of our shipyards; competition is very great at the present time, and I am thoroughly convinced that we can get these vessels built more cheaply now than we could later on; and under present rivalry we can get better ships.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What would be the increase of expenditure?

Mr. DAYTON. I understand there is no present appropriation for these four battle ships.

I desire now to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question.

Mr. DAYTON. I do not wish to occupy the floor now in my own right. A little later, when I shall take the floor, I shall be very glad to answer any questions.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I should greatly regret to see the House concur in the Senate amendment. I am not a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, but like other members of the House I have a very deep interest in this matter of increasing the Navy of the United States.

The House, in the bill which it passed, provided for the construction of two battle ships and two armored cruisers. The Senate amendment strikes out the provision for the construction of these battle ships, strikes out the provision for the construction of these armored cruisers, and substitutes a simple provision for the construction of three submarine boats.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are not going fast enough in the matter of increasing the strength of the Navy. I do not believe, with my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], that we ought now to further postpone this increase.

It has been stated on this floor by many gentlemen, and in other debates as well as in this, that Germany has already entered upon the execution of a naval programme which will give her by 1916 a navy embracing 38 battle ships.

Mr. DAYTON. And she has made a cut of ten years in that programme.

Mr. BROWN. So that within a few years Germany will have a navy embracing 38 battle ships; and these, as I understand, will be in addition to the present battle ships of her navy.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to know where the gentleman gets such statement?

Mr. BROWN. From a work entitled "Notes on Naval Progress," which has been handed to me by an officer of the Navy Department. In this work there is a statement that by 1916 this programme which Germany has already entered upon will give her 38 battle ships, 20 large cruisers, 45 small cruisers, and 16 divisions of torpedo boats, and that these will be in addition to the battle ships and cruisers already constructed.

Mr. RIXEY. Can the gentleman tell us how many battle ships Germany now has?

Mr. BROWN. I can not at this moment.

Mr. RIXEY. How many will she build between now and 1916?

Mr. BROWN. The statement is that she will, between now and 1916, build 38 battle ships.

A MEMBER. She has now 27.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I deny that she has now 27, or any number approaching it.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman from New York will not say I stated that she had.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have only this to say—that in my view no single year ought to pass by when the United States will not construct at least two new battle ships. I believe she ought to do that this year.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] talks about deferring this matter until we have agreed upon what is the best armor for these battle ships. If I remember correctly, the gentleman from Illinois was on this floor, speaking with his usual force, at the extra session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, on this very question of the armor for battle ships. I think he did not agree with other intelligent gentlemen, or with all of them, as to what the best armor is.

I only referred to this to show that it is not likely that from now until next December all these doubts will be swept away and that all men will agree what the best armor is for battle ships. I insist that we should not postpone this matter of constructing the battle ships called for by the House bill. The House provided for two of these and for two armored cruisers. The Senate answers by a proposition to postpone this urgent work, and the gentleman from Illinois takes up that position and enforces it here as well as he can.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the foreign policy that this country has inaugurated, it seems to me that this is not the time to postpone the necessary increase of our Navy.

Mr. DAYTON. I think I have taken a fair portion of the time and hope the gentleman from Virginia will consume some of his now.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, what portion of the time is remaining?

Mr. DAYTON. I have kept a record of mine, and I have consumed eighteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has thirty-seven minutes and the gentleman from West Virginia forty-three.

Mr. RIXEY. I think the gentleman should use some of his time, then.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. ADAMS.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, hopefulness is a great characteristic, but when it is carried to the point that we are always going to wait for something better and not acting upon the resources and the means that are at hand, I fear it is not a practical doctrine for this House to proceed upon.

The gentleman from Illinois is alway hopeful, alway waiting for something better to turn up. Whatever proposition, it seems to me, comes before this House in regard to the American Navy, he is always asking to wait for something better or something cheaper.

I remember well in the Fifty-fourth Congress, when this identical question of armor plate was before the House and we came almost to a deadlock in debate upon the price of the armor, after all the men who manufactured that armor, the Secretary of the Navy, and a special board of investigation all stated, for the information of the House, that this armor plate could not be made for less than $400 a ton—in spite of that, the hopefulness of the gentleman from Illinois was so great that he stated to this House and maintained on this floor, and even went so far as to quote a company that would make armor plate for $300 a ton.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. ADAMS. One moment. Now, the result was, Mr. Chairman, that the matter went over from that Congress and nothing was done, owing to the gentleman's statement and the force of his argument.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. ADAMS. Not now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania refuses to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me point out to this House the cost to this country of hopefulness. The manufacture of armor plate and the putting it on the two great battle ships at Newport News came to an absolute standstill, and the result was that when the Spanish war broke out those two ships were not in the United States Navy and not ready to protect our flag and our homes against the enemy threatening our coast.

This hopefulness does not do, Mr. Speaker. We must proceed to enlarge and strengthen our Navy with the best-known processes. When our great committee which has built up our Navy to its present condition comes with this recommendation they should be given that weight that they are entitled to, founded on the past experience, in which their wisdom has been so great.

More than that, I think the proposition of the Senate is not wise. We should proceed to enlarge with the class of ships, battle ships and cruisers, which have been tested right within our own observation within the last two years. This proposition for submarine boats, although it may be a matter for hopefulness, does not reach that point that we should spend more money upon those boats until their absolute utility has been established, which, in my judgment, up to this time has not been done.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to interrupt the gentleman there.

Mr. ADAMS. I can not yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to give you some information.

Mr. ADAMS. I always yield for information.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The London Mail of this afternoon says that England has contracted for 5 of these very submarine boats which you now say are a failure.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not say that they are a failure. I say that in my judgment their absolute utility has not been sufficiently established to go to such a large expenditure. Now, the absolute utility of the battle ships and cruisers has been proven in defending our country from the assaults of its enemy.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You can build 20 submarine boats for the cost of 1 battle ship.

Mr. ADAMS. That may be, but we want battle ships, because we must meet any vessels that come against our Navy with vessels of an equal class.

Mr. CUMMINGS. When were battle ships used?

Mr. ADAMS. They were used when we met the Spanish at Manila Bay and at Santiago.

Mr. CUMMINGS. There was not a battle ship in the bay. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman must take my whole proposition. I said Manila Bay and Santiago. There were battle ships at Santiago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must be in order. His time has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I must insist on the gentleman from Virginia using some of his time.

Mr. RIXEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House a few weeks ago I took occasion to recur to the fact that reports from one part of the world were always used for the support of a proposition like this that confronts us to-day.

If I can have the attention of the House for a few minutes, I desire now, Mr. Speaker, to refer again to the fact that this seems to be a period of great naval enterprise, of building up the navies in different parts of the world; and in some parts it seems to me that we are disposed to go so rapidly, to rush so hastily in the business of building ships, that we are liable to build ships which will be out of date before they are even commissioned.

In the discussion that took place on this bill a few weeks ago I referred to the fact that the German Reichstag was urged to increase the German navy because the American Congress was considering the policy of enlarging our Navy. It was a significant fact, it seems to me, that in order to get this bill passed there comes up information to us about what the German navy is doing. The German navy is now considered in many respects the best in the world, although not in the number of ships, superior in many points in personnel and management to the British navy. It seems to me also, if we are to consider a well-advised policy looking to the future, not to be so hasty in ordering contracts for battle ships, but in the present period of progress and invention we should have taken the best advantage of those improvements.

I read only a few days after that discussion took place a cablegram which closes with these words, referring to the comment of Mr. Wilson, the editor of the Naval League Journal:

> In commenting lengthily upon the report of Rear-Admiral Melville, the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Navigation of the United States Navy, on naval boilers, he hopes his argument will not be utilized by the British Admiralty, declaring that the water-tube boilers placed in the American ships to-day will be outclassed long before the vessels run their course.

This suggests an argument that seems to be well founded, that before ordering any more battle ships we should at least wait until the Secretary of the Navy, according to this provision of the Senate, shall have time to submit plans, and that the naval architects shall have time to draft new plans and present the most modern improvements in all these various departments of naval architecture.

It seems to me the action of the Senate has been extremely wise in making this provision. Here are a number of questions yet unsolved that are in dispute among the naval officers themselves. This Senate amendment provides that instead of immediately authorizing contracts for four more great war vessels we shall authorize the Secretary of the Navy to prepare and submit specifications for two seagoing battle ships and two armored cruisers, carrying the most suitable armament for vessels of that class, and to submit that information to Congress on the first Monday of December next.

Now, some gentlemen, it seems, would have us proceed at once to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts for these vessels. Instead of making contracts now, when, as it has already been seen, the navy-yards are full and can not construct these vessels within the next four years—instead of this, would it not be wiser on our part to provide for these plans and postpone the matter until Congress meets in December? Certainly we are in no danger of attack, and we are in no danger of immediate need of these vessels.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. VANDIVER. I think it would be much wiser policy, Mr. Speaker, if we would allow this matter to go over for the present and let the Secretary of the Navy thoroughly consider these questions that are before the Navy Department and are yet unsolved. Here, for instance, is a question whether ships should be sheathed or unsheathed. I remember something over a year ago, when Admiral Dewey and the Secretary of the Navy were both before our committee, that they themselves—two of the most eminent gentlemen, two of the most distinguished naval officers—differed widely on this question, and it was left unsettled. I remember that the advice of Admiral Dewey was that these vessels should be sheathed. I remember, too, that on this very important question, whether we should contract for more battle ships just now or delay them, the Secretary of the Navy at that time made no request for ordering more battle ships.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. VANDIVER. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I know the gentleman from Missouri does not desire to misrepresent the position of Admiral Dewey, and his position was not in accordance with what the gentleman has stated it to be. Admiral Dewey recommended that the cruisers that were to go to tropical waters should be sheathed and those that were to remain in the North Atlantic or in temperate waters should not be sheathed. That is the position, as I understand, of Admiral Dewey and the position of the naval board.

Mr. VANDIVER. That may be technically true, but the gentleman from Kentucky knows perfectly well that the Navy Department is divided on that question.

Mr. WHEELER. No; only one man differs from them.

Mr. VANDIVER. This question and several others are yet unsettled. Give them another year, and these questions will be determined and we can act intelligently.

We now have 14 war vessels of the largest size and over 40 smaller craft under contract for construction at a cost of more than $60,000,000. Let us wait until these are at least well started before ordering another $20,000,000 worth of contracts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I hope the gentleman from West Virginia will now use some of his time.

Mr. DAYTON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to reserve the balance of my time, and ask the gentleman from Virginia to use some of his.

Mr. RIXEY. I supposed the gentleman would use some of his time now, because we have used more on our side than he has on his.

Mr. DAYTON. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-eight minutes.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall want to use five minutes. It is well known in this House that in the fourteen years of my service here I have always been a strong advocate of the increase of the Navy. I am still such an advocate, so great an advocate that when the Secretary of the Navy a year ago sent to Congress his report, in which all he asked in the way of increase was 10 gunboats, I stood with the majority of the Naval Committee, and with the majority of this House, and aided in placing upon the appropriation bill provisions for the building of 3 more battle ships, 3 protected cruisers, and 3 armored cruisers. I did more than this. I asked this House to place on the bill the 10 gunboats which he requested. As a conferee on the naval appropriation bill I also stood by the Senate in making an appropriation for the building of 5 submarine boats.

This year the Secretary of the Navy, who a year ago failed to recommend any battle ships and to whom we gave 9 ships unsolicited, asks for 2 more battle ships and 2 cruisers, more expensive than battle ships. He has recommended no gunboats, however. Well, I believe that John D. Long knows what he is about. I am going to vote for the battle ships, although I believe that the failure of the committee to put submarine boats on the bill was a mistake and that it will be demonstrated a mistake, to the satisfaction of this House, before Congress adjourns on the 4th of March. I am confident that Great Britain will begin the construction of these submarine boats before three months have passed, and unless additional submarine boats are authorized by us, the skilled mechanics employed in their construction here will be transferred to the banks of the Clyde.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a disposition to be economical here regarding the increase of the Navy. It may prove a false economy to stop the work altogether. I believe that it would be wise and certainly inure to the safety of the country if you should strike off 1 of these battle ships or 1 of these cruisers and put in the place of it the 3 submarine boats asked for by the Senate. These boats will entail an expense upon this country of only $500,000. The battle ships will cost, including armament, $5,000,000 each. I sincerely believe that 3 submarine boats are equal to 1 battle ship as a means of defense to our ports. I trust that, whatever may happen, we shall continue to increase our Navy and the work of construction not entirely cease.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can say anything in regard to this amendment of the Senate that I have not already said in regard to this subject-matter when the naval bill was pending in the House. It was my judgment then, as it is now, that we ought not to authorize the construction of these two battle ships and the two armored cruisers. We have already expended vast sums of money on our new Navy. In my judgment we to-day have next to the strongest Navy in the world, the navy of England alone surpassing ours.

Some gentlemen of this House have proclaimed that they desire our country to have a Navy equal to that of England. If you should measure navies by their tonnage, such a navy would entail upon our country an additional expense of a thousand million dollars for its construction. If we should have a navy the size of England's, our annual expense to support it would be $200,000,000.

A few years ago a naval bill of $25,000,000 was considered a large one by people of this country and members of this House. This bill is now carrying, I believe, more than $75,000,000, exclusive of these four ships, the construction of which the Senate amendment will delay. These four ships will entail an expense on the Government of about $30,000,000. A battle ship or an armored cruiser's first cost is about $3,750,000. That does not include the armor—it does not include the armament or anything except the vessel as it leaves the contractor's hands.

In my judgment, the cost of each one of these vessels after the contractor has turned it over to the Government, before it is completed and ready to meet an enemy on the seas, will be three or three and one-half million dollars more. The cost of a great war-ship ready to fight is about $7,000,000.

We now have on the sea and in the course of construction 18 battle ships, 35 cruisers, 44 gunboats, and 60 torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers. Gentlemen speak of the American Navy as if it were something that other nations could deride. Why, Mr. Speaker, we now have a large navy, one that every American citizen ought to be proud of, one sufficient for all our needs under present conditions.

I am not one of those who think the navy of England, or the navy of any other country, could overrun us on any of the highways of trade. Our Navy can always be comparatively near us, near our shores, affording us ample protection. So, entertaining these views, I shall support the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

This Senate amendment directs the investigation on the part of the Secretary of the Navy's office and report thereon to this body as to what kind of ships we ought to have, the kind of armor we ought to use, the kind of armament they ought to have, and everything that would tend to give this body information about the building of these ships.

Certainly it could not harm the American people to have this information laid before Congress. Certainly we are in no immediate danger for the lack of these four vessels. Why not let this body defer this matter until this report can be handed in to us by the Secretary of the Navy next winter, or, if we are to have an extra session, earlier? In no event would these ships probably be put in the course of construction until next winter. When we directly authorize a battle ship it takes some time to prepare the plans.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, as I was proceeding to say, when we directly authorize the construction of a ship it takes the Department some time to prepare the plans in detail, and the plans are fully prepared before the contract is made.

So it seems, in view of the enormous amount of appropriations that this Congress has seen fit to authorize—double the amount of the appropriations of a single session that shocked the country a few years ago—in view of the fact that the people who are to bear these enormous burdens of taxation have not demanded this vast increase of the Navy, it seems to me that this body, in the interest of economy and because there is no fear of outside nations—no danger in delay in this matter—ought to be glad to defer this matter until the meeting of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

While the appropriation for these ships may not be authorized at this time, yet if their construction be authorized it entails upon the people of this country obligations amounting to millions of dollars for their final construction. We shall have put upon their shoulders obligations which, in my judgment, will carry twenty-five or thirty million dollars for these four ships.

As the gentleman from New York has already said, the Secretary of the Navy last session did not ask for battle ships. But this liberal Congress, against my protest, saw fit then to authorize the construction of seven battle ships and cruisers. Now this year the Secretary has asked for them because the liberality of the Congress toward the naval arm of the Government had probably astonished him, and seeing how easily Congress was induced to appropriate money last year for the authorization of ships he was emboldened to ask for these ships this year.

I do not censure the head of the Navy for wanting to see our Navy the strongest arm of the Government. Why, sir, it is the most natural thing in the world for every officer of the Government to want to see his Department the favored Department. Gentlemen are usually willing that those interests over which they have control should be advanced far beyond their just demands. Thus it is, no doubt, with the Naval Committee; and the zeal with which some of my Democratic colleagues stand by the Secretary of the Navy and the majority of the committee in advancing this great Department under the control of the Naval Committee is admirable.

I do not blame them for taking pride in it. No doubt they do it conscientiously in the name of duty; and I would not be understood as intimating otherwise. But as I see my duty as a representative of the American people I think we should first ascertain whether there is any pressing necessity for these enormous authorizations, and then in reaching a conclusion upon that point we ought to consider whether the people are prepared to pay these enormous expenses.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question? As I understand, he favors the Senate amendment, not so much because of what that amendment contains, but simply because it must ultimately result in the postponement, if not the abandonment, of our naval policy. Am I not right?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am not sure the gentleman is right. My position is this: As I have stated, I am opposed to the building of these ships——

Mr. WATSON. You voted against the authorization of them in this Congress——

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WATSON. And also in the last Congress, did you not?

Mr. KITCHIN. I did.

Mr. WATSON. Therefore you are in favor of the Senate amendment, not because of what it contains, but by reason of the fact that it proposes to postpone our naval programme.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. RIXEY. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. I think, as a clear business proposition, if I were in favor of building these ships—if I were in favor of our Government having, regardless of necessity and expense, the greatest navy on the seas—even then I would think it a wise thing for the American Congress to instruct the Secretary of the Navy to lay before Congress all the information possible on these subjects, because in my judgment the average member of Congress, however enlightened he may be on matters coming before his committee and on other matters pending in Congress, is not an expert on this naval business.

He does not fully understand the actual condition of the American Navy to-day, or the condition of other navies, or the necessities of our present situation. If this matter be deferred I hope that the cooler, soberer judgment of Congress, when it shall be another year removed from Dewey's great victory, which seemed to set this country afire on the subject of the Navy—when it shall be further removed from the applause of the naval victories of the Spanish war—will see that it is unnecessary to go ahead increasing the Navy at the enormous strides that we have been taking for the last three years.

Mr. DAYTON. I have promised to yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS]. If he is not present, I yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, if I were persuaded that the Senate amended the House provision in an effort to secure information upon the subjects mentioned in the amendment, I would feel more kindly toward that amendment. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the opposition coming from this side of the Chamber comes entirely from gentlemen who opposed the original House provision and who opposed the provision making appropriation for additional vessels in the naval bill for the present fiscal year.

I shall not take up the time of the House with an effort to go over the subject upon which information is asked. If the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Virginia desire information upon the subject of sheathing ships, they can obtain the views of the Naval Construction Board, if they will take the trouble to walk to the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, of the Admiral of the Navy, and of every chief of every bureau whose opinions are consulted upon matters of this sort, has been furnished to the committee over twelve months ago. If this provision be adopted it will but order a reprint of what those officers have already said or written and sent to committees of Congress.

If gentlemen desire information upon the subject of armor plate, the Naval Committee either of the House or the Senate, I have no doubt, will gladly furnish them with—I was about to say tons of literature on the subject. If they desire information upon the question of superimposed turrets, they can have the opinion of the board of construction. The head of every bureau has given his opinion upon the question.

If gentlemen desire information upon the question what guns are to be used on our ships, they may have the opinion already furnished to the committee by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. Thus it will be seen that every question enumerated in the proposed amendment has been gone over by the heads of the different bureaus and has been fully discussed in hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky inform us whether these questions that he says have been gone over have been solved, and whether the Navy Department is now ready to submit the solution.

Mr. WHEELER. They have, and the Navy Department has not reached the solution which it requires, but that Department is acting upon the solution. It has not been the unanimous judgment of the heads of the bureaus upon the various questions mentioned here, but the consensus of the intelligent expert opinion of the bureaus has agreed upon a line of action, and the Department is pursuing that intelligent line.

It is true one of the members of the board of construction disagreed upon the subject of sheathing the ships, and I believe there was a like disagreement as to superimposed turrets, but on the question of armor and armament it is known to every man who has taken the pains to investigate the question that the matter suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, as to whether we should use Krupp armor or harveyized armor, is not a perplexing question.

Every country in the world now uses Krupp armor to cover the vitals of the ship and the rest is sheathed in great part with harveyized armor. As to what the best gun is, I confess we have never had that matter before us, and I undertake to say the Department would be averse to giving to Congress, for the use of the public, to pass judgment upon what would be the best guns to be used on our ships.

But, now, Mr. Speaker, why does the Senate make this proposition? Let us be honest about it. This Congress has been running away with the appropriations, and the gentleman from Illinois, and I am not charging him with insincerity, but as one of the leaders of his party, is trying to cut down the appropriations.

This is because you have run riot with the Treasury; it is because you squandered millions foolishly, that you are trying to make amends in the naval appropriation bill for the foolishness on other appropriation bills, and the gentleman has gathered in a few suckers on this side of the Chamber. But as to the real fact. It is because you have been guilty of wanton, almost criminal, extravagance, and now the gentleman is trying to cut it down at the expense of the American Navy.

Mr. RIXEY. I think after the statement of the gentleman that he has gathered in a few suckers of this side——

Mr. WHEELER. I had no reference to the gentleman.

Mr. RIXEY. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague does not understand me to reflect upon his integrity or that of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RIXEY. Does the gentleman mean by that we have changed our views?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; I am speaking of my colleagues on this side who are trying to join him.

Mr. VANDIVER. Did not the gentleman from Kentucky only a moment ago, in the early portion of his speech, speak of those gentlemen on this side of the Chamber who had originally opposed this increase?

Mr. WHEELER. I know that the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Missouri are sincere, because they have always been opposed to it. They uphold the gentleman from Illinois in his opposition, instead of holding him responsible for the extravagance; and I was referring to him. My colleagues from Missouri and from Virginia have always been outspoken in their opposition.

Mr. VANDIVER. I said in the opening of my remarks that I had not opposed a proper increase of the Navy, but that what I did wish to oppose was the rash, intemperate, hasty provision for the letting of contracts while the shipyards, as had been reported to the House, were full now and could not construct any more vessels at this time. I thought it was not good business prudence to authorize contracts under those circumstances.

Mr. RIXEY. In your reference to the suckers on this side of the House you seem to refer to those opposing your present view.

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague is oversensitive. I meant no attack upon the integrity of the gentleman's position. I think he is mistaken, but I do not believe that the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who are opposing this increase are moved by the same motives that move either the gentleman from Missouri or the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. VANDIVER. I hope that the gentleman will not persist in that statement. I have always opposed the increase, because I think that it is hasty and extravagant.

Mr. WHEELER. I will admit almost anything—any position the gentleman desires—if he will only permit me to go on with my argument.

Now, Mr. Speaker, going back to the proposition that gentlemen on the other side are opposed to this increase because they are conscious of the fact that appropriations have climbed too high—and that really, in my judgment, has moved the Senate to adopt this amendment—what will be the attitude of the country if a contingency such as might arise if we should have to assert the Monroe Doctrine? We are now talking about the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. Great Britain is opposing the position we take. Now, we want to maintain the dignity of the American Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. I had ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield four minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WHEELER. What would be the attitude of the American Government if Great Britain herself should undertake the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal? We might proclaim the Monroe Doctrine as much as we pleased, but what will be our attitude if some foreign government undertakes to say quit to our position in Cuba? What would be our attitude in the contingency that the Danish West India islands were sold to some other government instead of to the United States, as proposed? Will it be time for the consideration and construction of ships?

I desire to direct the attention of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber to this proposition, that our failure to have a good navy on the breaking out of the Spanish war cost this country five hundred and fifty millions of money—more than enough to make our Navy equal to that of any navy in the world. I do not desire, nor do I intend to draw a comparison between the Navy of the United States and the navy of any other foreign country. It is not proper that such comparisons should be made in this House by gentlemen.

I advocate the construction of these additional ships, not as a measure of war, not in the hope of raising the expectation that they will be used as a weapon of offense, but in the belief that a good Navy will prevent hostilities. That is why I am in favor of the House provision. I am persuaded that if the House desires to disagree to the position recommended by the House committee, the part of wisdom will be that we disagree to the Senate amendment and declare that we will build no battle ships or cruisers this year.

Let us be sincere; because these gentlemen on this side of the Chamber have declared in favor of the Senate amendment, let them be frank enough to say that they advocate it because by postponing the construction of the battle ships they think it will ultimately result in not having them built at all.

Mr. RIXEY. I beg your pardon. My friend from North Carolina suggested that.

Mr. WHEELER. I say I understand the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Virginia in their position on that matter.

One word more and I am through. The House has solemnly declared that it would authorize the construction of two battle ships and two cruisers. If it desires to recede from that position it can do so. But I desire briefly to answer the argument advanced by the gentlemen on the other side. I have received the following letter from the Navy Department, which answers much of their contention:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 19, 1901.

SIR: In response to your letter of the 16th instant asking for information upon the three following points affecting the advisability of authorizing additional naval vessels, namely:

(1) "That a number of our ships are out of commission and not in active service;

(2) "That we have not enough officers and men to man the ships already ordered: and

(3) "That the shipbuilders of the United States are not prepared to build ships already ordered by Congress;"

I have the honor to state as follows:

(1) The vessels at present out of commission and not in active service are generally retained in that condition for necessary repairs and will, from time to time, be commissioned as repairs are completed. The Department has also adopted the policy of holding vessels in reserve—as is the battle ship Indiana at this time—having on board what may be termed a skeleton complement of officers and men, sufficient to keep them in a general state of readiness from which they can be quickly prepared for active service by increasing their complements to the regular number.

(2) There is an insufficiency of officers in the lower grades, those who do duty as watch and division officers. The Department trusts that this deficiency will be made good by authorization of Congress.

The 5,000 enlisted men provided for by the pending naval appropriation bill will, if said bill becomes a law, be sufficient to man the vessels that will probably be completed during the next two fiscal years.

(3) The Bureau of Construction and Repair reports that the shipbuilders are prepared to build the vessels, two battle ships and two armored cruisers, provided for in the House bill for the increase of the Navy. This source of information upon the branch of your inquiry here referred to is the best available to the Department, and the Bureau reports that, in its opinion, contract can be made for these additional ships.

Very respectfully,

F. W. HACKETT,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES K. WHEELER,
House of Representatives.

When the gentlemen suggest that there are many ships not now in commission, that is true. The policy of the Department is to keep as many ships as possible in the United States with skeleton crews so as to save the expense to the American Government.

We can build the ships, we have got the men to man them, and if we can get the Senate to agree to it we will have the officers to control them. It is known to every man that it takes from twelve to eighteen months to have the plans prepared in the Department and get ready to build a ship, and that it will be eighteen months before the keels of these ships are laid down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, much as I respect the judgment of my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER], who has just addressed the House, I am compelled to vote against the proposition so forcibly and eloquently urged by him. I have listened in vain for sufficient reasons to warrant the immediate appropriation of $25,000,000 for battle ships and armored cruisers.

The ink is scarcely dry upon contracts entered into by the Navy Department for the construction of battle ships and cruisers which will take several years to complete. Why the haste? What mighty danger is confronting us that demands such precipitate action?

Ah, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, it is not the sober, conservative spirit of a great and splendid people that is crying out for mighty navies and standing armies and the concomitants of a barbarous, warlike age. It is the hysterical, explosive, jingo spirit, born of our present liaison with imperialism, which cries out for war, and which would make of our coast a bristling fortress and darken the seas with the ships of war and cause the earth to tremble with the tread of marching hosts.

We are living in the dawn of a new century. We have wiped from our brows the sorrows and blood of the past, and welcome ineffable brightness of the coming day. This is a Christian nation, and it should not stand in the arena of nations as the champion of war and the protagonist of unholy physical force.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Does the gentleman believe that the present naval strength of the United States is sufficient?

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that question is not necessarily involved in this matter. But I will frankly state to my friend that, in my opinion, considering the many vessels for the Navy which have been ordered and can not be completed for several years, and the fact that it would be difficult to contract during the next year at a reasonable price for the construction of more battle ships and cruisers, and further taking into account all our surroundings, it is the part of wisdom and patriotism to call a halt for the present. Marvelous advances are being made in mechanical sciences, in shipbuilding, and in the appliances of war.

The guns now being invented may make a battle ship of but slight advantage. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another side to this question. I know that it is popular in places to glorify our Army and Navy, to increase the martial spirit, and encourage the ostentatious display of military power. This same spirit has found its way into the nations of the past. It is not the spirit that builds commonwealths and founds nations. This spirit is not the friend of civilization; it never measures the progress of a people.

It is the unerring sign of decadence. And this is a Republic, and ours a Christian nation! Why, we should turn from the sanguinary battlefield to the arts of peace. Our faces should be bathed in the radiance of spiritual and intellectual power; our hands should not be stained by the practices of monarchies and the conduct of despots. Our Republic should be the evangel of the coming day, the prophet of an era of righteousness and peace. It should not alone preach Christ, but it should practice Christian precepts.

If we increase our Navy, it is an invitation, which permits no declination, for European nations to strengthen theirs. If we expend millions for military and naval purposes, the force of the example is immediately felt upon the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Speaker, are we not mistaking the purpose, the high mission, of this Republic? It should be the great moral force among the nations of the world.

As such it will be more potential than if encased in steel and guarded by forces that seem more terrible than an army with banners.

The law of peace will supersede the law of war.

Mr. WATSON. May I ask if the gentleman ever voted for the construction of any ship which is now afloat?

Mr. KING. I am not sure, but I think not, Mr. Speaker. But I am free to say that if it is the purpose of the party in power to set the pace in the building of war vessels and in preparing for imperialistic policies, I shall not give my vote in aid of such designs.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House have not evolved a plan for the American Navy. I remember that the chairman of the committee was interrogated when this matter was under discussion, when the bill was up for consideration, as to what the plan of the Naval Committee contemplated, and he could vouchsafe no reply.

The committee had not determined how big our Navy should be, had not determined the character of the vessels which we should build; and it was evident the committee was appropriating millions in a spasmodic, seemingly purposeless manner. If we are to increase the Navy, let us adopt a plan, outline a programme, and then proceed to its execution.

Mr. Speaker, I think it ill becomes a Democrat, in view of the martial spirit abroad in the land, and this military intoxication which has made so many drunk, and the determination of the party in power to embark upon a career of colonial conquest and dangerous imperialism, to support the polices and principles of our Republican friends. I am not surprised at the Republican party being extravagant. It has taught us that Republicanism is synonomous with extravagance.

I can not complain at the Republican party for expending nearly $400,000,000 for the military and naval arms of the Government, because it would be of no avail. But it seems to me that just cause for complaint would rest against Democrats when they give aid and comfort to the Republican party in the great extravagance and outrageous expenditures which have characterized its record in this and the preceding Congress.

Why, Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, when we had a billion-dollar Congress the American people were so outraged at the extravagance of that Congress that the party, so far as it controlled the legislative branch of the Government, was at the next election hurled from power. But we shall soon be confronted with a picture in this country of a $2,000,000,000 Congress, a billion-dollar session.

Democrats, though they are not charged with the administration of the affairs of the Government, have, in my opinion, devolved upon them the duty that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] adverted to the other evening in his most adroit, ingenious, and altogether patriotic speech.

I do not believe it is right for the Democratic party to stand here in the House and see extravagant appropriations made and not lift their voices against them. I think it is the duty of the Democratic party to join hands with patriotic Republicans, if any there be, in stemming the tide of extravagance and appropriations which is sweeping the land, and to employ every possible means to protect the people from exploitation and preserve and vindicate the institutions of the Republic. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, after which I shall ask the gentleman from Virginia to conclude his time, as I desire to say a few words to close the debate.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the gentleman from Utah has seen fit to thrust into this great national, patriotic question a partisan harangue having no reference whatever to the subject under discussion. The only criticism of the present programme that the gentleman from Utah offers is that it is not a programme, and that he for one will refuse to follow the Naval Committee, because it has not seen fit to fix definitely the number of vessels of which the American Navy shall be ultimately composed.

Mr. Speaker, human foresight is, of necessity, limited. No man can lift the veil and see into the future with sufficient accuracy to say how many vessels shall constitute the American Navy of the future. All that we need to do is to provide for the present and permit the future to provide for itself. The gentleman says that a Christian nation should not build a navy, should not provide armies, and then admits that in the past he has voted for the construction of some of the ships that are now afloat upon the waters of the deep. Strange ideas of Christianity! Why, Mr. Speaker, he says that a Christian may carry a revolver in each of three pockets, and that if we propose to give him another in self-defense, it is against the principles and precepts of Christianity. In other words, we as American people may authorize and own 20 battle ships, but the very moment we make a move to construct more, to place our Navy before and not behind the nations of the world, consulted upon matters of this sort, has been furnished to the committee over twelve months ago. If this provision be adopted it will but order a reprint of what those officers have already said or written and sent to committees of Congress.

If gentlemen desire information upon the subject of armor plate, the Naval Committee either of the House or the Senate, I have no doubt, will gladly furnish them with—I was about to say tons of literature on the subject. If they desire information upon the question of superimposed turrets, they can have the opinion of the board of construction. The head of every bureau has given his opinion upon the question.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky inform us whether these questions that he says have been gone over have been solved, and whether the Navy Department is now ready to submit the solution.

Mr. WHEELER. They have, and the Navy Department has not reached the solution which it requires, but that Department is acting upon the solution. It has not been the unanimous judgment of the heads of the bureaus upon the various questions mentioned here, but the consensus of the intelligent expert opinion of the bureaus has agreed upon a line of action, and the Department is pursuing that intelligent line.

Hon. CHARLES K. WHEELER,
House of Representatives.

When the gentlemen suggest that there are many ships not now in commission, that is true. The policy of the Department is to keep as many ships as possible in the United States with skeleton crews so as to save the expense to the American Government.

We can build the ships, we have got the men to man them, and if we can get the Senate to agree to it we will have the officers to control them. It is known to every man that it takes from twelve to eighteen months to have the plans prepared in the Department and get ready to build a ship, and that it will be eighteen months before the keels of these ships are laid down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, much as I respect the judgment of my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER], who has just addressed the House, I am compelled to vote against the proposition so forcibly and eloquently urged by him. I have listened in vain for sufficient reasons to warrant the immediate appropriation of $25,000,000 for battle ships and armored cruisers.

The ink is scarcely dry upon contracts entered into by the Navy Department for the construction of battle ships and cruisers which will take several years to complete. Why the haste? What mighty danger is confronting us that demands such precipitate action?

Ah, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, it is not the sober, conservative spirit of a great and splendid people that is crying out for mighty navies and standing armies and the concomitants of a barbarous, warlike age. It is the hysterical, explosive, jingo spirit, born of our present liaison with imperialism, which cries out for war, and which would make of our coast a bristling fortress and darken the seas with the ships of war and cause the earth to tremble with the tread of marching hosts.

We are living in the dawn of a new century. We have wiped from our brows the sorrows and blood of the past, and welcome ineffable brightness of the coming day. This is a Christian nation, and it should not stand in the arena of nations as the champion of war and the protagonist of unholy physical force.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Does the gentleman believe that the present naval strength of the United States is sufficient?

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that question is not necessarily involved in this matter. But I will frankly state to my friend that, in my opinion, considering the many vessels for the Navy which have been ordered and can not be completed for several years, and the fact that it would be difficult to contract during the next year at a reasonable price for the construction of more battle ships and cruisers, and further taking into account all our surroundings, it is the part of wisdom and patriotism to call a halt for the present. Marvelous advances are being made in mechanical sciences, in shipbuilding, and in the appliances of war.

The guns now being invented may make a battle ship of but slight advantage. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another side to this question. I know that it is popular in places to glorify our Army and Navy, to increase the martial spirit, and encourage the ostentatious display of military power. This same spirit has found its way into the nations of the past. It is not the spirit that builds commonwealths and founds nations. This spirit is not the friend of civilization; it never measures the progress of a people.

It is the unerring sign of decadence. And this is a Republic, and ours a Christian nation! Why, we should turn from the sanguinary battlefield to the arts of peace. Our faces should be bathed in the radiance of spiritual and intellectual power; our hands should not be stained by the practices of monarchies and the conduct of despots. Our Republic should be the evangel of the coming day, the prophet of an era of righteousness and peace. It should not alone preach Christ, but it should practice Christian precepts.

If we increase our Navy, it is an invitation, which permits no declination, for European nations to strengthen theirs. If we expend millions for military and naval purposes, the force of the example is immediately felt upon the other side of the Atlantic. Mr. Speaker, are we not mistaking the purpose, the high mission, of this Republic? It should be the great moral force among the nations of the world.

As such it will be more potential than if encased in steel and guarded by forces that seem more terrible than an army with banners.

The law of peace will supersede the law of war.

Mr. WATSON. May I ask if the gentleman ever voted for the construction of any ship which is now afloat?

Mr. KING. I am not sure, but I think not, Mr. Speaker. But I am free to say that if it is the purpose of the party in power to set the pace in the building of war vessels and in preparing for imperialistic policies, I shall not give my vote in aid of such designs.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House have not evolved a plan for the American Navy. I remember that the chairman of the committee was interrogated when this matter was under discussion, when the bill was up for consideration, as to what the plan of the Naval Committee contemplated, and he could vouchsafe no reply.

The committee had not determined how big our Navy should be, had not determined the character of the vessels which we should build; and it was evident the committee was appropriating millions in a spasmodic, seemingly purposeless manner. If we are to increase the Navy, let us adopt a plan, outline a programme, and then proceed to its execution.

Mr. Speaker, I think it ill becomes a Democrat, in view of the martial spirit abroad in the land, and this military intoxication which has made so many drunk, and the determination of the party in power to embark upon a career of colonial conquest and dangerous imperialism, to support the polices and principles of our Republican friends. I am not surprised at the Republican party being extravagant. It has taught us that Republicanism is synonomous with extravagance.

I can not complain at the Republican party for expending nearly $400,000,000 for the military and naval arms of the Government, because it would be of no avail. But it seems to me that just cause for complaint would rest against Democrats when they give aid and comfort to the Republican party in the great extravagance and outrageous expenditures which have characterized its record in this and the preceding Congress.

Why, Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, when we had a billion-dollar Congress the American people were so outraged at the extravagance of that Congress that the party, so far as it controlled the legislative branch of the Government, was at the next election hurled from power. But we shall soon be confronted with a picture in this country of a $2,000,000,000 Congress, a billion-dollar session.

Democrats, though they are not charged with the administration of the affairs of the Government, have, in my opinion, devolved upon them the duty that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] adverted to the other evening in his most adroit, ingenious, and altogether patriotic speech.

I do not believe it is right for the Democratic party to stand here in the House and see extravagant appropriations made and not lift their voices against them. I think it is the duty of the Democratic party to join hands with patriotic Republicans, if any there be, in stemming the tide of extravagance and appropriations which is sweeping the land, and to employ every possible means to protect the people from exploitation and preserve and vindicate the institutions of the Republic. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, after which I shall ask the gentleman from Virginia to conclude his time, as I desire to say a few words to close the debate.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the gentleman from Utah has seen fit to thrust into this great national, patriotic question a partisan harangue having no reference whatever to the subject under discussion. The only criticism of the present programme that the gentleman from Utah offers is that it is not a programme, and that he for one will refuse to follow the Naval Committee, because it has not seen fit to fix definitely the number of vessels of which the American Navy shall be ultimately composed.

Mr. Speaker, human foresight is, of necessity, limited. No man can lift the veil and see into the future with sufficient accuracy to say how many vessels shall constitute the American Navy of the future. All that we need to do is to provide for the present and permit the future to provide for itself. The gentleman says that a Christian nation should not build a navy, should not provide armies, and then admits that in the past he has voted for the construction of some of the ships that are now afloat upon the waters of the deep. Strange ideas of Christianity! Why, Mr. Speaker, he says that a Christian may carry a revolver in each of three pockets, and that if we propose to give him another in self-defense, it is against the principles and precepts of Christianity. In other words, we as American people may authorize and own 20 battle ships, but the very moment we make a move to construct more, to place our Navy before and not behind the nations of the world, then the gentleman says we are violating the precepts of Christianity. Strange idea of Christianity!

But, Mr. Speaker, these questions are not immediately concerned. The question is, Shall we temporarily abandon; nay, not that, shall we forever abandon the House programme and launch upon the idea as advanced by the Senate? For I undertake to say that the Senate programme does not mean a temporary abandonment of the programme upon which we have entered for the construction of a navy. When the next session shall come around, the very gentlemen who are now advocating postponement will be the very first to sound the alarm of "increasing expenditures and diminishing revenues," and be the very first to ask that the naval programme of the House shall be abandoned till war shall again confront us as a people. I am opposed to the Senate programme because it means absolutely nothing.

It means nothing, Mr. Speaker, that has not already been accomplished by the Naval Committee, by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Naval Committee of the Senate, by every bureau that constitutes the naval power of this country. Does my friend from West Virginia, or my friend from Illinois, who seems to have taken such a deep interest in opposition to the project of this committee, does he suppose that any one item mentioned in the Senate programme has not been in the past examined by the Secretary of the Navy; that we have not had hearings oft and repeated, over and over again, in the Committee on Naval Affairs, as to whether or not we should have superimposed turrets, as to whether or not cruisers should be sheathed or unsheathed, and whether or not we should have harveyized or Krupp armor? Is any new problem here submitted for our consideration?

Does he suppose that there is one single question presented in this programme or in the amendment of the Senate that has not been thought over and fought over for the last dozen years in this country, until, if we know anything about it, we know to-day we are right upon what we advocate as a House committee? What new is there to be learned? The gentleman says that in the next six months we can learn something new. About what, pray? Does the Senate suppose that anything new can be learned in the next six months on these questions?

It is further provided in this amendment that the Secretary of the Navy shall communicate his views to the House.

The Secretary of the Navy has views now—views on every proposition contained in the Senate amendment. Has the gentleman sought to obtain them? These views are not mere idle opinions, but firm convictions, the result of profound study, wise research, and long experience. Why are not these views sufficient at this time?

Mr. DAYTON. I now desire, before closing the debate on this side, to yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS].

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, as I recollect, one of the first speeches that I had the honor of delivering on the floor of this House was in advocacy of the increase of the Navy; and to-day, when I am about to say in this House the last few words I ever may say, it is indeed a gratification to me to stand here and advocate all the increase of the Navy that the naval bill proposes.

From the commencement of our Government down to the present day the people of these United States have always been in hearty sympathy with the Navy; and upon every occasion, especially in time of war, when the Navy has been called upon for action, not only have the vessels been ready, but the men who stood behind the guns were well able to manage the great fighting machines which the Congress of the United States had provided for the nation's defense.

Mr. Speaker, we hear all around on this side of the House and from many gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber that the time has come for a halt in our naval appropriations; that the time has come when we should no longer increase the vessels of the Navy. It is a matter of fact that every great power on the face of the earth to-day is spending more money for the increase of its navy than for the enlargement of any other branch or arm of its defensive service. It would seem that in view of this, especially when we consider what other nations are doing, the appropriations called for in this bill are neither large nor extravagant.

Mr. SNODGRASS. One question, if the gentleman will allow me. What does he think about the policy of withholding our consent to proper and necessary appropriations in order to shield the Republicans from the effect of extravagant appropriations?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS] has expired.

Mr. DRIGGS. I wish I could talk a little longer, for then it would be possible to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee, as well as to continue my argument.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are twelve minutes remaining on the side of the gentleman from Virginia and eleven minutes on the other.

Mr. RIXEY. I yield all the time to my credit to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have the attention of the House for a very few minutes. In perfectly cold blood—in the light of sound judgment, if I have any—I desire to address myself for a very short time to the pending question, asking the attention of members of the House, appealing to their discretion, and at the same time to their patriotism.

This is not a sentimental matter; at least it should not be. I stand ready, without regard to the amount that it may require, to vote for the expenditure which may be needed to provide for a sufficient navy, with all that that means, and for a sufficient army, with all that that means. But "enough is as good as a feast," according to the old adage, and in these very few minutes I want to suggest whether at this time, from the standpoint of the Treasury, from the standpoint of the public defense, from the standpoint of sound business principles, we had not better halt at least one year in the authorization of additional naval vessels?

Now, what is the condition? I hold in my hand the report of the Naval Committee on this bill. We have a navy of 254 vessels, and we have 56 vessels in the Auxiliary Navy, making 310. We have just placed under contract 5 battle ships, I believe, and 6 cruisers. Various other ships, amounting in round numbers to 50, are in course of construction. We have already in course of construction great naval ships that will cost $65,000,000 to complete; and in that statement I do not count anything that is included in the $77,000,000 bill. After the money appropriated in this bill is exhausted and all the money paid out, there will be due, to complete vessels in process of construction under contract, $65,000,000.

I hope and believe that these vessels are the best that are being constructed anywhere. We already have 1,782 officers to care for the vessels now authorized. To care for these additional vessels will require 900 more officers than the law now provides. We now have 22,500 seamen. To care for the vessels authorized will require at least 10,000 additional seamen. I am quite content that the personnel of our Navy should be increased in this way, if necessary; but gentlemen must recollect that on top of all this—besides the cost of officers and men of the Navy—it will require 5 per cent a year to keep up the repairs, a mere bagatelle if the defense of national honor requires it, but a very important matter if it does not.

I have examined the report made last year by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I have been a hop-and-skip student of the conditions—that is all. But I believe I am justified in saying, taking into consideration the personnel of our Navy—taking into consideration our condition—that when our Navy as now authorized is complete it will be the best navy on earth save alone that of Great Britain; and we need not fear the navy of Great Britain, because Canada for 3,000 miles along our border is a hostage in that respect, to say nothing about other things. [Applause.]

Now, I believe that with a naval bill carrying $77,000,000, and with $65,000,000 to be provided in the future for vessels under construction—the naval bill merely authorizing these four vessels, which in the aggregate are to cost $25,000,000, without appropriating one dollar for them—I believe, in the existing condition, we can with safety to the national defense wait until next winter before we authorize the construction of any other ships. The other branch of Congress so believes unanimously, as I understand they made this amendment.

In addition to that, I am told by naval experts that the navy-yards of the United States competent to build these ships are full and running over with other contracts. Everybody understands about the high price of material. There is a chance that it will not go higher but may go lower. I would not halt on account of the cost of material or any such consideration, if the national defense required action at once. But with the great improvements in naval architecture, and in view of the inventions made from time to time, I believe that from the standpoint of wisdom and patriotism we can afford to pass this Senate amendment. Let the Navy Department inquire into this subject and report to the next Congress, and then let us take up this question and deal with it twelve months from to-day. That is all I wish to say. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has made a very strange change of front since this bill was discussed in the House before its passage. On that occasion he yielded his assent to it. If I am not mistaken, he voted for the authorization of the two battle ships and these two cruisers.

Mr. CANNON. I have one minute of my time left, and I would like to occupy that minute.

Mr. DAYTON. Very well; let the gentleman use his minute.

Mr. CANNON. My friend recollects that on the passage of this bill I addressed a few broken remarks to the House——

Mr. DAYTON. Broken entirely.

Mr. CANNON. Expressing my sincere belief that we had gone far enough in this direction, but I stated that I would vote for the construction of these four vessels. Yes; I did vote for them. But what difference does that make? I might vote a thousand ways and be dead and glorified, or the others "d" [laughter], and what difference would that make in regard to the pending proposition?

Mr. DAYTON. But, Mr. Speaker, when the conferees appointed in good faith by the House to carry out his vote and the views of the House, have performed that duty, and he sees an opportunity to go back on his and the House's action, and he is quick to do it. Let it pass for what it is worth and let him occupy that position. One thing I want to answer now. I want to say to you that the statement that the shipyards are full and unable to construct these battle ships is not based on fact. I have from one of these shipyards a telegram received in response to one sent after I heard that statement. It is from the firm which built the Oregon, one that stands without a peer in the shipbuilding companies of the world—the Union Iron Works. The members state that they are prepared to build these new vessels themselves without crowding.

I have telegrams from other yards which give me the information that, instead of being crowded with the construction of our battle ships, they could without trouble proceed at once to the building of 15 additional ones. So that argument ought to be dismissed. It ought not to be considered, in fact. Our navy-yards to-day are engaged in constructing vessels for Russia and for other nations building up their navies, while we are poling along with a smaller number of battle ships built and authorized than has any great power of the world, save and except Italy. I have before me a statement showing the number of the ships. I want to call attention to the fact that the Board of General Construction and Naval Programme, headed by Admiral Dewey and other able and efficient naval officers, recommended an increase in our Navy of more than 26 vessels.

The Secretary of the Navy asked for 18, and the House committee brought in a provision authorizing 4. This alone, Mr. Speaker, shows that the House committee has been conservative in their plan and programme; that they have been seeking to build up this class of vessels without which, if war should come to us, we would be weak. The gentleman calls attention to the fact that we increase the construction. Does he remember the fact that this Senate proposition does not settle one question, but brings them all back here as a bone of contention to be argued and wrangled and thrashed out again, together with a large number of other questions?

With all due respect, I want to call your attention to the fact that the Senate provision is a proposition to build up the American Navy with Congressional wind and argument instead of with the cold steel and armor which would make vessels that can fight, if fighting is necessary. They propose to enter upon a discussion of the technical questions that have been arising between the scientists and experts. That is the proposition of the Senate.

Now, my friend calls attention to the fact that $65,000,000 worth of work is under contract. Let me call attention to the fact that our total Navy—if you authorize these battle ships and the program provided for in this bill—the total value of the vessels called for will not amount to the sum which has been appropriated for pensions for the old soldiers of this country; and I am glad that we grant them those pensions. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if we had had a navy we we would not have had to pay out the $8,000,000,000 we expended in the war to defend the Union.

The gentleman from Iowa made a statement that struck every man in this House with force when he said that we had had six wars in a hundred and twenty-five years, and that had we been provided with a sufficient navy, in all human probability we would have had none. My friend, it is not a matter of investigating which is the best type, but it is a matter of preserving the peace. The best manner to preserve the peace is to be prepared for war, to be so equipped, to be so strong that other nations will not come to us and stir up and excite the country to war.

We had reliable information as to what the other nations of the world were doing. Germany has been referred to, and I simply use it as an illustration to show what the nations of the world are doing. She had provided a programme, which the gentleman from Utah seems desirous for us to adopt, providing for practically doubling the number of her naval vessels by the year 1916, whereby she would have not less than 42 battle ships, and would substitute for those that were old and in any way out of date new and improved ones. That plan was to be completed in 1916. Ten years have been cut off, and now it is provided that this programme shall be completed by 1906.

I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that every one of the nations of this world is making greater provision for the building of new vessels than we are providing for. Here are the programmes of the several nations:

New ships have been authorized as follows:

ENGLAND.

Battle ships, first class	2
Armored cruisers	6
Protected cruisers, second class	2
Sloops	2
Light-draft gunboats	2
Torpedo boats	2
Total	16

FRANCE.

Battle ships, first class	2
Armored cruiser	1
Destroyers	20
Submarines	[illegible]
Total	24

GERMANY.

Continuation of sixteen-year programme:

Battle ships	2
Large cruiser	1
Small cruisers	3
Total	18

ITALY.

No new vessels authorized for lack of money, but work to be continued on—

Battle ships of 12,500 tons	4
Battle ships of 8,500 tons	4
Total	8

Very recently laid down.

JAPAN.

Protected cruisers	2
Cruisers, third class	2
Destroyers and torpedo boats	8
Total	12

RUSSIA.

Battle ships, first class	2
Armored cruisers	2
Protected cruisers	2
Total	14

Is this programme unreasonable in the light of this comparison? Is it unreasonable for us to make that expenditure so that we may stand on a fair, or at least to some extent, on a fair basis with the other nations of the earth?

I want to say that whatever you may determine upon, I ask this House in all earnestness not to agree to the provision in the Senate amendment. Express your opinion if you will with reference to the number of these ships, but do not, for the sake of future Congresses, adopt this provision in the Senate amendment, that simply brings into this House a discussion that can not be wise—a discussion that ought not to be brought here about matters that experts disagree upon—as to our policy in regard to these different subjects.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate No. 88.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DAYTON. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 115, noes 52.

Mr. DAYTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 88, answered "present" 5, not voting 101; as follows:

On the naval bill:

Mr. KAHN with Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska.

Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," and I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska, and he voted "present," as above recorded.

The result was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request of the Senate for a further conference be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia moves that the House agree with the request of the Senate for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers on the part of the House Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. CUMMINGS.

TREATY STIPULATIONS BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up conference report on Senate bill 2799, to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th of December, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there a statement with the report?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is a statement, and I ask that the statement be read and the reading of the report be omitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the reading of the report be omitted and that the statement only be read. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before I consent, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask whether, if consent is given that the statement may be read and the reading of the report omitted, it will preclude a point of order against the entire report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the point of order, I have no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898, having met, after full and free conference have decided to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the bill of the Senate and agree to the said bill with the following amendments:

Section 1, page 1, line 4, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Section 3, page 2, line 22, strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "order."

Section 5, page 3, line 7, strike out all after the word "clerk" to and including the word "languages" in lines 7 and 8.

Section 6, page 4, line 17, strike out all after the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof a period.

Section 8, page 5, line 1, strike out the word "affidavits."

Section 8, page 5, line 8, strike out all after the word "commission" to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof a period.

Section 9, page 5, line 17, after the word "based" insert the words "together with an itemized schedule setting forth all damages claimed."

Section 9, page 5, line 17, strike out the word "it" and insert in lieu thereof the words "said petition."

Section 9, page 5, line 21, after the word "attorney," insert the words "or legal representative."

Section 9, page 5, line 22, after the word "agent," strike out the word "or;" and after the word "attorney" insert the words "or legal representative."

Section 12, page 7, line 5, strike out all after the word "commission" to the end of the section, and insert in lieu thereof the words "and no new trial or rehearing shall be had except upon motion made within sixty days of said award."

Strike out all of section 13, pages 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "When the commission is in doubt as to any question of law arising upon the facts in any case before them, they may state the facts and the question of law so arising and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision, and said court shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide the same."

Section 14, page 8, line 20, strike out all after the word "commission" to and including the word "claimant," in line 22.

Section 14, page 8, line 22, strike out the word "adjudged," and insert in lieu thereof the words "found to be."

Section 14, page 9, line 1, strike out all after the word "award," to and including the word "affirmance," in line 2.

GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
THAD. M. MAHON,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. B. FORAKER,
S. M. CULLOM,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

Section 1 is amended so as to make the number of members of the commission five instead of three.

Section 3 is amended so as to make all expenses, salaries, etc., payable on the order of the other members of the commission in case of absence of the president or his inability to act, instead of on the order of any one member of said commission.

Section 5 is amended by striking out the words "who shall be versed in the English and Spanish languages," and provides for a clerk to the commission without such qualifications.

Section 6 is amended by striking out the last six words, "or upon appeal from its awards," so as to conform with section 12 as amended, eliminating provisions for appeals.

Section 8 is amended by striking out the word "affidavit," in line 1, and all after the word "commission," line 8. This eliminates that part of section 8 which provided that affidavits on file with the State Department or in any other Department shall be furnished to the commission upon its order. It also eliminates that part of the section which provides that there "shall be given such weight, as evidence, as the said commission shall think just" to all reports, records, proceedings, and other documents now on file in any Department, or certified copies thereof, furnished to the commission upon its order. It also eliminates that part of the section authorizing the commission to "require other evidence."

Section 9, amended, provides for an itemized schedule, setting forth all damages claimed, together with a petition; also, that said claims and petition may be presented by a legal representative.

Section 12, amendment, provides that there shall be no appeals from awards, and that no rehearing or new trial shall be granted by said commission, except on motion made within sixty days from date of award.

Section 13, amendment, provides that when the commission is in doubt as to a question in law arising upon the facts in any case before them, that they may state the facts and questions of law so arising and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision, said court having jurisdiction to consider and decide the same, eliminating the provision for an appeal to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, the mode of procedure of said court as well as jurisdiction, and eliminates the limitations for taking appeals, making returns to the commission and the court of appeals, and for the payment of fees.

Section 14. Amendments 1 and 3 to section 14 are simply to conform with amendments to the bill, and amendment 2 is simply a change in phraseology.

GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
THAD. M. MAHON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a point of order; and the point of order I make is that the conferees in their report have exceeded the authority given them by the House in making their report on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on his point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the bill as now before the House was originally passed by the Senate. It came to the House, was reported by the House Committee on War Claims to the House, and the House, after consideration, sent the bill back to the Committee on Claims with instruction to report an amendment sending these claims to the Court of Claims instead of giving a commission authority to decide the question. Afterwards this matter was reported to the House by the Committee on Claims. When that report was taken up by the House the Chair properly held that the first question before the House was the consideration of and perfecting of the Senate bill. The House took up the Senate bill, considered it for the purpose of amendment, and perfected it. In that consideration there was but one change made in the Senate bill, and that was to strike out section 8, which had reference to the testimony that was to be taken before the commission. Therefore the only difference between the House and the Senate on the bill, so far as the bill itself was concerned, was the question as to whether section 8, relating to the testimony to be taken before the commission, should remain in the bill or be stricken out. After the Senate bill was perfected the House adopted a substitute directing the committee to send these claims to the Court of Claims instead of to a commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the Senate bill and the House substitute goes to the conference committee, the conference committee by this report not only rejects the House proposition sending these claims to the Court of Claims, but they go further. They not only adopt the Senate bill, not only amend section 8, that was in controversy between the two Houses, but go further and put in the bill provisions that were never in it when it came from the Senate here; provisions that were not considered by this House, that are entirely new matter.

The original bill provided for three commissioners at a salary of $5,000 each. The conferees added two more commissioners, and thus this bill gives five commissioners instead of three. There never was any controversy between the House and the Senate on that proposition.

But it goes further than that. When it comes down to the proposition of appeal, a very important feature of this bill, as the bill came from the Senate and was adopted by the House in Committee of the Whole, it provided that not only the claimant, but the Government of the United States, might have an appeal if either party was not satisfied with the decision of the commission. Now, since the bill has gone to conference, we find that the conferees have stricken out the right of appeal, either by the Government or by the claimant, and has put in a provision providing that no appeal shall lie unless these commissioners themselves shall certify the appeal; in other words, certify to the Supreme Court of the United States that there is some law, some legal point, which they desire to be determined. That is a very material change from either the Senate bill or the bill as sent by the House. It puts absolutely in the hands of five commissioners the final and exclusive right to give away or control the disposition of $50,000,000 without appeal by the Government or the claimant unless these five commissioners shall say themselves that an appeal ought to lie.

These provisions were not in the bill when it was before the House and not in the bill when it was before the Senate. These provisions are put in here by the conference committee, and I say under these circumstances that neither the House nor the Senate having contemplated such provisions they have exceeded their authority, and the point of order ought to lie against this bill.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that in parliamentary procedure, we having adopted a substitute that had no connection with the bill itself, there may be a very wide difference between the House and the Senate proposition, to which proposition they would have a right to come together. But there has been no effort made by the conferees to bring the House proposition and the Senate proposition together. They have simply rejected the House proposition, and then the five conferees who signed the conference report have written material and dangerous provisions into the bill.

Now, the proposition I make is this: I recognize the fact that there is no direct decision on this point which I am now raising, but I contend for the safety of the House and for the safety of legislation that comes before this body that when we have a Senate bill in the House and have considered it in Committee of the Whole, and afterwards adopted a substitute, and it goes back to the Senate with the provisions of the Senate bill, the authority of the conferees ought to be limited to these propositions of difference that exist between the House in Committee of the Whole and the Senate and not give the conferees the wide latitude, simply because we adopted a substitute, to put anything into the conference report that they in their own sweet will may desire to do.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill was reported from the Committee on War Claims as it came from the Senate without any amendment whatever. It was under consideration in this House and the House rejected the Senate bill in toto, in every particular, and struck out all after the enacting clause, and inserted an amendment by the way of a substitute. The Senate disagreed to that, and there being the differences between the two Houses—whether the Senate bill should be adopted, or the House substitute—the committee went to conference. After being in conference a while the House conferees agreed to recede from the House substitute. Now, that brought the Senate bill before the conferees that had been refused by the House, everything that was in it. Then the conferees took up the Senate bill, and the House conferees insisted that there should be some safeguards thrown around it, and after going through it they made a report to this House, and I take the position that the point of order is not well taken, because the whole Senate bill was in dispute and had been rejected by the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think there can be no question in regard to this point of order. I read from the Digest, pages 416–417:

It has been held that conferees may include in their report matters which are germane modifications of subjects in disagreement between the Houses and committed to the conference.—(1418, 1419) 3-41, Globe, p. 1916; 1-42, Journal, p. 2515, Record, p. 7932.

A disagreement to an amendment in the nature of a substitute having been referred to conferees, it was held to be in order for them to report a new bill on the same subject.—(1420) 2-33, Journal, p. 414, Globe, p. 1502.

That is all I care to say.

The SPEAKER. The current of authorities in regard to the action of the conferees is that they must be held strictly to the consideration of such matters as are in issue between the two Houses. That is the general governing principle, and a most valuable one, and a necessary one. In this case, however, the Chair sees no difficulty. As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], the Senate presents a proposition for a commission; the House turns that down, so to speak, and adopts an amendment, by way of substitute, providing that these Spanish claims shall be referred for determination to the Court of Claims. In other words, the Senate contends for a commission, the House for the Court of Claims. The method of treating these Spanish claims is thus put in issue. The House, when it sent over to the Senate its amendment by way of substitute, said: "We will not entertain your method; we have a better one; we offer you a substitute, whereby these matters shall be referred to the Court of Claims instead of a commission." That puts in issue every question bearing upon this controversy between the two Houses. The able remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] have not suggested a single question that is not brought in issue between the two Houses in the present position of this question. The conferees have not gone beyond the matters in issue. On this point the Chair will ask the Clerk to read from the Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representatives, section 1420, a decision made by Mr. Speaker Colfax.

The Clerk read as follows:

1420. A disagreement to an amendment in the nature of a substitute having been referred to conferees, it was held to be in order for them to report a new bill on the same subject. On March 3, 1865, Mr. Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 51) entitled, "An act to establish a bureau of freedmen's affairs," reported that the Senate had receded from their amendment, which was a substitute, and the committee had agreed upon, as a substitute, a new bill, entitled "An act to establish a bureau for the relief of freedmen and refugees."

As soon as the report had been read William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point that the report did not come within the scope of the conference committee. It did not report the proceedings of the Senate, or an agreement by the committee on an amendment to the Senate's amendment to the House bill, but it reported an entire substitute for both the original bill and the substitute adopted by the Senate, and it established a department unprovided for by either of the other bills.

The Speaker said:

"The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language, or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead. Two separate bills have been referred to the committee, and they can take either one of them, or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either. They have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them."

On an appeal the Chair was sustained—yeas 89, nays 35.

The SPEAKER. The House will readily see that the precedent just read bears strongly on this question, although in the present case the conferees have not gone so far as they did in that case. There is nothing here that is not germane to the main issue. In reference to no matter in controversy between the two Houses have the conferees attempted to trench upon or change a single expression that the two Houses had agreed upon. The Senate sends to this House a bill for which the House presents a substitute, and the report of the conferees seeks only to treat the matters in issue. The Chair feels clear that he is justified in overruling the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] does not propose to bring this important question, involving something like $50,000,000, to a vote without an opportunity for some discussion.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the House now for two years at different times. The gentleman from Alabama has been heard upon it fully. I do not think it would be fair that the time of the House should be occupied now in discussing the bill for the fourth or fifth time. Every man here is familiar with every section and line of it, I think.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. "The gentleman from Alabama" may have occupied time—more than his share—but there are other gentlemen who desire to be heard.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to dissent from my colleagues on the conference committee, but I declined to sign this report, feeling, as I did, that this House had twice acted on the substitute, had twice refused to concur in the Senate bill, and that, under the circumstances, I had no right to agree to so radical a change as was proposed in the Senate bill. I felt that in thus declining I was acting in accordance with the wishes of the House. This House had declared that it did not desire to establish a commission for the consideration of these Spanish-war claims. It had twice refused to do so. Why create a commission making five new places, when we have already an organized court fully empowered to carry out the wishes of these claimants? And, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that these claimants have any higher claim on the Government of the United States than that class of litigants who are forced to go before the Court of Claims to have their rights adjudicated.

Gentlemen say that the Court of Claims is crowded. I have investigated that matter and I find that it is not the court that is crowded. There are a number of cases there in the hands of attorneys that are not pushed. But I remember—and gentlemen on this floor will bear me out in the statement—that claims which were referred to the Court of Claims last year by this House have come back to us at this session with adjudications by the court. I learn the great difficulty has been that attorneys have neglected to prepare their cases, and there is the trouble; not because the court is overcrowded.

The Senate proposition to which this conference report asks us to agree proposes to create a new tribunal with five new judges—a commission, if you please. It seems to me that this country is tired of commissions. We have more commissions now than we have courts. Every matter that the parties do not desire to send to a court is sent to a commission. I appeal to gentlemen on this floor that we ought to have a good reason for departing in these cases from the regular tribunals and establishing at great expense this commission.

Why, sir, here is a provision taking from litigants before this commission the right of appeal. The gentleman from Alabama did not precisely state the effect of section 13 as embodied in this bill and reported by the conferees. I will read it.

When the commission is in doubt on any question of law arising from the facts in any case before them, they may state the facts and the question of law so arising, and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision; and the said court shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide the same.

It will thus be seen that this provision allows no right of appeal whatever to litigants, but simply empowers these commissioners, if they should be in doubt, to apply to the court for a decision on the law of the case. Where is there any warrant under the Constitution for any such proceeding? Where is there any warrant in justice? And who has the right to say that these commissioners can make any such demand? What would the Supreme Court of the United States say to such a demand? There is no obligation on their part to respond to such a demand.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was pending before the House heretofore, I referred to the fact that a case in which, while not a member of the House, I had been engaged as an attorney, had been delayed for a long time in the Court of Claims. I did not remember the title of the case. I received a letter from the Attorney-General asking me to what case I referred; and I gave him the title of the case as well as I could. I have here his letter, in which he explains to me that that action was brought in 1893, and he holds out very considerable hope that some time during the next year the case will be disposed of. However, it is due to him to explain that the delay has not been altogether on the side of the Government, although it has been in a very large part. But my main purpose was to read a paragraph of his letter referring to the condition of business in the Court of Claims.

Allow me to bring this long communication to a close by saying that there is no doubt that the Court of Claims is overburdened, but this is largely because of the fact that Congress dumps every sort of puzzling question upon that court, under the provisions of either the Bowman Act or the Tucker Act; and often where a case has been referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act and decided adversely to the claimant, it reappears by reference of Congress within a short time, under the Tucker Act, so that between the two acts we have a sort of an endless chain of cases.

Yours, very sincerely,

L. A. PRADT,
Assistant Attorney-General.

I desire to make an explanation that the Attorney-General's Office might have the benefit of this statement, that a case that has been pending nearly nine years was not delayed altogether on account of their failure to prepare.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I had a case brought to my attention which had been pending in the court for a number of years. The plea had been filed for three years as to loyalty, and I was informed that Attorney Pradt had not answered it. I was requested to see him and see if he would not hurry up the case. So there is a case in which the attorney was guilty of laches.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No doubt the fault is on both sides.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no man in zealous advocacy of economy in all departments of Government; but notwithstanding the fact that the proposition before us contemplates the creation of a commission and the added expense of the commissioners, I believe we ought to stand by this conference report. The Government of the United States has solemnly, in its treaty, shouldered the debt that would otherwise have fallen upon Spain for injuries done to American citizens during the war. We have promised to pay them. We have promised it in the most solemn form; and now to relegate these claims to the present Court of Claims is simply, in the language of Shakespeare, "to keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope."

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Why do you think the Court of Claims will not decide readily upon these claims?

Mr. DAVIS. Because they are not doing it in claims now before them. They are not doing it on claims growing out of the civil war, which has been ended for thirty-five years.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. They have already acted upon a lot of cases presented to them through an act passed the last session of this Congress.

Mr. DAVIS. That may be true.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I am informed by some parties interested that the fact is that these cases have failed to be settled because the attorneys did not prepare them, and that it is not the fault of the court.

Mr. DAVIS. However that may be, the fact remains that there are questions yet pending in the Court of Claims relating to transactions during the civil war, thirty-five years ago.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question of information?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly; but I have only three minutes.

Mr. KLUTTZ. What is the reason that appeal should not lie from this commission, just as it does from the Court of Claims?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not going to discuss the various details in the conference report. The gentlemen in charge of this report will do that. The appeals here provided for appear to be planned somewhat after the order of appeals to the United States Supreme Court. The provision appears to be fair to both sides. The point I make, however, is this: Do we mean to keep the solemn contract of this Government? Are obligations resting upon the people in their collective capacity as binding as when entered into by the individual. For one, I believe they are. For one, I am anxious to see my country as prompt in keeping its obligations as I should expect an honest man to be in keeping his. [Applause.]

To relegate these claims to the Court of Claims will merely postpone the settlement of them indefinitely. I did not indorse or approve of the treaty between the United States and Spain. I did not vote for it; but it was passed. We have by this solemn treaty assumed these debts. Now let us investigate them and promptly and manfully pay them. Let us not postpone them or trifle with them. They are the obligations of our country and they ought to be passed upon, and whenever found meritorious they ought to be paid and the matter ended. That is all.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that this conference report should be agreed to, in order that we may have some tribunal to try these claims against the United States. It has been estimated that there are from twenty or thirty to fifty millions of dollars. Now, there is no doubt that if a claim can be tried at the time of its inception, while the witnesses are living, the Treasury will get off with a smaller amount to be paid to the claimant than if they linger a long series of years; because we all know that these claims grow with time, and when time has removed the witnesses and the proof, it is difficult, if not impossible, for the Government of the United States to get their defense into court and before the tribunal.

If we pass this bill, then a tribunal will be provided in which the claims can be tried now, and tried while they are fresh and while the evidence is in existence; and I think for this reason it is very important that some tribunal should be provided. The House substitute provided that they go to the Court of Claims. There is no doubt that the old Court of Claims is overburdened with work, that cases are sent there from year to year, and that the parties do not get a trial and the cases are not heard until the evidence on the part of the Government is obliterated and can not be had and the Government can not properly defend the claim. So it seems to me that this bill should pass, in the interest of the Treasury as well as the interest of the honest claimants, who should be paid every dollar due to them from the Government.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 55.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 84, answered "present" 3, not voting 124; as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the rest of the day:

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. PEARSON with Mr. ZIEGLER.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. BISHOP with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. BREAZEALE.

On this vote:

Mr. JOY with Mr. TURNER.

Mr. KERR of Ohio with Mr. SPARKMAN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9140) providing that entrymen under the homestead laws, who have served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Spanish war or the Philippine insurrection, shall have certain service deducted from the time required to perfect title under homestead laws, and for other purposes.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment to the House bill 13872, the fortification bill, and request a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate on the fortification appropriation bill and ask a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers on the part of the House Mr. HEMENWAY, Mr. PUGH, and Mr. MCRAE.

WORK OF AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House concurrent resolution 85.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office 6,000 copies of House of Representatives Document No. 336, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled A Report on the Work and Expenditures of the Agricultural Experiment Stations for the Year ended June 30, 1900, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; the quality of paper and style of binding to be the same as in the original edition of the publication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am further directed by the Committee on Printing to offer the following House concurrent resolution No. 83.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Represenatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of House of Representatives Document No. 335, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled "Fourth Report on the Agricultural Investigations in Alaska," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; the quality of paper and style of binding to be the same as in the original edition of the publication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I am also directed, Mr. Speaker, to offer the following House concurrent resolution, No. 84:

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of House of Representative Document No. 171, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled "Agricultural Resources and Capabilities of Porto Rico," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; the quality of paper and style of binding to be the same as in the original edition of the publication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I am further directed, Mr. Speaker, by the Committee on Printing, to offer the following House concurrent resolution No. 81, with an amendment:

House concurrent resolution 81.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed the usual number of copies of A Digest of all the Contested-Election Cases in the House of Representatives of the United States from the First to the Fifty-sixth Congress, compiled by Chester H. Rowell, and that in addition to said usual number there be printed 500 copies, the same to be deposited in the document room of the House, and distributed from time to time on the order of the Clerk of the House or the chairman of any Elections Committee for the use of parties and attorneys in contested-election cases, and that there be further printed and bound the additional number of 50 copies, 10 each to be deposited in the library of the House of Representatives and in the rooms of the Committees on Elections, and 10 to be delivered to the compiler.

With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the following:

"That there be printed and substantially bound 2,000 copies of A Digest of all the Contested-Election Cases in the House of Representatives of the United States from the First to the Fifty-sixth Congress, inclusive, compiled by Chester H. Rowell, 1,500 for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate; and that, in addition to said number, there be printed and substantially bound 500 copies, the same to be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the House and distributed from time to time on his order; and that there be further printed and substantially bound the additional number of 50 copies, 10 each to be deposited in the library of the House of Representatives and in the rooms of the Committees on Elections, and 10 to be delivered to the compiler."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REVIEW OF WORLD'S COMMERCE.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I am further directed, Mr. Speaker, by the Committee on Printing to offer Senate concurrent resolution 107, which is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 14,000 copies of the general summary entitled Review of the World's Commerce for the year 1900, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for the use of the Department of State; and 8,000 copies of Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1900, including the general summary, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Department of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES BOARD ON GEOGRAPHIC NAMES.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I am further directed by the Committee on Printing to ask for the present consideration of House concurrent resolution 42.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 8,000 copies of the Second Report of the United States Board on Geographic Names, transmitted to Congress by the President February 26, 1900; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for distribution by said board among the Government Departments, public libraries, and other suitable depositories.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I also ask for the present consideration of House joint resolution 306.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That of the volumes or parts of the Annual Report of the Geological Survey which relate to hydrography, forestry, and mining and mineral resources there shall hereafter be published 1,000 copies in addition to the number now published, for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I also am directed by the Committee on Printing to ask for the present consideration of House concurrent resolution 65.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be 6,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals for the calendar year 1899 bound, in cloth and wrapped, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

And be it further resolved, That there also be printed 8,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint, covering the operations of the mints and assay offices of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, to be bound in cloth and wrapped, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT ON TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask unanimous consent also for the consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) providing for the publication of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That so much as may be necessary of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $100,000 provided in section 3 of the act to aid and encourage the holding of the Tennessee Centennial Exposition at Nashville in 1897, approved December 22, 1896, be applied to the preparation of illustrations and the printing and binding at the Government Printing Office of 4,000 copies of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at said exposition, under the direction of the chairman of said board.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were reported as follows:

In line 10 strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof "six."

In line 13, after the word "board," insert the following:

"Of which number 2,000 shall be for the use of the House, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the board of management, United States Government Exhibit, Tennessee Centennial Exposition."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS FOR LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 239) to regulate the distribution of public documents to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That of the publications described in this section the number of copies which shall be printed in addition to the usual number and distributed by the Public Printer to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange shall be 62, except as such number shall be enlarged to not exceeding 100 copies by direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, to wit: The House documents and reports, bound; the Senate documents and reports, bound; the House Journals, bound; the Senate Journals, bound; all other documents bearing a Congressional number and all documents not bearing a Congressional number printed by order of either House of Congress, or by order of any Department, bureau, commission, or officer of the Government, except confidential matter, blank forms, and circular letters not of a public character; the Revised Statutes, bound; the Statutes at Large, bound; the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, bound; the Official Register of the United States, bound.

SEC. 2. That in addition to the foregoing the Public Printer shall supply to the Library of Congress for its own use 2 copies of each of the above-described publications, unbound, as published; 5 copies of all bills and resolutions; 10 copies of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and 2 copies of all documents printed for the use of Congressional committees not of a confidential character.

SEC. 3. That of any publication printed at the Government expense by direction of any Department, commission, bureau, or officer of the Government elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office there shall be supplied to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange 62 copies, except as such number shall be enlarged to not exceeding 100 copies by request of the Joint Committee on the Library.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "in addition to the usual number."

In line 6, after the word "exchange," insert "in lieu of the number now provided by law."

In line 8 strike out "by direction of the Joint Committee on the Library" and insert in lieu thereof "by request of the Librarian of Congress."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I move to reconsider the votes by which the several bills and joint resolutions just acted upon were passed; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCISCO V. DE COSTER.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1293) for the relief of Francisco V. De Coster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Francisco V. De Coster shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States as a captain in the First Battalion of Cavalry, Mississippi Marine Brigade, on the 8th day of July, 1863, and to have served as such continuously thereafter until he was mustered out of service on the 29th day of August, 1864, and he shall be entitled to the pay and allowances of a captain of cavalry for the period comprised between said dates: Provided, That the pay and allowances actually received by him for the period covered by this bill shall be deducted from the sum otherwise to be paid thereunder.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. I think we ought to have the report read.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I think I can explain the matter in a few words.

The SPEAKER. The report covers four pages. Possibly the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] will accept a statement in lieu of the reading of the report.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. De Coster acted as captain of his company, having been placed in charge of it under the circumstances stated in the report, a part of which I will read:

First. Both the War Department and De Coster show that on June 30, 1863, Captain Wright, of Company D, Mississippi Marine Brigade, was killed in action.

Second. No commission was afterwards issued to anyone as captain of that company up to August 29, 1864, when it was mustered out, and no one received pay as commanding officer of that company during said period.

Third. The war records show, and De Coster claims, that he was in command of a company and performed all the duties and was subjected to all the responsibility and expenses incident to that position.

Fourth. The war records show that although De Coster never was commissioned as captain, yet he was recommended by the commander of the brigade on July 9, 1863, also on February 10, 1864, and May 23, 1864, and Brig. Gen. Alfred W. Ellet, commanding, and the only officer of the brigade having authority, put him on duty as such captain, as shown by De Coster's statement, backed up by the affidavit of General Ellet.

I think the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] will remember that I spoke to him about this case a few weeks ago.

Mr. LOUD. It is a very disagreeable task to object to a bill which any member desires this House to pass. But I venture to say, as I stated when this or a similar bill came before the House a short time ago, that there are at least 10,000 cases similar to this, where lieutenants acted in command of their companies for a long period of time. I do not remember that in any case of that character we have ever passed a bill similar to this. If this were passed we would establish the precedent that every subordinate officer who had command of a company after his superior officer was killed or had resigned, is entitled to the pay and allowances of that officer for the time that the position was thus occupied. Mr. Speaker, this is a very dangerous precedent to establish.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Mr. De Coster was a first sergeant. The officers above him were all killed. He was put to the expense of providing a servant and other expenses incident to the rank of captain, and when he came out of the service had to borrow money in order to pay the indebtedness thus incurred by him while acting as captain. He was recognized in that capacity by the War Department in accepting the muster roll and the pay roll. For the last thirty-five years this man has suffered the injustice of not being able to obtain what certainly is his due. I should not champion a bill of this kind unless I believed it to be right.

Mr. LOUD. I do not doubt that the gentleman believes this bill to be perfectly honest and just. Perhaps it is so, according to his view of the circumstances; but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are thousands and thousands of similar cases, and for us now, thirty-five years after the war, to attempt to pay every man who for a certain term occupied a higher position than that for which he was commissioned is wrong.

I say again that it is an ungracious task for a member to object to any bill that any other member may desire to pass. But the principle of this bill is wrong, and if it be passed it will lead to endless trouble.

Mr. HEATWOLE. This is the case of a noncommissioned officer who acted in the capacity of a commissioned officer.

Mr. LOUD. But that does not alter the case. There are thousands and thousands of such cases.

Mr. HEATWOLE. There was no other officer to take charge of this company.

Mr. LOUD. There is not a man here who has been in the military service who does not know that cases of this kind are constantly arising. At the surrender of Lee there were but 30 commissioned officers for 12 companies——

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, is this debate proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. LOUD. I shall have to object.

ENGROSSMENT AND ENROLLMENT OF BILLS.

Mr. BAKER. I ask consideration of a resolution which I have been directed to report by the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That during the remainder of the present session of Congress the engrossment and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it the usual resolution?

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. It is.

The resolution was adopted.

BICYCLE MESSENGERS.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to ask immediate consideration for the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 432.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and empowered to employ for the remainder of the session four bicycle messengers for day and night service between the enrolling room of the Clerk's office and the Government Printing Office, to be paid each out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, at $5 per day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RETURN OF BILLS FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire, chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House 8908 granting an increase of pension to Alexander S. Hartford.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Also the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House 4953, granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Churchill.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what is the defect in the bill?

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is no defect. The beneficiary is dead.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the resolutions were passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent of the House for consideration of House resolution 419.

House resolution No. 419.

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands be, and hereby is, authorized to have printed such papers, documents, and testimony taken at meetings had before that committee, and such as may be necessary for the business of said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That request has never been made before for the Committee on Arid Lands. While I shall not object to it, I think it is going a little further than we have gone heretofore.

Mr. TONGUE. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If there is a real necessity for the printing, I do not object.

Mr. TONGUE. The Committee on Arid Lands had hearings given to the experts of the Geological Survey and the Agricultural Department, and considerable valuable testimony has been given. It is desired to have this printed for the information of the public.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask whether this gives the committee permission to print without limit? If so, I shall have to object. I have no objection to letting a resolution go through giving them the ordinary authority, but without limit whatever I think it ought not to be passed.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HILL. I will withhold my objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. Does not the special order take precedence of and against any other business?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of House bill 13423, to revise and codify the laws relating to the Post-Office Department and postal service, and for other purposes, a motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bill H. R. 5499, to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, shall be a continuing order, not, however, to interfere with conference reports and appropriation bills, or existing orders for Friday, or business reported from the Comittee on the District of Columbia.

PROTECTION OF THE INTERESTS OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE POTOMAC RIVER FLATS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask consideration for the bill H. R. 13865.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13865) relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have a substitute to offer for that bill, in which the preamble is stricken out. I ask for the reading of the substitute instead of the bill in the hands of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proposed substitute will be read and placed in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the preamble, also all after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in the case of the United States against M. F. Norris and others, instituted under the act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats,' approved August 5, 1886, 24 Stats., 335, and recently remanded by the Supreme Court of the United States to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the latter court, in order to carry out the mandate of the Supreme Court and also to carry into full effect the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, 30 Stats., 1377, entitled 'An act relative to wharf property and certain public spaces in the District of Columbia,' is hereby authorized and directed, in ascertaining the values of the wharf structures and other improvements used in connection therewith belonging to the defendants in the above cause, or to others, which are in or over the waters of the Potomac River south of Water street, in the city of Washington, in which the said defendants claim riparian rights, to also, in like manner, ascertain and determine the values of the portions of such wharf structures and other improvements used in connection therewith which are upon the adjoining land of the United States, but not in or over the said waters of the Potomac River, and shall also ascertain, declare, adjudge, and award to whom the values so determined are justly payable. The said supreme court of the District of Columbia is hereby invested with all needful power, authority, and jurisdiction to carry into effect in all respects the said mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States according to its true intent and meaning, and to determine every question of right, title, interest, and claim arising in the premises; and such court may exercise such power, authority, and jurisdiction as fully and completely, for all purposes, as if the same had been conferred upon it by the said act approved August 5, 1886; and its findings shall be reported to Congress agreeably to the fourth section of said act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

BUNKER HILL ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill S. 3205, for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3205) for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported with a substitute. I ask that the substitute be read instead of the original Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the substitute will be read instead of the original bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3205) for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the Bunker Hill road or Wisconsin avenue is improved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the said Commissioners are authorized to permit the street railroad tracks upon said highways to be located in the middle of the roadway, should such location be considered for the best interests of the public.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TO REGULATE THE COLLECTION OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask consideration of House bill 13752.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13752) to regulate the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, beginning with the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1901, the whole tax on real and personal property in the District of Columbia shall be payable in the month of May of each year: Provided, however, That on and after the 1st of November of each year the tax may be paid in two equal installments, the first in November and the second in May, but that no penalty shall accrue for delinquency until the following June, as hereinafter provided; and if the whole or any part of said tax upon real and personal property shall not be paid before the 1st day of June in each year the same shall thereafter be in arrears and delinquent, and there shall then be added, to be collected with said tax, a penalty of 1 per cent per month upon the amount thereof, and a like penalty on the 1st day of each succeeding month until payment of said tax and penalty, and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax, to be dealt with in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if this bill cuts down or takes away the rights of the people of the District of Columbia to pay their taxes semiannually instead of annually.

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; it makes it optional, without any penalty if the first half of the taxes is not paid in the six months. The taxpayers can pay their taxes if they please once a year or twice a year. This is a Commissioners' bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And there is no penalty for the first half?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PROCEEDINGS FOR ADMISSION TO THE GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask consideration of the bill H. R. 13866.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13866) to provide for the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane of indigent insane persons residing in the District of Columbia and of insane persons of homicidal or violent tendencies found therein, and for admission, temporarily, to said hospital of nonresident insane persons found in said District, shall be upon petition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, sworn to by one or more of said Commissioners, or by some other responsible person, filed in the supreme court of the District of Columbia holding in equity court, which said court shall, upon filing of such petition, issue a writ de lunatico inquirendo, whereupon the proceedings shall be in conformity with the law relating to such matters in force in the District of Columbia on the 30th day of January, 1899. And in executing such writ it shall be the duty of the marshal for the District of Columbia to impanel a jury from the jurors in attendance upon the criminal courts of said District, who shall perform such service in addition to and as part of their duties in said court; and during such times as jurors are not in attendance upon said criminal courts the said marshal may, in executing such writ, impanel the jurors in attendance upon the police court of said District, who shall perform such duties in addition to and as part of their duties in said police court.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, so soon as practicable, to return to their places of residence or to their friends all indigent insane persons not residents of the District at the time they became insane who are now or may be hereafter detained in the Government Hospital for the Insane, or who shall be committed to the said hospital to be temporarily cared for, as provided in section 4850 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the Commissioners are hereby authorized to defray all necessary expenses incurred in ascertaining the locality where such persons or their friends belong and in returning them to such locality.

SEC. 3. That the act of Congress approved January 31, 1899, entitled "An act to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in certain cases, and for other purposes," and all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin what rule has heretofore obtained with reference to this class provided for in this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. Practically no rule. This simply provides for the method of taking care of the pauper insane.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I find that the District of Columbia already has 55 per cent of the insane people in the insane asylum.

Mr. BABCOCK. This puts it entirely in the hands of the Commissioners to commit the pauper insane, and makes a form of thing that they have not had in the District before.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And provides also for the removal from the District of nonresidents?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EXTENDING TIME FOR CONSTRUCTION OF STREET RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution No. 159, extending the time within which certain street railroads of the District of Columbia may be constructed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be considered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 159) extending the time within which certain street railroads in the District of Columbia may be constructed.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the time within which the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company, of Maryland, is allowed to extend its lines into and within the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, extended for two years from and after the passage of this resolution.

SEC. 2. That the time within which the Columbia Railway is authorized to construct an extension of its lines from the intersection of Watts Creek and Anacostia road along the Anacostia road to its intersection with the eastern boundary line of the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, extended for two years from the passage of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be considered.

There was no objection.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that House bill 14147 may lie on the table, covering the same subject as the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this order will be made.

There was no objection.

PROOF OF EXECUTION OF WILLS AFFECTING REAL ESTATE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 12331) to amend an act entitled "An act conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes," approved June 8, 1898.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes," approved June 8, 1898, be, and it is hereby, amended by adding thereto three sections, to be designated as sections 13, 14, and 15, which shall read as follows:

"SEC. 13. In all cases where it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the names of the next of kin or heirs at law of the deceased are unknown, either in whole or in part, such unknown next of kin or heirs at law may be proceeded against and described in the publication of notice hereinbefore provided for as 'the unknown next of kin,' or 'the unknown heirs at law,' as the case may be, of the deceased, and by such publication of such notice under such designation such unknown next of kin and heirs at law shall be as effectually bound and concluded as if their names were specifically set forth in said order of publication.

"SEC. 14. In case any will shall have been heretofore admitted to probate upon publication against unknown heirs or next of kin, any person interested may file a petition for further probate of such will, alleging that the heirs at law or next of kin of the deceased, or some of them, as the case may be, are unknown, and upon satisfactory showing being made to the court publication of notice may be made against the unknown next of kin or heirs at law of the deceased, and upon such publication being made, as required by the court, a decree may be made confirming such previous probate, and such decree so made shall be as effectual as if the said heirs at law or next of kin were named in the order of publication.

"SEC. 15. If any will be hereafter held invalid in any action begun after distribution made of the property by the executor or executrix in good faith, with the approval of the court, without knowledge on his or her part of such invalidity and without notice that such action was intended, the distributees of the property, and not such executor or executrix, shall be answerable for the property or its value to the person or persons entitled thereto."

With the following amendment:

On page 1, section 13, line 11, after the word "that," strike out the words "the names" and insert in lieu thereof the words "all or any;" and in line 12 of the same section, after the word "unknown," strike out the words "either in whole."

On page 2, line 1, of the same section, strike out the words "or in part," and in line 7, page 2, of the same section, after the word "if," insert the words "known and."

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman would explain what change is made in the present law by this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say that this is to provide for the services upon unknown heirs. It was omitted when the law was passed regulating wills in the District of Columbia, and it meets the approval of the Commissioners. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The amendments were considered, and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK KAVANAGH ESTATE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will call up House bill No. 13068, to waive and release all claims of the United States by way of escheat to the real estate in the District of Columbia of which Patrick Kavanagh or his sons, Charles W. Kavanagh and William Kavanagh, died seized; and I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let us have the bill read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, and then the Chair will submit the question for consideration.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States do hereby release, relinquish, and quitclaim unto Michael A. Mullin, trustee under the last will and testament of Elizabeth Ann Hooper, formerly Elizabeth Ann Kavanagh, and to all persons lawfully claiming or to claim under the said last will and testament, all right, title, and claim, if any, which the United States may have acquired by way of escheat to any real estate situated in the District of Columbia by the death of Patrick Kavanagh, the husband, and Charles W. Kavanagh and William Kavanagh, the sons, of the said Elizabeth Ann Hooper, or any of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

DEVISEES OF CASPER BARBER.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 11830) for the relief of the devisees of Casper Barber and their assigns from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens, and I make the same request, that the matter may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill before the Chair submits the request.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by and conveyed to Casper Barber, of said District, prior to the passage of this act be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, 1887, and all estate acquired by the United States by force of said act are, in respect of such real estate, hereby released to the devisees of said Casper Barber and their assigns.

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

Strike out all after the word "seven," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and all forfeitures incurred by force of said act are, in respect of such real estate, hereby remitted."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to have the bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were considered and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CATHEDRAL FOUNDATION.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 3481) to permit certain burials of the dead in the lands of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to permit the burial of the dead in any designated part of its land in the District of Columbia situate between the Tennallytown road, Woodley lane, Galveston street, Thirty-fifth street, and Massachusetts avenue, or in vaults in the cathedral to be built on the said land, under such sanitary regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That not more than four such burials shall be allowed in any one calender year.

SEC. 2. That the remains of Thomas John Claggett, first bishop of Maryland, and his wife, may be allowed to remain in the vault in which they are now deposited in the churchyard of St. Alban's Church, adjoining the lands of the Cathedral Foundation, and that the said remains may be removed hereafter to the grounds of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia, or to the cathedral which shall be built thereon.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I want two or three minutes to be heard on this question.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state my position to the House on this measure. It seems to me that this is a bill that ought not to pass. If we grant this right to the church, as it is in the residential portion of the city and they propose to build there a cathedral and establish something after the manner, as I understand it, of the Westminster Abbey and bury their distinguished dead there, it will be a bad precedent. Naturally it will be opposed, and opposed more strongly when the District is settled around it, and if we grant this legislation to this church there will come the same applications from other denominations in the city that they may bury their distinguished dead in their church, and I think it will be a bad precedent, and the bill should be defeated.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. Why should there be limit, or, in other words, why do you want to remove the limitation?

Mr. BABCOCK. Because it requires a special permit for the burial of the dead on any ground within the city limits or within the District.

Mr. GAINES. Why are all these limitations established?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is under the present law.

Mr. GAINES. But why the present law?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly I can not answer that question. It is for the public health and for the regulation of sanitary conditions.

Mr. GAINES. Exactly so. That is what I wanted you to say. Up to this time we have had these limitations to protect the health of the people, and yet you want to take away those limitations and let the people bury their dead out there.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say that if there is any serious objection to this bill I will withdraw it, but I want to state a few facts first. This organization has about 31 acres there which they are improving for a school, and the improvements are magnificent. It provides a limit to the burial of four each year and not more than four. There have been several persons who have contributed very largely to the establishment of this church and educational institution, and it is proposed to be a second Westminster Abbey, or, in other words, an honorable burial place for those who have distinguished themselves in the establishment of the institution. That is all there is of it. The Commissioners have recommended the bill, and so have all those connected with it.

Mr. GAINES. Does the gentleman think we ought to have a burying ground in the city?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is on the outskirts; way out on the Tennallytown road.

A MEMBER. What denomination is it?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is a Protestant Episcopal church.

Mr. GAINES. I do not care if it is a Methodist church, in which I take a great interest. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BABCOCK) there were 64 ayes and 30 noes.

So the bill was passed.

THEATER LICENSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up Senate joint resolution No. 163, in relation to licensing theaters in the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate resolution and substitute what I send to the desk, which is the language of House joint resolution No. 311, reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any license issued by the assessor of the District of Columbia to the proprietor of a theater or other public place of amusement in the District of Columbia may be terminated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia whenever it shall appear to them that, after due notice, the person holding such license shall have failed to comply with such regulations as may be prescribed by the said Commissioners for the public decency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move to reconsider the votes by which these various bills and joint resolutions have been passed, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6050. An act to create the eastern division of the northern Federal judicial district of Georgia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that Mr. PROCTOR was excused at his own request from further service as a conferee on the bill (H. R. 9829) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and that Mr. LODGE had been appointed in his place.

ST. LOUIS INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, in order that the House may agree to the conference asked by the Senate, the bill (H. R. 9829) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object.

RETURN OF A SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5912) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Katharine J. Gilman."

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the request of the Senate will be complied with.

There was no objection.

FRANCISCO V. DE COSTER.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has withdrawn his objection to Senate bill 1293.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS AMENDED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House pension bills of the following titles, with amendments of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1845) granting pensions to William Allen and Isaac Garman;

A bill (H. R. 3784) granting an increase of pension to Linsay C. Jones;

A bill (H. R. 3861) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Millard;

A bill (H. R. 8650) granting an increase of pension to William C. Whitney;

A bill (H. R. 12442) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Starr;

A bill (H. R. 13049) granting a pension to Elizabeth Fury;

A bill (H. R. 13086) granting an increase of pension to Eunice Henry;

A bill (H. R. 13118) granting a pension to Rebecca J. Gray;

A bill (H. R. 13154) granting a pension to Ernestine Lavigne; and

A bill (H. R. 13569) granting a pension to the minor children of Henry R. Hinkle.

The amendments of the Senate were successively read; and, on motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, concurred in.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

FRANCISCO V. DE COSTER.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw my objection to the bill of the gentleman from Minnesota, Senate bill 1293, for the relief of Francisco V. De Coster.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. LOUD. I desire to make a very brief statement.

I withdrew my objection to the consideration of this bill because the gentleman from Minnesota stated to me that I had agreed not to object. It is possible I did enter into such an agreement.

I accept the gentleman's word for the fact, although I have no recollection of it. I still believe that the bill is vicious in its character; but if in an unguarded moment I did make the promise which the gentleman assures me I did, I feel bound, of course, to adhere to that promise, whether given or implied. Therefore, not desiring to exercise my physical or vocal right to prevent the passage of the bill, I am perfectly willing to leave the matter to the House.

Mr. GAINES. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some explanation of the bill. As I understand, this man makes claim to the pay of a captain on the ground that, though he has not been commissioned as such, he has been doing service in that capacity. As I understand, he has been paid only for his service in the inferior rank, not for his service as a captain.

Mr. HEATWOLE. He was paid as a first sergeant.

Mr. GAINES. If the bill becomes a law, as I understand, he will get back pay dating, I believe, from 1860, as though he had been a captain during all this period.

Mr. HEATWOLE. He will get the difference between the pay of a first sergeant and that of a captain for a short period.

Mr. GAINES. What will be the amount of this additional pay?

Mr. STEELE. Allow me to explain this matter to the gentleman. I happen to have examined the case. This man was assigned to the duty of a captain, having been recommended to the Secretary of War for the performance of that duty. He served for a certain time as a captain (not having been commissioned), and was then honorably discharged. Now, the proposition is to give him the difference between the pay of a sergeant and that of a captain for a very short time—I forget how long.

Mr. GAINES. Extending back to 1860?

Mr. STEELE. Oh, no; only for four or five months.

Mr. HEATWOLE. He is not in the service now.

Mr. GAINES. As I read the bill, you want to make this party a captain.

Mr. HEATWOLE. No.

Mr. GAINES. That he has never been a captain, but he has served in some other office; the duties he performed were those of a captain. He has received a salary, and now you want to make him a captain and give him from back the sixties the salary of a captain. Are you not?

Mr. HEATWOLE. Oh, no.

Mr. STEELE. It will give the difference between the pay of a sergeant and a captain from the 8th day of July, 1863, to the 9th day of August, 1864.

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman know how many privates there were in the company?

Mr. STEELE. There were above the minimum number.

Mr. LOUD. They were not deprived of their captain.

Mr. GAINES. It is only a few months' back pay of a captain.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Yes.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EASTERN DIVISION OF NORTHERN FEDERAL JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11102.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 6050, taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, after the bill is read, I ask that the Senate bill 6050 be substituted for it, it being identical with the House bill.

The SPEAKER. That is the bill now being read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6050) to create the eastern division of the northern Federal judicial district of Georgia, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the eastern division of the northern judicial district of Georgia is hereby created and established, to be composed of the counties of Banks, Clarke, Franklin, Greene, Habersham, Hart, Jackson, Morgan, Madison, Oglethorpe, Oconee, Walton, Rabun, White, and Elbert.

SEC. 2. That there shall be held at the city of Athens, in said eastern division of the said northern judicial district of Georgia, two terms of the district and circuit courts in each and every year, on the third Monday in April and the first Monday in November, and it shall be the duty of the clerk or his deputy and other officers of the northern judicial district aforesaid to attend said terms of said court and perform all the duties appertaining to their position, and no additional district attorney, clerk, or marshal shall be appointed in said district. If in the opinion of the court it shall become necessary, a deputy clerk may be appointed by the court to attend to the duties of that office in the eastern division. All pleadings and other papers may be filed in the clerk's office at Atlanta, and all process may issue therefrom, except while court is in session at Athens. The compensation of the clerks shall not be changed or affected by the failure to appoint a deputy clerk at Athens: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for the holding of said courts free of expense to the Government of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all actions at law and all suits in equity against a defendant who shall be a resident of said eastern division shall be brought therein. Suits for the recovery of lands shall be brought in the division of the district where the land is situated; but in all cases at law or in equity against more than one defendant, in which some of the defendants shall reside in the western and some in the eastern division, such action at law may be brought in either division, and such suit in equity may be brought in either division in which a defendant may reside against whom substantial relief is prayed. Cases removed from any of the courts of the State of Georgia to the circuit court of the United States for the northern district shall be removed to the circuit court in and for the division in which said court is held from which it was removed.

SEC. 4. That all prosecutions for crime or offense committed after the date at which this act takes effect, in any of the counties composing the said eastern division, shall be cognizable within such division, and all prosecutions begun and pending when this act takes effect shall be proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 5. That all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in said eastern division shall be residents thereof and shall be selected from such counties as the court may direct, and all laws heretofore applicable to the northern district of Georgia regulating writs, actions, suits, and other proceedings therein shall be applicable to the eastern division of said district hereby created so far as the same may relate to any right, action, suit, or other proceeding of which the courts of said eastern division shall have jurisdiction.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be of force from and after the 30th day of June, 1901, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill, similar in character, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. HOWARD, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DONATION OF LETTERS TO STATE OF IOWA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 157) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to remove from the files of the Department of the Interior certain letters to be donated to the State of Iowa.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to remove from the files of the Department and donate to the State of Iowa such letters of Robert Lucas, John Chambers, and James Clark, addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as may be designated by the curator of the historical department of said State, copies being retained in the files of the Department of the Interior if the Secretary shall deem such letters or any of them of any value to the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has this bill been reported, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. LACEY. It is a joint resolution, which has passed the Senate. It has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House. It simply permits the withdrawal of some original papers filed by the early governors of Iowa, copies being left.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has been considered by the committee and reported?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes; it is the unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. R. 152. Joint resolution in relation to monument to prisonship martyrs at Fort Greene, Brooklyn, N. Y.—to the Committee on the Library.

H. R. 12396. An act to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, with Senate amendment—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

C. F. CURRY, Secretary of State.
By J. HOESCH, Deputy.

Chapter 21. Senate joint resolution No. 7. Resolution as to making upon the island of Molokai a leper hospital for the care of all lepers within the United States.

Whereas there has been lately annexed to these United States a large island known as Molokai, one of the Hawaiian group; and

Whereas upon the said island of Molokai there is a leper hospital, devoted entirely to the care and cure of lepers, and which island, on account of its locality and conditions, is peculiarly adapted for such purposes: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and assembly jointly, That we hereby recognize the great necessity of having all those afflicted with leprosy confined within and upon the said island of Molokai, both because of its isolated condition and equable climate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and assembly jointly, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives therein requested, to vote for and use all honorable means to secure such legislation as will enable every leper found within these United States, or thereafter to be found therein, to be sent to the island of Molokai for care and treatment: And be it further

Resolved, That the governor of this State is hereby respectfully requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

THOMAS FLINT, Jr.,
President pro tempore of the Senate.
W. C. RALSTON,
Speaker pro tempore of the Assembly.

Attest:

C. F. CURRY,
Secretary of State.

[Indorsed.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12333) to provide for the extension of the charters of national banks, to report it without amendment. I give notice that I will call it up at an early day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I have in my hand several different House bills which I report from the Committee on Claims, and there are perhaps twice as many more, making some twenty bills in all, for very small amounts, some of them for less than $100, that come in here from the Committee on Claims. I am requested to ask for their immediate consideration. I shall not do that, but I shall ask at a later time that we may take up the Calendar of unobjected House cases and proceed with its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be received.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 5220) for the relief of Charles M. Kennerly;

A bill (H. R. 10001) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph T. Stout;

A bill (H. R. 2617) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, for $8,000 due him for judicial services; and

A bill (H. R. 3696) for the relief of the administrator of Mary R. Frost, deceased.

OLIVIA M. CLIFFORD.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6204) for the relief of Olivia M. Clifford, to report it favorably without amendment. As a similar bill has passed the Senate, and it is very short, I ask that it be now considered. It has passed the Senate at the present session.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Olivia M. Clifford for compensation for the alleged use and occupation by the United States, through its Corps of Engineers, of two certain docks or piers located in the Erie Basin, at the city of Buffalo, N. Y., while engaged in building the new breakwater, from January 8, 1887, to July 8, 1891, notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2471) for the relief of Olivia M. Clifford.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies of the report proper, 500 copies of the report of the assistant inspector-general on the State Homes, and 150 copies of the record of members, for the use of the Home.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the report of the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, of which 8,000 shall be for the House of Representatives, 4,500 for the Senate, 600 for the office of the Secretary of War, 500 for the Chickamauga Park Commission, and 25 copies for each of the speakers at the dedication.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 500 additional copies of the Report of the Governor of New Mexico for 1900, and to deliver the same to the Department of the Interior.

THE PEOPLE OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on the 19th instant, to report it with an amendment, changing the form from a concurrent to a Senate resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was to strike out the words "(the House of Representatives concurring);" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate, That there be printed 5,000 copies of the article prepared by the division of insular affairs of the War Department entitled "The people of the Philippines," of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PUBLICATION OF MILITARY LAWS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] on the 19th instant, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives 2,000 copies of the military laws of the United States, to include all legislation in respect to military affairs of the Fifty-sixth Congress, of which 650 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,350 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see no provision made for copies for the War Department.

Mr. PLATT of New York. There is no provision made in the resolution for the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there ought to be some copies furnished. Each head of a Department ought to have a copy of these laws.

Mr. PLATT of New York. Will the Senator from Missouri suggest an amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to insert "and 200 copies for the use of the War Department," and to increase the aggregate number 200 copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 1,000 additional copies of the Report of the Governor of Oklahoma for 1900, and to deliver the same to the Department of the Interior.

ESTATE OF SILAS BURKE AND OTHERS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills:

A bill (S. 2063) for the relief of the estate of Silas Burke;

A bill (S. 2823) for the relief of the estate of Samuel J. Hays, deceased;

A bill (S. 5253) for the relief of the estate of John Kerr, deceased;

A bill S. 3585) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. M. A. Walker, deceased;

A bill (S. 4663) for the relief of John B. Boggs;

A bill (S. 5003) for the relief of the estate of James A. Ford, deceased;

A bill (S. 5131) for the relief of Capt. Jefferson Dickerson;

A bill (S. 5344) for the relief of the heirs of Andrew S. Core, deceased; and reported the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the claims represented by the following bills, to wit, S. 2063, S. 2823, S. 3585, S. 4663, S. 5003, S. 5131, S. 5344, and S. 5903, for the relief of the estate of Silas Burke; for the relief of the estate of Samuel J. Hays, deceased; for the relief of the estate of Mrs. M. A. Walker, deceased; for the relief of John B. Boggs; for the relief of the estate of James A. Ford, deceased; for the relief of Capt. Jefferson Dickerson; for the relief of the heirs of Andrew S. Core, deceased, and for the relief of Margaret Hallum, administratrix of Joel Hallum, deceased, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said Court of Claims shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BUTLER. Let it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina objects.

Mr. BUTLER subsequently withdrew his objection; and the foregoing resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

NEW ORLEANS AND BAYOU SARA MAIL COMPANY, ETC.

Mr. TALIAFERRO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills:

A bill (S. 591) for the relief of the New Orleans and Bayou Sara Mail Company, of New Orleans, La.;

A bill (S. 1125) for the relief of the estate of Charity Clements, deceased;

A bill (S. 3863) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet Miles;

A bill (S. 4244) for the relief of Jane T. Williams; and

A bill (S. 5607) for the relief of Bettie Brooks Metcalf and the estate of Lucie Brooks Bell, deceased—reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the claims represented by the following bills, to wit, S. 591, S. 1125, S. 3863, S. 5607, and S. 4244, for the relief of the New Orleans and Bayou Sara Mail Company; for the relief of the estate of Charity Clements, deceased; for the relief of Mrs. Harriet Miles; for the relief of Bettie Brooks Metcalf and the estate of Lucie Brooks Bell, deceased, and for the relief of Jane T. Williams, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and the said Court of Claims shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

OPENING OF LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12901) to supplement existing laws relating to the disposition of lands, etc., to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to have the second section read again.

The Secretary read the second section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill has just been reported?

Mr. BERRY. Yes; it is a House bill, and it has been reported. There are two amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, page 2, line 10, to strike out "President" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

That before the time for opening to settlement or entry of any of the lands in the Territory of Oklahoma, respectively ceded to the United States by the Wichita and Affiliated Bands of Indians, and the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, under agreements respectively ratified by the acts of March 2, 1895, and June 6, 1900, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide the same into such number of counties as will, for the time being, best subserve the public interests, and to designate the place for the county seat of each county, and to set aside and reserve at such county seat, for disposition as herein provided, 320 acres of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 15, after the word "land," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may attach any part of said lands to any adjoining county in said Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ARTICLES FOR EXPOSITIONS IN TEXAS.

Mr. CHILTON. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 74) authorizing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the San Antonio International Fair, and at the Texas State Fair and Dallas Exposition, to be held in the cities of San Antonio, Tex., and Dallas, Tex., to be imported free of duty under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and as there can be no possible objection to the joint resolution, I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK B. CASE.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 11598) for the relief of Frank B. Case, to report it favorably with an amendment. As it is a very short bill and must be acted on at once in order to get it to conference, I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint upon the retired list of the Navy, with the rank of ensign, Frank B. Case, formerly a midshipman in the United States Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that a conference be requested with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator not to do that. Let the bill go to the House; and if they agree to our amendment, that will end it. That is the better course.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will take the Senator's advice. I merely want to get the bill through the two Houses.

INVESTIGATION BY FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make an investigation of internal revenue, customs, currency and coinage matters, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

ESTATES OF MARIA JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills:

A bill (S. 3988) for the relief of the estates of Maria Johnson and Sarah E. Ware, deceased;

A bill (S. 4303) for the relief of the estate of John P. Caruthers, deceased;

A bill (S. 4343) for the relief of R. M. Lay, administrator of Henry Lay, deceased;

A bill (S. 224) for the relief of Joseph F. Travers;

A bill (S. 5379) for the relief of Ella A. Hall;

A bill (S. 5902) for the relief of the legal representatives of Clarissa Lee, deceased; and

A bill (S. 5991) for the relief of Whitty S. Miller, administrator of Whitty M. Sasser, deceased—reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the claims represented by the following bills, to wit, S. 3988, S. 4303, S. 4343, S. 224, S. 5379, S. 5902, and S. 5991, for the relief of the estates of Maria Johnson and Sarah E. Ware, deceased; for the relief of the estate of John P. Caruthers, deceased; for the relief of R. M. Lay, administrator of Henry Lay, deceased; for the relief of Joseph F. Travers; for the relief of Ella A. Hall; for the relief of the legal representatives of Clarissa Lee, deceased, and for the relief of Whitty S. Miller, administrator of Whitty M. Sasser, now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; and the said Court of Claims shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BUTLER. Let it go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes to the Calendar, objection being made.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to have the resolution go to the Calendar, if it is objected to, because it is simply a reference, under the Tucker Act, of claims to the Court of Claims to find the facts. If it is to go to the Calendar, it will simply appear that the committee had reported these bills, when, in fact, it has only reported the resolution which has just been read.

If the Senator insists upon his objection, I will ask that the resolution lie on the table, so that I may call it up at another time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: I wish to call up the resolution with reference to referring certain bills to the Court of Claims. The objection has been withdrawn, and I ask that the bills may be referred to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 6055) authorizing Lieut. William S. Sims, United States Navy, to accept a decoration tendered to him by the President of the French Republic; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6056) authorizing Mr. Leo Bergholz, consul of the United States at Erzerum, Turkey, to accept a decoration tendered to him by His Majesty the Shah of Persia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HANNA introduced a bill (S. 6057) granting an increase of pension to John S. Snyder; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 6058) to reimburse J. A. B. Miles, E. D. Kelly, and Rawlings Webster; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 6061) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to decree the sale or lease of real estate in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide a necessary vessel to be used by the Marine-Hospital Service in boarding arriving steamers at Reedy Island quarantine station, Delaware River, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TURNER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $504 to pay the heirs of Charles P. Culver for the translation from the German of House Miscellaneous Document No. 8, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, made by order of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAY submitted an amendment proposing to increase the limit of cost for the completion of the post-office and court-house at Columbus, Ga., from $156,000 to $159,000, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to reopen and adjust the claims of the several States for interest paid on the bonds sold, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment authorizing the President of the United States to nominate and appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, five commissioners to revise, codify, and report to the Attorney-General for submission to Congress, all the laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature, etc., intended to be proposed by him as a substitute for the amendment submitted by Mr. FAIRBANKS on the 23d instant to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURSTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for completing the allotments provided in the agreement with the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma, ratified by act approved March 2, 1895, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250 to reimburse C. W. De Knight in full for his services and necessary assistance in preparing and furnishing a revised and complete index, together with marginal and foot notes for the war-revenue law, second session, Fifty-fifth Congress, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13423) to revise and codify the laws relating to the Post-Office Department and postal service, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CUBAN CONSTITUTION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to send to the Senate an English translation of the proceedings of the constitutional convention of the island of Cuba, as contained in the Diario de Sessiones.

PAYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

INTRODUCTION OF REINDEER INTO ALASKA.

Mr. TELLER. I submit a resolution, and ask that it may be now considered. I have examined the subject and find that the cost is within the Senate limits.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of the Report upon the Introduction of Domestic Reindeer into Alaska for 1900, by Dr. Sheldon Jackson.

HOURS OF LABOR ON GOVERNMENT WORK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have printed and laid over until to-morrow. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6882) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes, and that the Senate proceed to consider the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

REPORT ON GEOGRAPHIC NAMES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. FOSTER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 15,000 copies of the Special Report of the United States Board on Geographic Names, relating to geographic names in the Philippine Islands, transmitted to Congress by the President February 21, 1901; 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for distribution by said board among the Government Departments, public libraries, and other suitable depositories.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 25th instant approved and signed the act (S. 2432) granting an increase of pension to James A. Thomas.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 11830) for the relief of the devisees of Casper Barber and their assigns from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens;

A bill (H. R. 12331) to amend an act entitled "An act conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes," approved June 8, 1898;

A bill (H. R. 13068) to waive and release all claims of the United States by way of escheat to the real estate in the District of Columbia of which Patrick Kavanagh or his sons, Charles W. Kavanagh and William Kavanagh, died seized;

A bill (H. R. 13752) to regulate the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 13866) to provide for the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia in certain cases.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 360) concerning printing of additional copies of the Annual Report of the Geological Survey was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHARLES E. CHURCHILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 4663) "granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Churchill."

ALEXANDER F. HARTFORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 6098) granting an increase of pension to Alexander F. Hartford.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and substantially bound 2,000 copies of "A digest of all the contested election cases in the House of Representatives of the United States from the First to the Fifty-sixth Congress, inclusive," compiled by Chester H. Rowell, 1,500 for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate; and that in addition to said number there be printed and substantially bound 500 copies, the same to be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the House and distributed from time to time on his order; and that there be further printed and substantially bound the additional number of 50 copies, 10 each to be deposited in the Library of the House of Representatives and in the rooms of the Committee on Elections and 10 to be delivered to the compiler.

LYNCHING AT TALLULAH, LA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, in connection with my message of January 29, 1901, relative to the lynching of certain Italian subjects at Tallulah, La., a report by the Secretary of State touching a claim for $5,000 presented by the Italian ambassador at Washington on behalf of Guiseppe Defina, on account of his being obliged to abandon his home and business.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 26, 1901.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13575) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. The report is printed in the RECORD. I do not know whether it is necessary to read it in full or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the report?

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa to make a statement as to the agreement of the conference committee on the important controverted points in the bill. I do not suppose that Senators have had time to read the report of the conference committee in the RECORD. I have not; nor have other Senators, I think, when we consider the length of the sessions we are now having. It seems to me that when a bill goes to the House, which we have debated for hours here and patiently considered, when it comes from conference there should be some statement made for the information of the Senate as to what has been done with the amendments which we adopted. For the information of the Senate I think the Senator from Iowa ought to give us such a statement.

Mr. ALLISON. In brief, the matters in difference between the two Houses were chiefly matters of amount. There was no legislation in controversy upon the bill, so far as I can recollect.

The Senate increased the appropriations in the aggregate amount to over a million dollars, or about that sum. In conference all these items were gone over, and the Senate yielded nearly one-half of the total, retaining, however, what they considered the most important items, to wit, those items relating to country roads, to sewage, and to filtering the water which flows into this city from the Potomac River.

There is no legislation in the conference report, so far as I know. I shall be glad to answer any questions in respect to items in the bill which Senators may desire to propound.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is probably my own fault that I have not read the conference report, which I was trying to do; and not having been able to do so, I am not in a position to ask the Senator specific questions, but will accept his statement. I thought it but proper that we should have some statement regarding what had been done by the conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

LETTERS OF JEFFERSON ON CUBAN ANNEXATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH on the 18th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to send to the Senate copies of letters written by Thomas Jefferson to President Madison and President Monroe concerning the annexation of Cuba.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] desires to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over, retaining its place.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The resolution may lie over another day to enable the Senator from Maine to prepare his amendment, and I ask that it retain its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CENSORSHIP OF TELEGRAMS FROM MANILA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether all telegrams from Manila were subject to censor prior to February 4, 1899; and if so, for how long prior to that date were all telegrams subjected to the examination of a censor.

The President is also requested to send to the Senate a copy of General Otis's first telegram informing the Administration that hostilities had commenced; also the hour at which said telegram was filed in the cable office at Manila.

The President is also requested to send to the Senate all instructions sent by the Administration or any of the officers of the Government to our officers in the Philippines between December 10, 1898, and February 5, 1899.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 2538, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," which was made a special order of business for the 10th day of December, 1900, by the order of the Senate, is entitled to its place and privileges as a special order of the Senate, and shall be placed on the Calendar of the Senate as a special order, entitled to such privileges under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that if this resolution should pass the special order named in it would be subject to a special order already on the Calendar relating to the salaries of judges.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, Mr. President, I differ with the Chair most respectfully as to what the effect of the resolution would be. I think it would restore the special order to all its privileges under Rule IX and Rule X, and those privileges are that it shall take precedence of any special order set for a later date than was fixed for the special order by unanimous consent of the Senate, the 10th day of December, 1900.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that the object of this resolution on my part is merely to get the judgment of the Senate upon a proposition relating to our rules, which is a very important one to the entire body. It will have no effect whatever upon the status of the Nicaragua Canal bill. I do not offer it with a view to affecting the status of the Nicaragua Canal bill, which I recognize as under the control of the Senate and which will remain under the control of the Senate until it shall either be destroyed or passed.

This resolution of mine is to correct what I think is a very serious error of opinion in the Senate on this question, and I propose, after the conclusion of a very few observations, to ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules for their consideration.

I wish to call attention, Mr. President, to the action of the Senate of the United States——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Alabama will kindly pardon me a moment, when my attention was called away something was done in regard to a bill which I have in charge. Will the Chair be kind enough to state what was done in regard to the judges' salary bill? Is that the bill in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Alabama will yield one moment, the Secretary will read the pending resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair called the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact, as it seemed to the Chair, that, there being now a special order known as the judges' salary bill, if the resolution of the Senator from Alabama should be adopted by the Senate, it would make the bill named in that resolution subject to the judges' salary bill as a special order.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to raise a question of order. The rules of the Senate provide that a motion to take up any measure shall be dealt with without debate. Therefore it is not competent to introduce a resolution that a certain measure is now up and shall be proceeded with and make that debatable. This is in substance an effort on the part of the Senator, who is the mover of the resolution, simply by an order to take up that Nicaragua Canal bill and displace the bill which I have in charge; and my point of order is that that is not debatable.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has either not heard or read what is before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps I have not. My attention was called away.

Mr. MORGAN. I announced distinctly that this resolution of mine had no effect upon the Nicaragua Canal bill, and is not intended in anywise to affect its status before the Senate at the present moment of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asked unanimous consent that he might make a few remarks before the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOAR. I would not for all the world put myself in any position of antagonism, much less of discourtesy, toward the Senator. I do not understand, then, that the Chair has ruled that this resolution, if adopted, will displace the judges' salary bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The intimation of the Chair was that it would not.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, then. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is entitled to the benefit of that intimation, but I feel constrained to say that I can not concede the ruling of the Chair as being a correct ruling under clause 2 of Rule X of the standing rules of the Senate, which provides:

When two or more special orders have been made for the same time they shall have precedence according to the order in which they were severally assigned, and that order shall only be changed by direction of the Senate.

What I was trying to call the attention of the Senate to, and particularly the attention of the Chair, was the fact that in 1858 the same question was raised as was made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] in the course of the debate on Saturday upon the bringing up of the Nicaragua Canal bill, and it was decided by the Senate. I will read that decision. The question of order was submitted by Mr. Stuart—and I think Mr. Stuart was pretty high authority——

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CLARKE.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I think I had much better take my seat and let Senators get through with everything they desire to do before I proceed with my remarks.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will recognize the propriety of my request when I make it.

Mr. MORGAN. I recognize the propriety of every request made by the Senator from New Hampshire when he first conceives it, of course, and before he makes it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of resolutions paying tribute to the memory of Hon. FRANK G. CLARKE, late a Representative from New Hampshire, at 5 o'clock this afternoon, instead of half past 5 o'clock.

I beg pardon of the Senator for interrupting his eloquence.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Stuart, on the 16th of February, 1858—submitted a question of order, whether a subject made the special order of the day for half past 12 o'clock, or for any other hour, for a particular day, and not during that day finally acted on, did not on any future day become a special order for the hour of 1 o'clock, unless the Senate should specifically determine otherwise?

The Vice-President thereupon took the sense of the Senate on the subject; and the Senate decided—

That the special orders which have been, or shall be, assigned for an earlier or later hour than 1 o'clock for a particular day shall, if not acted upon or completed on that day, be taken up or called on any future day, under the thirty-first rule, at the hour of 1 o'clock, unless otherwise determined by the Senate.

I read that in answer to the point which was made by the Senator from Rhode Island the other day when this case was up for the judgment of the Senate.

Here is the thirty-first rule, to which reference was made in that decision of the Senate:

31. When the hour shall arrive for the consideration of a special order, it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to take it up, unless the unfinished business of the preceding day shall be under consideration.

That, Mr. President, is all that the thirty-first rule contains. After that decision by the Senate the rules of the Senate were changed so as to conform to it and an addition was made to the rules.

Rule X provides:

RULE X.

SPECIAL ORDERS.

1. Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the Presiding Officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, and, if it is not finally disposed of on that day, it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

Clause 2 provides:

2. When two or more special orders have been made for the same time, they shall have precedence according to the order in which they were severally assigned, and that order shall only be changed by direction of the Senate.

I now lay before the Senate the state of the law as ruled by the vote of the Senate—Rule XXXI, which was corrected or which was added to by that vote of the Senate, and Rule X, which is the outgrowth of the debate on that resolution.

Now, what is the effect of it? It is that a bill which has been made a special order by a vote of two-thirds of the Senate shall not lose its privileges on the day, or any subsequent day, for which it was set, unless the Senate has finally disposed of the bill by its passage, by its defeat, or by a refusal to consider it. I will modify that last remark by saying its passage or by its defeat. Refusing to consider it at that time would not deprive a special order of its privileges.

Every Senator here is as much interested in this question as I am; and when the Senate has voted a special order for a certain time and the Senate on that day has not found it convenient to proceed with the consideration of it, that does not repeal the former order made upon the vote of two-thirds of the Senate; but that vote making the special order stands, and the Chair is bound to execute it against everything except the unfinished business coming over from a previous day.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any parliamentary method, in the opinion of the Senator from Alabama, by which the Senate may reconsider its action?

Mr. MORGAN. Of course there is.

Mr. ALDRICH. In making a special order?

Mr. MORGAN. I should think not when it was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate, then, is powerless forever after, if it once makes any order of business a special order, to displace it?

Mr. MORGAN. The Senate may have the power to reconsider within the limit of time which applies to all orders, bills, and resolutions on reconsideration, if it proceeds to reconsider by a motion for that purpose and to that effect. But, Mr. President, I must say that the Senate can not be held to the idea of having reconsidered its unanimous-consent agreement, because when I got up and asked unanimous consent that the appropriation bill then offered in the Senate should be considered without prejudice to the special order, and the objection came from the Senator from Rhode Island alone, which prevented that unanimous consent, and the vote was taken thereupon, I could not consider that that was a reconsideration of the special order. There was no motion to reconsider it, or anything of that kind.

Mr. President, I have disclaimed——

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will pardon me. I did not use the word "reconsider" in any technical sense.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought you did.

Mr. ALDRICH. No. My idea was to find out whether, in the opinion of the Senator from Alabama, the Senate having fixed that special order, that special order remained good forever and that there was no way by which the Senate by a majority vote could displace it.

Mr. MORGAN. No; not by a majority vote. You can not displace an order made by a two-thirds vote of the Senate by a majority vote any more than you can revoke a treaty by a majority vote of this body after it has been ratified by a two-thirds vote by the Senate when acting as part of the treaty-making power.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will examine the precedents, he will find that the Senate has done that repeatedly.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senate has ever done that, it must have been at some time when the Senate was slumbering in its views of its own privileges and its own rights. I have never heard of such a case before.

The Senator from Rhode Island is wiser than I am in the lore of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will find a case for the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. But that is not the question here, for no motion to reconsider has been made in this case at all, and I presume none will be made. If a motion to reconsider that special order is made, I shall be heard, of course, in opposition to it and will state the reasons why it should not be done.

I state again what I am trying to do now is not to give any preference or privilege to the canal bill or to advance it in any respect. I know its enemies in the Senate will take advantage of every possible advantage and opportunity to destroy it. I understand that perfectly well. All I can do is to perform my duty on this floor in regard to it, and I announced when I got up that my purpose in the introduction of this resolution was to bring the subject to the attention of the Committee on Rules. I now move to refer the resolution to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

INSTRUCTIONS TO PEACE COMMISSIONERS AT PARIS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the Senate on the 5th of February passed a resolution to print as a document 3,000 copies of the instructions and all accompanying papers of the President to the commissioners to negotiate the treaty with Spain at Paris. I find upon examining the papers sent to the Senate in this connection that one important telegram is not printed in the document, and I therefore ask that there be a reprint of the document of 3,000 copies, to contain this telegram.

After we had passed the order to print these instructions there was a delay of about two weeks. The papers were sent to the State Department, but I presume this telegram was overlooked, either by the printer or by the people who read the proof at the State Department. It appears to me that the telegram is important in connection with this matter. It reads as follows:

[Telegram.]

Hay to Day.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
(About November 1, 1898.)

Surely Spain can not expect us to turn the Philippines back and bear the cost of the war and all claims of our citizens for damages to life and property in Cuba without any indemnity but Porto Rico? Does she propose to pay in money the cost of the war and the claims of our citizens, and make full guaranties to the people of the islands, and grant to us concessions of naval and telegraph stations in the archipelago, and privilege to our commerce the same as enjoyed by Spain, rather than surrender the archipelago?

HAY.

The first instructions issued to the commissioners at Paris were of a very high-toned order. The President said to the commissioners:

It is my wish that throughout the negotiations intrusted to the commission the purpose and spirit with which the United States accepted the unwelcome necessity of war should be kept constantly in view. We took up arms only in obedience to the dictates of humanity and in the fulfillment of high public and moral obligations. We had no design of aggrandizement and no ambition of conquest.

Those were the instructions with which the commissioners started on their mission to Paris. On October 26, 1898, however, Mr. Hay telegraphed to Mr. Day, one of the commissioners, as follows:

The information which has come to the President since your departure convinces him that the acceptance of the cession of Luzon alone, leaving the rest of the islands subject to Spanish rule, or to be the subject of future contention, can not be justified on political, commercial, or humanitarian grounds. The cession must be of the whole archipelago or none.

On the 28th of October, 1898, Mr. Hay sent to Mr. Day the following dispatch:

While the Philippines can be justly claimed by conquest, which position must not be yielded, yet their disposition, control, and government the President prefers should be the subject of negotiation as provided in the protocol.

Showing we had finally reached the point where we were going to claim, and our commissioners were instructed to claim, the Philippines by conquest. We started out with the proposition that we had no design of aggrandizement, no ambition of conquest. This position, however, was declared untenable, and on the 3d of November Mr. Day telegraphed to the Department as follows:

UNITED STATES PEACE COMMISSION,
Paris, November 3, 1898—10 a. m.

(For the President.—Special.)

After a careful examination of the authorities the majority of the commission are clearly of opinion that our demand for the Philippine Islands can not be based on conquest. When the protocol was signed Manila was not captured, seige was in progress and capture made after the execution of the protocol. Captures made after agreement for armistice must be disregarded and status quo restored as far as practicable. We can require cession of Philippine Islands only as indemnity for losses and expenses of the war. Have in view, also, condition of islands, the broken power of Spain, anarchy in which our withdrawal would leave the islands, etc. These are legitimate factors. Have written fully.

Thursday, 11.30 morning. DAY.

In response to an inquiry addressed to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] as to what I am trying to get at, I will simply say that I am trying to illustrate from this correspondence the complete mental somersault of the President. The President starts out with a high philanthropic motive and he ends up with this proposition:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 5, 1898.

Yours of November 4, special, and that of Senator Davis received. The President has no purpose to question the commission's judgment as to the grounds upon which the cession of the archipelago is to be claimed. His only wish in that respect is to hold all the ground upon which we can fairly and justly make the claim. He recognizes fully the soundness of putting forward indemnity as the chief ground, but conquest is a consideration which ought not to be ignored. How our demand shall be presented, and the grounds upon which you will rest it, he confidently leaves with the commissioners. His great concern is that a treaty shall be effected in terms which will not only satisfy the present generation but, what is more important, be justified in the judgment of posterity.

In view of the original position that we had no desire for conquest and then of the demand that we should claim the Philippines as conquest, and finally the abandonment of that position and the invention of the claim of indemnity as the chief ground for acquiring territory, I say there is little force in the message of the President of last December, wherein he said:

> The fortune of war has thrown upon this nation an unsought trust which should be unselfishly discharged, and devolved upon this Government a moral as well as material responsibility toward these millions whom we have freed from an oppressive yoke.

Here is a clear chain of circumstances, starting from an exalted position, fixing our claim on moral grounds in response to the resolution through which we declared war against Spain, and degenerating into a proposition of indemnity and a demand that we shall assume any position necessary to enable us to acquire the islands.

> His only wish—

Mr. Hay says on November 5—> in that respect is to hold all the ground upon which we can fairly and justly make the claim.

In view of these facts, this telegram, which is rather a remarkable one, ought to become a part of the document. It is one of the papers sent to the Senate by the State Department when we were considering the Spanish treaty, and therefore it is a paper from which the injunction of secrecy was removed.

It is stated on page 212 of Senate Document 62, third session Fifty-fifth Congress, in the proceedings relating to an agreement upon the protocol, that the president of the Spanish commission presented to the American commissioners the final answer of the Spanish Government to the proposition of the American commissioners to take the Philippines. From that answer I quote the following, and believe it to demonstrate that the Philippines were not thrust upon the United States—that the fortune of war did not load the Philippines upon us—that Divine Providence can not be held responsible for what has occurred:

> Examined solely in the light of the legal principles which have guided the action of the Spanish commissioners during the course of these negotiations, the latter consider the American proposition in every way inadmissible, for the reason repeatedly set forth in previous documents forming a part of the protocol.
> Neither can they consider the said propositions as a satisfactory form of agreement and compromise between two opposing principles, since the terms which by way of concession are offered to Spain do not bear a proper proportion with the sovereignty which it is endeavored to compel us to relinquish in the Philippine Archipelago. Had they borne such proportion, Spain would have at once, for the sake of peace, made the sacrifice of accepting them. The American commission knows that the Spanish commission endeavored, although fruitlessly, to follow this course, going so far as to propose arbitration for the settlement of the principal questions.
> Spain then having on her part exhausted all diplomatic resources in the defense of what she considered her rights, and even for an equitable compromise, the Spanish commissioners are now asked to accept the American proposition in its entirety and without further discussion or to reject it, in which latter case, as the American commission understands, the peace negotiations will end and the protocol of Washington will consequently be broken. The Government of Her Majesty, moved by lofty reasons of patriotism and humanity, will not assume the responsibility of again bringing upon Spain all the horrors of war. In order to avoid them it resigns itself to the painful strait of submitting to the law of the victor, however harsh it may be, and as Spain lacks material means to defend the rights she believes are hers, having recorded them, she accepts the only terms the United States offers her for concluding of the treaty of peace. (Senate Doc. No. 62, pp. 212-213.)

President McKinley in his message says:

> The fortune of war has thrown upon this nation an unsought trust.

After reading the above, do you believe the trust was unsought?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I request that there be a reprint of 3,000 copies of the instructions and papers transmitted by the President to the commissioners at Paris, to include the undated telegram of about November 1.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what proof we have that it is one of the papers. I have no recollection of it. I have looked over the papers three or four times. I do not think anyone can say from the reading of the papers. I think we ought to have an authentic copy of the telegram before we agree to print it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Of course, I know it is very difficult to get information on this subject, and all the papers are not yet here. In transmitting these papers to the Senate the Secretary of State says:

> Only certain matters of collateral import which, in the opinion of the undersigned, it would be inconsistent with the public interest to communicate, but which, however, in no wise affected the negotiation as between the United States and Spain—

Are withheld.

This telegram was a part of the papers sent, and for what reason it was not printed with the others I do not know. I had the original and I copied it. I want it to become a part of the printed instructions.

Mr. LODGE. We have the originals here. They were all sent to the Printing Office. I should like to have an opportunity to examine it and see what the difficulty is. Nothing was suppressed here.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This evidently was either suppressed or left out by neglect. We were two weeks getting these instructions when we should have secured them in twenty-four hours.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will make another suggestion if the Chair will permit. I should like to refer this matter, and I move that the request, with the dispatch, be referred to the Senator from Massachusetts as chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, to investigate and report to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. It must be referred to a committee.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to refer it to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Committee on the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota moves to refer the matter to the Committee on the Philippines. Is there any objection?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think it is necessary to refer it. If it should turn out that that dispatch was sent with the papers which we certainly have on file here, I certainly think it ought to be printed along with the others, especially in view of the fact that attention has been called to it, and whether or not it is one of the official dispatches we can ascertain by investigation.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I want to find out. I read these papers over three times. They all went through the hands of the Secretary of the Senate to be printed for the Senate, and nobody had a right to suppress any paper, and I want to see whether any paper has been suppressed. I will report it back to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. That can be ascertained by to-morrow, and I think we all feel an interest in having everything printed that was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire its reference to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference of the matter to the Committee on the Philippines? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAM YACHT MAY.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 6012) to provide an American register for the steam yacht May.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. After this bill is disposed of, I shall call for the regular order.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHOUP. I move that the Senate resume consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment to secure the passage of a bill?

Mr. SHOUP. Certainly.

CLAIMS OF EX-CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

Mr. BATE. I ask unanimous consent, by the courtesy of the Senator who has the Army bill in charge, to call up the bill (H. R. 1136) for the relief of parties for property taken from them by military forces of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Is the bill reported from any committee?

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir; the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. Is it the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BATE. There is no objection to it now that I know of. There was the other day, but it has been explained.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me ask the Senator how much is carried by the bill?

Mr. BATE. I can not tell exactly. It depends upon the number; but it will not exceed $30,000.

Mr. BURROWS. How much in the aggregate?

Mr. BATE. Twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars will cover the whole thing. A great many of them are dead and gone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURROWS. One inquiry. Would the Senator have any objection to referring this matter to the Court of Claims?

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir; it would be a denial of justice comparatively. There are so many cases there. This matter has been gone over by Senators.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me? I looked at this bill, and as it came from the House it was an improperly drawn bill. It would amount to a denial of justice to refer it to the Court of Claims. The claims are all small, and I have found in my experience as chairman of the Committee on Claims that the Quartermaster-General's Department has always made very careful and much more satisfactory investigation of such claims than the Court of Claims. This really is a bill of honor, if I may be permitted to say so. It does not assume that there was any violation by the soldiers of the United States Army, acting under orders, of the terms of surrender, which authorized officers to take home with them their side arms and their private baggage and their horses, and also authorized private soldiers to do so.

Mr. BURROWS. It was not my purpose to object to this bill, but I desire to know from the Senator whether it would be agreeable to him to have it referred to the Court of Claims. But if he objects to that, I shall not interpose any objection. So he need not waste time on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 2, to strike out section 1, as follows:

SEC. 1. That the Quartermaster-General is directed to adopt such rules and instructions as may be necessary, so that those entitled may be protected, and the Government also protected from any fraud or impositions; and he shall issue his voucher to the claimant, which shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

And insert the following:

That the Quartermaster-General is directed, under such rules and regulations as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to investigate, or cause to be investigated, the claims of artillery and cavalry officers and private soldiers of the Confederate army for horses, side arms, and baggage alleged to have been taken from them by Federal troops, acting under orders, in violation of the terms of surrender of the Confederate armies, and he shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, issue his voucher to such persons as shall be shown by such investigation to be entitled thereto, which voucher shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 22, to strike out:

That no one shall be entitled to or receive any voucher as herein provided unless he shall satisfy the Quartermaster-General that he was paroled at the time of said surrender; that he has faithfully kept his parole in good faith.

And insert:

That no claimant shall be entitled to or receive any voucher as herein provided unless he shall establish to the satisfaction of the Quartermaster-General that he, or the person through or from whom he asserts said claim, was paroled at the time of said surrender; that he had kept his parole in good faith; that he was the actual owner of the horses, side arms, and baggage for which he claims compensation; that such property was taken from him by troops of the United States acting under orders and in violation of the terms of surrender under which he was paroled.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That no claimant shall be entitled to or receive any voucher as herein provided unless he shall establish to the satisfaction of the Quartermaster-General that he, or the person through or from whom he asserts said claim, was paroled at the time of said surrender; that he had kept his parole in good faith; that he was the actual owner of the horses, side arms, and baggage for which he claims compensation; that such property was taken from him by troops of the United States acting under orders and in violation of the terms of the surrender under which he was paroled. And if the soldier has died since his parole was received, the sum he may be entitled to shall be paid to his wife; if she be dead, then to his children; if he has no wife or child or children living, then to his parents or either of them if one of them be dead; and no other shall be entitled to receive the same. If he has minor children, the same may be paid to their guardians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, to strike out the preamble; which was agreed to.

AGREEMENT WITH MUSCOGEE OR CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE, Mr. CHANDLER, and others called for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, which is the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. THURSTON. Will not the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment while I ask for a vote on two conference reports? They were last evening ordered to be printed in the RECORD. The reports relate to two treaty agreements with the Creek and Cherokee nations.

Mr. SHOUP. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the report referred to by the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11821) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report has been read at length, and it appears in this morning's RECORD.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading be waived, and that the Senate agree to the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before I consent that the reading shall be dispensed with, I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska if this includes the recent agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations?

Mr. THURSTON. No, it does not. These are the Creek and the Cherokee agreements.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask whether any material changes were made in conference?

Mr. THURSTON. There are no changes in the Creek bill at all, except the change in dates made necessary by the fact that the agreement has been delayed. It is simple to carry the agreement into effect. The one principal amendment was simply embodying a law that we referred to. We embody it now in terms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

AGREEMENT WITH CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate another conference report, submitted last evening by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], which appears in full in this morning's RECORD, which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11820) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

WHITE MOUNTAIN APACHE RESERVATION.

Mr. THURSTON. I submit a conference report. It is very brief. The Senate recedes from its amendments. I ask for the present consideration of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10899) to restore to the public domain a small tract of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment on page 2, line 13, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment on page 3, line 6.

That the Senate recede from its amendment on page 3, lines 6 and 7.

That the Senate recede from its amendment on page 3, line 10.

JOHN M. THURSTON,
J. V. QUARLES,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,
C. D. SHELDEN,
JOHN S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the report printed and lie over, because there is a principle involved in this matter, although the tract of land is very small. The question is whether we shall recognize the title of the Indians to the mineral. If we do, it involves a precedent which would in the future carry to the Indians hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property that does not belong to them and ought not to belong to them. It would be to their detriment and to the injury of the development of that entire country.

Mr. THURSTON. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to examine the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the conference report will be printed in the RECORD and go over.

SPANISH WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to call up a conference report on Senate bill 2799.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report, which will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898, having met, after full and free conference have decided to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the bill of the Senate, and agree to the said bill with the following amendments:

Section 1, page 1, line 4, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Section 3, page 2, line 22, strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "order."

Section 5, page 3, line 7, strike out all after the word "clerk," to and including the word "languages," in lines 7 and 8.

Section 6, page 4, line 17, strike out all after the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof a period.

Section 8, page 5, line 1, strike out the word "affidavits."

In section 8, page 5, line 8, strike out all after the word "commission" to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof a period.

Section 9, page 5, line 17, after the word "based," insert the words "together with an itemized schedule, setting forth all damages claimed."

Section 9, page 5, line 17, strike out the word "It" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Said petition."

Section 9, page 5, line 21, after the word "attorney" insert the words "or legal representative."

Section 9, page 5, line 22, after the word "agent" strike out the word "or," and after the word "attorney" insert the words "or legal representative."

Section 12, page 7, line 5, strike out all after the word "commission" to the end of the section, and insert in lieu thereof the words "and no new trial or rehearing shall be had except upon motion made within sixty days of said award."

Strike out all of section 13, pages 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "When the commission is in doubt as to any question of law arising upon the facts in any case before them, they may state the facts and the question of law so arising and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision, and said court shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide the same."

Section 14, page 8, line 20, strike out all after the word "commission" to and including the word "claimant," in line 22.

Section 14, page 8, line 22, strike out the word "adjudged" and insert in lieu thereof the words "found to be."

Section 14, page 9, line 1, strike out all after the word "award" to and including the word "affirmance," in line 2.

J. B. FORAKER,
S. M. CULLOM,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
THAD. M. MAHON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BACON. I presume the Senator from Ohio will state what is the substance of the report.

Mr. FORAKER. In response to the request of the Senator from Georgia, I will remind the Senate that this bill as originally passed by the Senate when it went to the House was amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and adopting a substitute. The bill as it originally passed the Senate provided for a commission of three to hear and determine all claims of citizens of the United States against Spain, for which we were required by the treaty of peace to become responsible. The House amended it by providing that all those claims should be sent to the Court of Claims and be there passed upon.

When the bill came back to the Senate so amended, the Senate refused to concur. Therefore when a conference was had it was upon the Senate bill, and the conferees agreed to substitute five for three commissioners and to eliminate the provision which provided for an appeal from the award of the commissioners to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, substituting instead of that a provision that the commissioners might, when they had any difficulty about any question of law, certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States and take the judgment of that court. It further provided that section 8 of the bill as passed by the Senate should be so amended as not to require the commissioners, when they receive ex parte testimony from the State Department, which they were authorized to call for, to treat it as evidence.

The original provision was that they might call for all documents on file in the State Department, and that they should attach to the same such credibility or give to the same such weight as evidence as they might choose. That provision as to how they should treat it as testimony was eliminated by the conferees. I do not remember any other change that was made, except only such verbal changes as were necessary to be made to cause the bill to conform to those several amendments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How many commissioners are provided for?

Mr. FORAKER. Five commissioners instead of three, the award by the commissioners to be final, no appeal to be taken; but the commissioners are authorized to certify any question of law that may arise upon which they want the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States to that court for its opinion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask what the salaries of the commissioners are to be?

Mr. FORAKER. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish it were more.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I thought myself that the salary ought to be more, but that question was considered and decided adversely by the conferees.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to be understood by my inquiry as affirming anything to the contrary, but at the same time I should like to know from the learned Senator whether there is any doubt in his mind as to the constitutionality of the provision which authorizes the certification of a question from a commission to the Supreme Court, with the implied obligation of law upon the Supreme Court to answer the question? There may be a precedent for it; I do not know; but in the absence of such a precedent, I should very greatly doubt its constitutionality.

Mr. FORAKER. I should not doubt the constitutionality of our provision that the commission should make the certification, but whether the Supreme Court would feel obligated to give an opinion is another matter.

Mr. BACON. The question I suggest is not whether the Supreme Court would feel obligated to give an opinion, but whether by legislation we can confer that power upon the Supreme Court. That court is not a statutory court, but a constitutional court. Congress can not by legislation either add to or subtract from the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know of any reason why a commission created by Congress could not be authorized to do that, as the courts already are authorized to do it.

Mr. BACON. I do not intend to object. I simply thought it was not proper that that provision should be passed without some suggestion upon the subject for the consideration of the Senator in charge of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire that the report shall be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. The report is printed in the RECORD of yesterday in the House proceedings.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In the House proceedings, but not in the Senate proceedings. It has not been called to my attention, and I desire to have it lie over in order that I may examine it.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. Then the conference report will be printed in to-day's proceedings of the Senate, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be printed in to-day's proceedings.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. SHOUP. I move that at 5.30 o'clock this afternoon the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that notice has been given that eulogies will be delivered, commencing at 5 o'clock. It is questionable whether the eulogies will be concluded as early as 5.30. I therefore suggest to the Senator a modification of his request, so that immediately after the conclusion of the eulogies the Senate stand in recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. SHOUP. I accept that modification.

Mr. BACON. We can not hear on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The notice for the eulogies is for 5.30 o'clock.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It has been changed to 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Connecticut that the Senator from New Hampshire changed the notice to 5 o'clock. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho, that at half past 5 o'clock, or as soon thereafter as the eulogies shall have been concluded, the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13904) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 45, 51, 52, 56, and 62, upon which the committee were unable to agree; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. LITTLE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5978) authorizing the Attorney-General, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to appear in suits brought by States relative to school lands.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13865) relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed with an amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 163) regulating licenses to proprietors of theaters in the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, etc., to include in their report such alterations, changes, and recommendations as they may deem proper with reference to so much of the text of the bill as relates to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Army appropriation bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the Senator from Idaho to yield to me for one moment for a matter of pressing importance.

Mr. SHOUP. I must decline to yield further to anyone.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] yields to me for a moment. I proposed an amendment to the amendment yesterday, excluding substantially the granting of franchises. It removes one difficulty from the amendment, and it has found favor on both sides of the Chamber to some considerable degree.

If a vote could be taken upon my amendment now, or if the committee having in charge the matter would accept the amendment, it might direct the discussion which proceeds to other parts of the measure. I ask leave of the Senator from Alabama to move that amendment now and see whether it will be accepted by the Senate or by the committee. I understand the Senator will have the right to proceed at any time he chooses.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not had an opportunity to hear the amendment, and I will yield that it may be read.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read, if there be no objection.

Provided, That no sale, or lease, or other disposition of the public lands, or the timber thereon, or the mining rights therein, shall be made: And provided further, That no franchise shall be granted which is not approved by the President of the United States and is not in his judgment clearly necessary for the immediate government of the islands and indispensable for the interest of the people thereof and which can not without great public mischief be postponed until the establishment of permanent civil government, and all such franchises shall terminate one year after the establishment of such permanent civil government.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Committee on the Philippines reported the amendment favorably, and in their behalf I desire to say that I accept this amendment to their amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. I will yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to say, Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Alabama, that I see no reason why we should not go as far in the matter of franchises to be granted in the Philippine Islands as we went in the franchises to be granted in Porto Rico. We there expressly stipulated that they should be submitted to Congress, and that Congress should have the power to annul them. In the original Porto Rican bill there was a provision substantially the same as that contained in this amendment, and after full discussion, which we have not now the opportunity to give, it was stricken out and the power was given to Congress.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, it has occurred to me that there might be some little railroad or a street railroad that was wanted in a hurry; and it is made terminable in twelve months, and is to be held by the President to be indispensably necessary. I ought not to abuse the courtesy of the Senator from Alabama. If this amendment may be treated as accepted, then it will be in order for the Senator from Georgia to move an addition, if he sees fit, hereafter.

Mr. LODGE. If my colleague will allow me, I will state to the Senator from Georgia that the revocation is already in the amendment.

Mr. BACON. The revocation of what?

Mr. LODGE. A provision for revoking the franchise.

Mr. BACON. Not by Congress. It does not say by Congress.

Mr. LODGE. It is to be done by the Government of the United States, as a matter of course.

Mr. BACON. I do not think so.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the proposed amendment?

Mr. BACON. I have no objection if it is understood that the acceptance of this amendment does not preclude an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Of course.

Mr. HOAR. It will be amendable in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I wish the Senator would so determine——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I must decline to permit a debate to spring up on a collateral matter about which there is a strong disagreement among Senators as to what the amendment should express, and I prefer to go on.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to state, however, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be printed as it appears, modified.

Mr. MORGAN. As far as I have had an opportunity of examining it at all from its reading here for the first time it impresses me favorably, but I could not give my consent to have it now adopted without looking into the matter further. My preference in regard to amendments of this kind would be for the Foraker resolution, which was adopted here soon after we started in this enterprise of governing foreign territories.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow the amendment to be printed at once?

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to having it printed.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed.

Mr. BURROWS. As modified?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As modified.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that the amendment is accepted by the committee that reported this bill.

Now, Mr. President, before I proceed with my remarks this morning I wish to make a statement which I very rarely feel called upon to make, in regard to an article that appeared in a newspaper of the city this morning, stating that it had been agreed between Democrats that no vote on this bill or this amendment should be taken before the 4th day of March. I wish utterly to deny the truth of that statement in every possible way and in every possible particular. No agreement has been made, no conference has been held, no interchange of opinion on that subject has taken place between the Democrats on this side of the Chamber so far as I know or believe.

Mr. BACON. And no suggestion.

Mr. MORGAN. And no suggestion. Why that paper should have indulged itself in that fabrication it is impossible for me to say. I do not care anything about it except merely I do not wish to have the Senate understand that I have occupied or will occupy one moment of the time of this body otherwise than in a fair debate of the bill which is before us on principles that I think are entirely justifiable and commendable.

I see that the chairman of the Committee on Relations with Cuba is in the Senate, and I wish to ask that Senator before I proceed with my remarks whether it is the intention of his committee to press the Cuban amendment to a vote upon this bill?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope we may have order in the Chamber. I can not hear the Senator from Alabama, although I am only 10 feet from him. It is not his fault, but it is the fault of the conversation by others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will resume their seats and conversation in the Senate will cease.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I had hoped, Mr. President, I will say in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Alabama, that there would be a practical unanimity of the Senate for the putting of this amendment on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. There can not be a unanimity upon the paper that has been presented here by the committee without some effort to amend it in particulars that are not therein stated or alluded to. Neither do I think that the Senate is in a condition where it can possibly give intelligent consideration to that great proposition. I think we are venturing upon ground of extreme peril to the Government of the United States and also to the people of Cuba by taking up this matter to be discussed at this time and under the state of information we now have in respect of it. If it is the intention of that committee to press this amendment upon the bill, of course I want to devote some attention to it; but if the amendment should be withdrawn or a statement should be made that it would not be pressed, of course that is a different matter.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I should not feel justified in withdrawing the amendment. I think it is very important that it should be passed at this session and upon this bill. I believe that it will settle what may be called the Cuban question satisfactorily to the people of Cuba and satisfactorily to our people. I trust that there will be no serious opposition to it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I must therefore include in my remarks on this occasion both of these great amendments. I wish to say in regard to the Cuban feature of this business that it has not been, I think, an hour since a resolution passed this body requiring the Secretary of State or somebody to furnish us with an English translation of the Cuban constitution as it appeared in a Cuban paper, the Diario, I believe it was, and that is as near an approach as we have had yet to anything like official action in regard to that constitution or official information as to what it contains. I am totally ignorant of the provisions of that constitution. If I had an opportunity even for an hour to look it over, I might possibly become satisfied that there was no want of harmony between the proposed amendment to this bill and that constitution as resolved upon by the Cuban people.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am advised that there is being made now in Cuba an unofficial translation of the constitution as far as it has progressed. I suppose it can not reach here——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this is certainly a very grave matter, and we are very anxious to hear; but the Senator does not speak in a tone of voice that makes it possible to hear what he says, although there is comparative quiet in the Chamber.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am speaking about as loudly as I can. If the Senate will be in order, I think I can be heard.

A SENATOR. Louder.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Well, Mr. President, I will take my seat.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, for one I am without information as to what is the constitution of Cuba or that there is such an instrument in existence; that the Cuban constitutional convention has finally acted upon any document that is intended to stand in the place of the organic law of that island when it is erected into a separate and autonomous government, and inasmuch as the Senator from Connecticut, the chairman of the committee, is not willing to say that he will withdraw that amendment, I hope the Senate will not feel that I am filibustering if I undertake to express my opinion about as much of the case as I understand. I know a good deal about the case outside of the constitution, and I have it by me in black and white on Cuban authority as well as other authority.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not like to be put in the position of declining to give any information in my power in relation to this matter. I endeavored to do so, and I thought that Senators were not inclined to listen. I was saying that I understood there was being prepared in Cuba what might be called an unofficial translation of the constitution, but manifestly it could not reach here in three or four days, but that the draft of the proposed constitution has been published in this country, and I supposed that Senators who were interested in the matter had kept track of any changes that have been made therein. There have been very few, so far as I know, so the original draft of the constitution as published in the papers in this country gives to the Senate the practical information as to the provisions of that constitution.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, I still have no information about it, and surely I can not get any information about it before I am obliged, for the sake of propriety, on this occasion to close my remarks, as the Senate will proceed with its business upon this bill and upon other measures. So I am in doubt about it, and if I vote for or vote against the proposition of the Committee on Cuban Relations I must do it in the dark. That is all that I can say.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I say one word more?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has been very manifest, Mr. President, that Congress could not act upon this matter up to the present time. The Senator yesterday, in speaking of the Philippine question, complained—I do not know that I ought to use that word—but he stated that it had been before the Senate at the last session and had not been acted upon. He thought there had been little disposition to act upon it, and therefore it was not fair to bring it forward at this time as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill; that it ought to have been brought forward earlier.

But it is very manifest that the matter of the Cuban relations could not have been acted upon until the constitution in Cuba had been practically completed by the convention, and the convention was considering what the future relations between Cuba and the United States should be. I do not think there can be any complaint that the matter has not been brought forward as soon as it could be, and I think it is of the utmost importance that these relations should be settled now, at this session of Congress, if it is possible to do so.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not complaining, Mr. President, that the matter has not been brought forward as soon as it could be. I am complaining about this Cuban affair; that it is brought forward sooner than it can be properly brought forward, for we have not got the facts. We are anticipating in every respect what Cuba has done and what Cuba desires to do and what we ought to do in a certain event of which we are not as yet informed or upon certain conditions which are as yet obscure to us entirely. We do not know what objection they have made; we do not know whether they have made provisions that will admit of the contentions that are suggested by us and the contentions of the Government of the United States, which in their character are far more diplomatic than legislative, it seems to me.

Mr. President, I wish to do the Republican party of this Chamber all possible justice, and I am particularly anxious that nothing I shall say in this matter shall touch at all upon the merits, the character, the patriotism, or the fidelity of the President of the United States in the proper administration of this Government under the Constitution, for I hold that gentleman in very high personal esteem and I would say nothing that would reflect upon him. But he is the President of the United States, and when he permits himself to be drawn into a condition or into an attitude which I conceive to be contrary to the best interests of this Government and contrary to fair dealing and contrary to the proper methods of legislation, I shall deal with him as if he was my personal enemy so far as liberty of speech is concerned.

Now, Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate again—for this question can not down until we have finished our action upon it—to the very strange attitude in which the President of the United States is placed before this body, I hope and believe through the anxieties of his friends. He comes to us with estimates which he is required to make under the law through his officer, the Secretary of War, for appropriations for the Army of the United States, to take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1901.

The House framed its bill upon those estimates and sent it to the Senate, containing no reference whatever to affairs in the Philippines or in Cuba except merely to make provision for the Army that might be employed in both places upon the missions or expeditions that they are discharging there now. The Senate, however, through its committees, have brought forward two very important amendments to the bill. I must assume from the anxiety which is exhibited here and from some statements which have fallen from Senators that the President of the United States is very anxious to have both these amendments put upon the bill. I shall therefore treat the matter as if he were very anxious, though from what I happen to have heard about it from sources worthy of credit I can hardly believe that he is very anxious.

The President may be very anxious to avoid an extra session of Congress, but if he is, Mr. President, he has changed his mind within a few days, because a few days ago I might say that he was very anxious to have it and that he has never been afraid of an extra session of Congress. I do not want an extra session of Congress for the sake of staying here and laboring at a time when I should like to have relief from the duties that I have to share in with the balance of you; but I will not shrink from it at all if our duties to the country require that such a session should be held. But I will do nothing to promote that view of the question or to force the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States into an attitude where an extra session is necessary. That is not a part of my duty. But, Mr. President, I will not abstain or refrain from doing what I conceive to be incumbent upon me under my oath as a Senator in dealing with any measure before the Senate, though that might result in the holding of an extra session of Congress.

Now, sir, it is an unfortunate thing for any Administration that in the last week of the session of Congress now about to expire, and upon an appropriation bill of the most vital necessity and importance to this country, the President of the United States should require us to pass that bill for the support of the Army, but that in passing it he should load it with two amendments to which we are strongly and earnestly opposed, and that we shall not have a bill for the supply of the Army after the first day of July next unless we will accept from the Administration the load of these two amendments.

We have been hearing here for years and years debated at every session of Congress the great question as to whether or not general legislation should be loaded upon appropriation bills. What is the object of that rule, which is "more honored in the breach than in the observance," in the Senate of the United States? It is that the Government shall have its supplies, without reference to other great questions pending before Congress or agitating the country, and without their being loaded upon those measures which are requisite for the carrying on of the operations of the Government. And here the President of the United States asks us to pass this Army appropriation bill, knowing that if we do not pass it now, or in an extra session to be held between this and the first day of July, the Army of the United States must necessarily go to pieces.

Under the Constitution it must go to pieces. There is no law that will exist after the first day of July under which the President of the United States can supply the Army with money, pay the soldiers and the officers and the transportation, the quartermaster and the commissary supplies, unless this bill or some bill like it is passed at this session or an extra session shall be held between this and that period of time.

Now, this is the most emergent bill of appropriation that can possibly be brought before the Senate of the United States, and the emergency is intensified in this case for the reason that in China, in the Philippines, in Cuba, and in Porto Rico, countries that are outside of the former limits of the United States, we are now maintaining armies that are necessary to be maintained in each of those places for the purpose of preserving the rights of the United States Government. That is what we are doing. The President demands supplies for those things, and when we stand ready to vote them, anxious to supply the Army, he comes in at the very last hour of this Congress and loads these bills down with two propositions to increase his powers in Cuba and in the Philippines.

Now, was an Administration ever before put in that shape? Did an Administration ever before undertake to load upon its own appropriation bills a measure which it might consider very advantageous to the country? Sir, you might just as well put the subsidy bill or the oleomargarine bill on this appropriation bill, or any other bill that the President might want to pass, and say to the Congress of the United States: "Unless you will swallow these measures which I demand shall be put as amendments upon this bill you shall be accused of breaking up the Army supply for the United States."

Mr. President, the injustice of that attitude toward the minority in this Senate is horrible. It can not be explained away. Sir, if I felt that this measure in regard to the Philippines was a constitutional measure, but unwise in policy, I would yield to that demand of the President of the United States and put it upon his bill and let him take the responsibility of it. If I did not feel that the Cuban measure is extremely dangerous in defining the policy of this Government toward those islands I would withdraw my objection to that and let that amendment go on this bill rather than be compelled to vote so as to refuse to supply the Army after the 1st day of July next with the soldiers in China, in the Philippines, in Cuba, and in Porto Rico.

I would, sir, for the sake of the patriotic duty resting upon me to supply those troops with money, forego any opinion I might entertain in respect of the policy of this measure brought before the Senate on this occasion. But when these measures are grossly unconstitutional, and when each one of them undertakes to enlarge the power of the President of the United States inconceivably, I am confronted with the demand made by the President of the United States: "You shall vote against the Army and the supplies to the soldiers unless you stand here and deliver what I further demand of you—the putting of an unconstitutional load upon this Army bill."

Senators and their friends, in their anxiety to get whatever advantage there may be or may be supposed to be out of this Philippine amendment, may be able to justify themselves in their own estimation for putting the Senate of the United States in this peculiar attitude to-day. But, sir, I resent it. Whether it comes from that side of the Chamber as a political organization or from the President of the United States—it makes no difference how—I resent it as an outrage upon the rights of the minority in this Chamber. Here is the Democratic party to be accused before this country of refusing to vote supplies for the Army in the field and engaged in military operations—in actual open hostilities—because the President of the United States thinks he has got us in a corner and he can claim this opportunity to force upon this bill an enlargement of his powers so extraordinary that it shocks the common sense of the whole country as well as the conscience of every man in it.

Why is the President of the United States here making this demand upon us that we shall delegate to him all the powers of Congress, that he may go into the Philippines as a legislator, judge, chief magistrate, as well as commander in chief, and there execute his will in his own fashion, and direct every man he appoints to an office in that country as to the manner in which he shall discharge his duties? Why does he come here and ask the Congress of the United States to yield up this extraordinary power to him? Who can excuse it? Who dares even apologize for it?

When I had the floor yesterday, Mr. President, I was discussing the parallel between the pending Philippine amendment and the acts of the Eighth Congress, in 1803, in respect of the government of the territory of Louisiana. I have nothing more to add upon that particular branch of the proposition except to discuss the next proposition which arises in my mind, when I shall have to refer to some authorities applying to both.

The government instituted in 1898 for Hawaii has been appealed to as the precedent for this legislation. I wish now to enter upon a comparison of that act of Congress with this proposed amendment. In doing so I shall have to ask leave to insert that act in my remarks, as it is not long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FORAKER in the chair). If there be no objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The act referred to is as follows:

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 51.]

Joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

Whereas the Government of the Republic of Hawaii having, in due form, signified its consent, in the manner provided by its constitution, to cede absolutely and without reserve to the United States of America all rights of sovereignty of whatsoever kind in and over the Hawaiian Islands and their dependencies, and also to cede and transfer to the United States the absolute fee and ownership of all public, Government, or Crown lands, public buildings or edifices, ports, harbors, military equipment, and all other public property of every kind and description belonging to the government of the Hawaiian Islands, together with every right and appurtenance thereunto appertaining: Therefore

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said cession is accepted, ratified, and confirmed, and that the said Hawaiian Islands and their dependencies be, and they are hereby, annexed as a part of the territory of the United States and are subject to the sovereign dominion thereof, and that all and singular the property and rights hereinbefore mentioned are vested in the United States of America.

The existing laws of the United States relative to public lands shall not apply to such lands in the Hawaiian Islands; but the Congress of the United States shall enact special laws for their management and disposition: Provided, That all revenue from or proceeds of the same, except as regards such part thereof as may be used or occupied for the civil, military, or naval purposes of the United States, or may be assigned for the use of the local government, shall be used solely for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands for educational and other public purposes.

Until Congress shall provide for the government of such islands all the civil, judicial, and military powers exercised by the officers of the existing government in said islands shall be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct; and the President shall have power to remove said officers and fill the vacancies so occasioned.

The existing treaties of the Hawaiian Islands with foreign nations shall forthwith cease and determine, being replaced by such treaties as may exist, or as may be hereafter concluded, between the United States and such foreign nations. The municipal legislation of the Hawaiian Islands, not enacted for the fulfillment of the treaties so extinguished, and not inconsistent with this joint resolution nor contrary to the Constitution of the United States nor to any existing treaty of the United States, shall remain in force until the Congress of the United States shall otherwise determine.

Until legislation shall be enacted extending the United States customs laws and regulations to the Hawaiian Islands the existing customs relations of the Hawaiian Islands with the United States and other countries shall remain unchanged.

The public debt of the republic of Hawaii, lawfully existing at the date of the passage of this joint resolution, including the amounts due to depositors in the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank, is hereby assumed by the Government of the United States; but the liability of the United States in this regard shall in no case exceed $4,000,000. So long, however, as the existing government and the present commercial relations of the Hawaiian Islands are continued as hereinbefore provided, said government shall continue to pay the interest on said debt.

There shall be no further immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands, except upon such conditions as are now or may hereafter be allowed by the laws of the United States; and no Chinese, by reason of anything herein contained, shall be allowed to enter the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

The President shall appoint five commissioners, at least two of whom shall be residents of the Hawaiian Islands, who shall, as soon as reasonably practicable, recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the Hawaiian Islands as they shall deem necessary or proper.

SEC. 2. That the commissioners hereinbefore provided for shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be immediately available, to be expended at the discretion of the President of the United States of America, for the purpose of carrying this joint resolution into effect.

Approved, July 7, 1898.

Mr. MORGAN. In order that the country may understand perfectly what the situation is—for, Mr. President, I am speaking not to the Senate of the United States to-day, though I would fain address some remarks to the Senate that might affect their fixed purpose to do an act of great injustice to the country and to themselves also; but it is not in my province to take charge of their opinions or their consciences—but I have an appeal to make to the people of the United States which will not fail to address itself to men who are conscientiously considering public subjects and who uphold the balance of justice so evenly upon all public occasions and on all public subjects that I do not fear to trust my poor judgment into their hands.

Their judgment I am always willing to abide by, but I want to inform them as we go along, so that they may understand the situation and excuse me if I am wrong in the attitude I assume before the Senate.

In the Hawaiian act, which I have just caused to be inserted in the RECORD, there is this provision:

> Until Congress shall provide for the government of such islands all the civil, judicial, and military powers exercised by the officers of the existing government in said islands shall be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct; and the President shall have power to remove said officers and fill the vacancies so occasioned.

All of this power, and a great deal more, is given to the President of the United States in the pending amendment, and he is not put under the restraints which are contained in the Hawaiian act. In that act he was restrained and confined to the persons who were officers of the existing government in said islands at the time the act was passed. We did not leave the authority open to him to go out and explore all the islands of Hawaii to find such persons as he might choose to take up and install into office there. We recognized the existence of a government there and the existence of officers who were then in commission under the authority of the republic of Hawaii. We said as to those, he may remove them at his pleasure, as he removes officers of the United States Government here amongst us, and fill the vacancies so occasioned.

Suppose he had removed the governor, who was at that time called the president of Hawaii, and was the president of Hawaii, or suppose he had removed the judges of the supreme court, or any other court of Hawaii, and had come to fill the vacancies, where would he have come? Would he go to Hawaii and fill those vacancies without coming to the Senate of the United States? Certainly not. The Constitution and laws of the United States, which were expressly carried into Hawaii by that act, would have compelled him to come with those appointments to the Senate. But in the pending amendment he does not have to do that. He can go to the Philippine Islands and make his appointments without coming to the Senate. We see, in that particular, how far these two acts parallel each other. They are not even ninety-ninth cousins of each other. This act continues:

The municipal legislation of the Hawaiian Islands, not enacted for the fulfillment of the treaties so extinguished, and not inconsistent with this joint resolution nor contrary to the Constitution of the United States nor to any existing treaty of the United States, shall remain in force until the Congress of the United States shall otherwise determine.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] offered an amendment here on yesterday to put a similar provision—one not quite so strong as that—into the pending amendment, but the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] said it was entirely useless, and he objected to it; and it will not go in here unless Senators on that side of the Chamber overrule the Senator from Wisconsin, who is in charge of this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not in charge of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I supposed he was.

Mr. President, why did that committee not put into this provision "not inconsistent with this act" (or joint resolution as in that case) "nor contrary to the Constitution of the United States nor to any existing treaty of the United States?" Why did they put into that act that the municipal legislation of Hawaii should remain in force until Congress should otherwise determine? What was the municipal legislation of Hawaii? It was a body of laws, beginning with a constitution and passing through every phase of legislative procedure and contemplation which was the equal of any constitution and the equal of any body of laws in any State in the American Union.

Hawaii was a republic to begin with. It had all the qualities and the purposes and the powers of a republican government conformed to our Government. In every respect its laws were conformed to the laws of the United States, except in some trifling differences, and we were perfectly justified in recognizing that municipal code as a body of laws that should continue to exist in Hawaii, so far as they were not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, and that the officials, who had been appointed and were then in discharge of the duties of office under that government, should remain, subject to the powers of the President of the United States to remove them and to fill the vacancies thereby occasioned.

What parallel is there between that act and this amendment, which makes no provision of this kind, but, on the contrary, excludes this very provision by its necessary terms from being a part of this amendment?

We then went on to legislate about the public debt of Hawaii and about the revenue, and provided:

Until legislation shall be enacted extending the United States customs laws and regulations to the Hawaiian Islands the existing customs relations of the Hawaiian Islands with the United States and other countries shall remain unchanged.

Did you put that into this bill? No; and you will never do that. You will never do it for the very reason that one of the purposes of this bill is to get the tariff or customs laws into the grasp of the President of the United States and ratify his acts in advance by act of Congress, so that he may do in the Philippine Islands for all time to come, until this act is repealed, exactly what he did in Porto Rico between the date of the signature and promulgation of the treaty of Paris and the establishment of a Territorial government in that island.

During that time the President of the United States controlled with absolute power, at his discretion, all the customs laws and revenues of Porto Rico as well as the laws of internal taxation according to his will and pleasure, and nobody thought to rise in Congress and say that he had no right to do it, for he had the right to do it under those conditions, but now Congress feels the necessity, urged to it by the demand, I think, by speculators and contrivers, of forming a government, a Congressional government, in the Philippine Islands, and in doing so it wants to leave in the hands of the President of the United States the same powers he exercised in Porto Rico and would exercise in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of reaping for his friends a harvest of gold out of those tariff laws for their enrichment.

There is no other conclusion, Mr. President, that can be reached upon a fair analysis of this bill, and there is no other conclusion that can be reached historically, when we come to look at what the President did, and what he had the right to do, in the island of Porto Rico, between the time of the ratification of the Paris treaty and the time we instituted a Territorial government there.

That lease of arbitrary and uncontrolled power in the hands of the President of the United States is what is contended for in this bill. It is the necessary effect of this bill, and the history of our dealings with Porto Rico shows that that is the purpose of this bill.

We went further in that act and provided that there should be no immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands. How is it about Chinese in the Philippines? They have been pouring into those islands for three centuries, and they are in a large sense, a very large sense, the merchants of the Philippines. They work the natives, the Igorrotes, the Negritos, and even the Tagalogs on their rice farms, on their sugar plantations and banana fields, and in whatever else they want to work them in. They pay them and become the lords and masters of the country in a very extensive sense in all of those different islands, and particularly in Luzon.

Our laws here protecting the people and the Government of the United States against a surging immigration of Chinese that threatened the overflow of this country, threatened its labor, and all that—our laws went so far in the direction of checking this Chinese immigration that it has been said time and again, and with great truth, that the Congress let the treaty with China stand, but deliberately violated some of its most important provisions in their enactments. I voted for those violations, if they are such.

I must state, however, that at the time I gave, and I now give, the reasons or the excuse for that, that the Emperor of China had passed a decree forbidding his people to come to the United States or to go to any foreign country, and I voted to carry out that decree of the Emperor, which, while it did not violate the Burlingame treaty or any other treaty, was necessarily in antagonism to the principles of free immigration of Chinamen into the United States. But did we not pass laws here, and are they not yet upon the statute books, filled up with penalties and with definitions of crimes and punishments which we are now exerting against Chinese who come to this country? Are we not now earnestly engaged in using all the powers of this country, executive and judicial, for the purpose of excluding Chinese immigration to the United States?

What are we going to do about it in this bill? When we passed the Hawaiian bill we put in an express provision which prevented the further immigration of Chinese into that country, except under the laws of the United States. In this bill there is no such provision. The men who can go down there under corporate charters or for private gain to establish sugar and rice and banana plantations and other important industries in that land, such as the cultivation of manila hemp, out of which mints of money have been realized by the owners of property in the Philippines, are at perfect liberty to do what Hawaii did before we interposed our power to prevent it—to invite Chinese labor or Japanese labor, or contract labor from any nation in the world on terms that will suit them—they are perfectly at liberty to do so—and Congress does not dare to raise its voice in this amendment to this bill for the purpose of enforcing its policy and its laws against Chinese immigration, while in the Hawaiian bill we came out expressly and made this provision:

There shall be no further immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands, except upon such conditions as are now or may hereafter be allowed by the laws of the United States; and no Chinese, by reason of anything herein contained, shall be allowed to enter the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

We put that provision in that act as a necessary precaution, harmonizing perfectly with our national policy for the exclusion of Chinese immigration and hired or contract labor into the United States and also into Hawaii. We protected the United States as well as Hawaii by this act of annexation, and yet that is quoted as authority here to support this amendment.

Mr. President, it is an impossible conception that that act annexing Hawaii can have any sort of bearing as a rule of interpretation for the measure that is now before the Senate.

Let me ask again, Why did we not put that provision into this amendment? For reply to that question I can not go to the Senate, but I can go to the holders of great sugar and rice estates, and manila-hemp properties, and the like of that. I can go to them, and if they made a candid answer it would be this: "We shall need Chinese labor in the Philippines to develop the industries of that country, and we want free access to China for all the laborers that we can carry there." We have got to take it and swallow it if we carry this amendment. You gentlemen who pass it will have to account for it hereafter. Thank God, I will not have to account for it, for I disclaim all responsibility for it.

Here is the Constitution of the United States recognized in Hawaii, a country that was allowed to remain under the government of a republican President, an independent President, from the time of the passage of that act until such time as we instituted there a Territorial government. What was the result? I happened to have the honor—and I appreciated it very highly—of being one of the commissioners sent to Hawaii for the purpose of organizing a system of laws and to introduce a Territorial government into those islands. The first question I had the honor to suggest to my brother commissioners was this: "Your courts are in session here"—two of those commissioners were Hawaiians; one was the governor or the President and another was the chief justice of the supreme court, and they were men of very great ability and of the highest possible character—I put to that tribunal this question: "Your courts are in session here. The constitution of Hawaii requires that all process of every kind shall run in the name of the Republic of Hawaii, but here is an act of annexation which has extinguished your sovereignty, and which has brought Hawaii within the limits of the United States, where the Constitution of the United States is supreme. What are we going to do about that?" The President was consulted; his opinion and his order was taken; and it was that process in Hawaii should still run in the name of the Republic of Hawaii; that the constitution and laws of Hawaii for the government of that country had been adopted by Congress in solido, and without exception or amendment, for the further government of that country until the Congress of the United States should organize there a Territorial government.

So it went, and men were indicted by the Republic of Hawaii, tried upon a jury system that allowed capital punishment to be inflicted upon the vote of eight out of twelve jurors, and dispensed with a grand jury entirely. Men were convicted of capital offenses and hanged in Hawaii under that state of law before we formed a Territorial government. They were indicted in the name of the Republic of Hawaii.

So much, Mr. President, for the potency of an act of Congress in the adoption of a state of law existing in a foreign country for its government until such time as Congress might choose to adopt a different form of government. We have never done anything of that kind in regard to the Philippines. We have allowed the Spanish law to stand there, and without any sort of change. It is there to-day.

I wish now to call the attention of the Senate to some decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which show the effect of that situation. I will repeat that statement, Mr. President, in order, if I can, to emphasize it, that the Congress of the United States has not inaugurated any government in the Philippines, but it found a government there, which is in full force and effect, according to what the Supreme Court of the United States has decided to be the law of the United States, and the effect of the Constitution of the United States upon those laws. I read from the case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan, 3 Howard, page 225:

> If it were true that the United States acquired the whole of Alabama from Spain, no such consequences would result as those contended for. It can not be admitted that the King of Spain could, by treaty or otherwise, impart to the United States any of his royal prerogatives, and much less can it be admitted that they have capacity to receive or power to exercise them. Every nation acquiring territory, by treaty or otherwise, must hold it subject to the constitution and laws of its own government, and not according to those of the government ceding it.

I do not think it is necessary to enlarge upon that, Mr. President. I think that the judicial establishment of the United States in all of its parts and in every locality in this country not only will recognize that as being the law, but has oftentimes recognized it and never disputed it.

But it does not seem to settle all the questions that can possibly arise out of this category that we are struggling with now, for it appears that the Supreme Court of the United States is now ruminating or consulting upon questions that challenge the correctness of that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, some of them contending that there is no modification of Spanish law in Porto Rico or in the Philippines, of course, by the effect of the operation of the Constitution of the United States, for the simple reason that the Constitution is not there; that it has never been extended by act of Congress into that country.

I wish to excuse myself from the discussion of a proposition that is so absurd as that. I think I can just content myself with relying upon its gross absurdity, and let the argument on the other side go.

Then it appears from this decision that when we acquired the Philippines by the treaty of Paris we acquired the government that was there and the laws of Spain that governed those people until they should be changed by Congress, but under the condition, that those laws gave way to the statutes of the United States applicable to that territory, and also to the Constitution of the United States applicable to all the Territories and all the places that are in the territorial limits of this Government. That is the present situation.

Now comes the repealing clause in this act, which has been put upon it by the vote of the Senate. I want to read it, so as to get the text of it in my remarks. Here it is:

> All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

We find that the decision in the case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan carried the laws of the United States that were applicable to the Territories at large, to all the Territories alike, into those islands. Here comes, then, the provision of this act which says that—

> All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

That sweeps by the board, Mr. President, all the general statutes that we have enacted in Congress now for more than a hundred years applicable alike to all the Territorial governments in this country. They are all swept out of the way of this amendment and of the administration of the law in the Philippines. They are abolished. They are all actually repealed.

If it said they are actually repealed so far as they are inconsistent with this act or the purposes of this act, then there might have been some part of them reserved from the repealing power of Congress; but here is a broad, sweeping declaration that these laws, because they are inconsistent with this act, these laws not specially reenacted in this act, are repealed, and all of that body of law that we have ordained from time to time and instituted for the purpose of controlling the Territories by general laws is swept out of the way of this tremendous amendment, this rider upon an appropriation bill.

I have concluded all I wanted to say in regard to the acts which were attributed to Mr. Jefferson and the acts attributed to the Congress in 1898 in the enactment of the Hawaiian annexation law, and which were supposed to justify this measure, and I feel that I have sufficiently demonstrated that there is no precedent in either of those laws for what we are doing now. The law that we are now trying to enact stands exactly opposed, not only to those acts in regard to Louisiana territory and Hawaii, but stands confessedly opposed to every general law that Congress has ever enacted for the government of the Territories at large.

Mr. President, I will now return to the further consideration of the power of the Congress to delegate its civil, military, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippines to the President, to be by him vested in such persons as he may select for executing these offices. That is a question of very great importance, and one that is fundamental in this Government as in all free parliamentary governments. In support of my proposition that the Congress has no such power, I desire to have read by the Secretary, for the information of the Senate, a note that is appended to Hayburn's case in Second Dallas, which, I suppose, is a note prepared by Judge Curtis, and I will read a few of the initiatory statements that brought the subject to the attention of the court:

> The circuit court for the district of New York, consisting of Jay, chief justice; Cushing, justice, and Duane, district judge, proceeded on the 5th of April, 1791, to take into consideration the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of widows and orphans barred by the limitations heretofore established, and to regulate the claims to invalid pensions;" and were, thereupon, unanimously of opinion and agreed.

I ask the Secretary to read, commencing at the point marked with cross marks.

The Secretary read as follows:

> That by the Constitution of the United States the Government thereof is divided into three distinct and independent branches, and that it is the duty of each to abstain from and to oppose encroachments on either.
> That neither the legislative nor the executive branches can, constitutionally, assign to the judicial any duties but such as are properly judicial and to be performed in a judicial manner.
> That the duties assigned to the circuit courts by this act are not of that description, and that the act itself does not appear to contemplate them as such, inasmuch as it subjects the decisions of these courts, made pursuant to those duties, first to the consideration and suspension of the Secretary at War, and then to the revision of the legislature; whereas by the Constitution neither the Secretary at War nor any other executive officer, nor even the legislature, are authorized to sit as a court of errors on the judicial acts or opinions of this court.
> As, therefore, the business assigned to this court by the act is not judicial, nor directed to be performed judicially, the act can only be considered as appointing commissioners for the purposes mentioned in it by official instead of personal descriptions.
> That the judges of this court regard themselves as being the commissioners designated by the act, and therefore as being at liberty to accept or decline that office.
> That as the objects of this act are exceedingly benevolent and do real honor to the humanity and justice of Congress; and as the judges desire to manifest on all proper occasions and in every proper manner their high respect for the National Legislature, they will execute this act in the capacity of commissioners.
> That as the legislature have a right to extend the session of this court for any term which they may think proper by law to assign, the term of five days, as directed by this act, ought to be punctually observed.
> That the judges of this court will, as usual, during the session thereof, adjourn the court from day to day, or other short periods, as circumstances may render proper, and that they will, regularly, between the adjournments, proceed as commissioners to execute the business of this act in the same court room or chamber.
> The circuit court for the district of Pennsylvania, consisting of Wilson and Blair, justices, and Peters, district judge, made the following representation in a letter jointly addressed to the President of the United States on the 18th of April, 1792:
> "To you it officially belongs to 'take care that the laws' of the United States 'be faithfully executed.' Before you, therefore, we think it our duty to lay the sentiments which, on a late painful occasion, governed us with regard to an act passed by the Legislature of the Union.
> "The people of the United States have vested in Congress all legislative powers 'granted in the Constitution.'
> "They have vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress shall establish 'the judicial power of the United States.'
> "It is worthy of remark that in Congress the whole legislative power of the United States is not vested. An important part of that power was exercised by the people themselves when they 'ordained and established the Constitution.'

"This Constitution is 'the supreme law of the land.' This supreme law 'all judicial officers of the United States are bound, by oath or affirmation, to support.'

"It is a principle important to freedom that in government the judicial should be distinct from and independent of the legislative department. To this important principle the people of the United States, in forming their Constitution, have manifested the highest regard.

"They have placed their judicial power not in Congress, but in 'courts.' They have ordained that the 'judges of those courts shall hold their offices during good behavior,' and that 'during their continuance in office their salaries shall not be diminished.'

"Congress have lately passed an act to regulate, among other things, 'the claims to invalid pensions.'

"Upon due consideration, we have been unanimously of opinion that under this act the circuit court held for the Pennsylvania district could not proceed:

"First. Because the business directed by this act is not of a judicial nature. It forms no part of the power vested by the Constitution in the courts of the United States; the circuit court must, consequently, have proceeded without constitutional authority.

"Second. Because if upon that business the court had proceeded, its judgments—for its opinions are its judgments—might, under the same act, have been revised and controlled by the legislature and by an officer in the executive department. Such revision and control we deemed radically inconsistent with the independence of that judicial power which is vested in the courts and, consequently, with that important principle which is so strictly observed by the Constitution of the United States.

"These, sir, are the reasons of our conduct. Be assured that though it became necessary, it was far from being pleasant. To be obliged to act contrary either to the obvious directions of Congress or to a constitutional principle in our judgment equally obvious, excited feelings in us which we hope never to experience again."

The circuit court for the district of North Carolina (consisting of Iredell, justice, and Sitgreaves, district judge), made the following representation in a letter jointly addressed to the President of the United States on the 8th of June, 1792:

"We, the judges now attending at the circuit court of the United States for the district of North Carolina, conceive it our duty to lay before you some important observations which have occurred to us in the consideration of an act of Congress lately passed, entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of widows and orphans barred by the limitations heretofore established, and to regulate the claims to invalid pensions.'

"We beg leave to premise that it is as much our inclination as it is our duty to receive with all possible respect every act of the legislature, and that we never can find ourselves in a more painful position than to be obliged to object to the execution of any, more especially to the execution of one founded on the purest principles of humanity and justice, which the act in question undoubtedly is. But however lamentable a difference in opinion really may be, or with whatever difficulty we may have formed an opinion, we are under the indispensable necessity of acting according to the best dictates of our own judgment after duly weighing every consideration that can occur to us, which we have done on the present occasion.

"The extreme importance of the case and our desire of being explicit beyond the danger of being misunderstood will, we hope, justify us in stating our observations in a systematic manner. We therefore, sir, submit to you the following."

Mr. MORGAN. That was a splendid, noble act of self-abnegation. It was worthy of the judiciary of North Carolina and also of the United States, both of the judicial establishments having declined to execute that act of Congress, which was for very benevolent purposes—the granting of pensions to widows and the like. In the amendment presented here the hand of Federal power, wielded by the President of the United States, grasps authority that is not judicial and grasps power that is preeminent over the judiciary and claims the right from Congress to create the judgeship, to appoint the holders of the office without the consent of the Senate, to define their jurisdiction, and whenever they have acted in accordance with his will, unrestrained by any act of Congress or in any other way, he shall direct, as this act says, the manner in which they shall exercise their offices.

If the President had had the power over these two courts, and if he had been as much wedded to that bill for pensions as the President of the United States is asserted to be wedded to this amendment to increase his powers, he would have directed those courts as to the manner in which they should render their judgment, and they would have taken a jurisdiction that they very reluctantly declined.

This measure comes from the consolidation of the powers of government in the hands of one man in this country. I wish to read now, in order to call the attention of the Senate further to this subject, from Story on the Constitution, a great and eminent writer. He says, after having written very much that is very pertinent and very instructive, in section 520, page 364 of his work:

In the establishment of a free government, the division of the three great powers of government, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial, among different functionaries has been a favorite policy with patriots and statesmen. It has by many been deemed a maxim of vital importance that these powers should forever be kept separate and distinct. And accordingly we find it laid down with emphatic care in the bill of rights of several of the State constitutions. In the constitution of Massachusetts, for example, it is declared that "in the government of this Commonwealth, the legislative department shall never exercise the executive and judicial powers, or either of them; the executive shall never exercise the legislative and judicial powers, or either of them; the judicial shall never exercise the legislative and executive powers, or either of them; to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men."

This amendment institutes in the Philippine Islands a government of a man and not a government of the law; but Congress, in delegating this power to the President of the United States, expressly refuses to prescribe any law for his government at all, but leaves him to enact the law.

Other declarations of a similar character are to be found in other State constitutions.

He then goes on to quote what Montesquieu had to say about it, and in section 522 the author continues:

The same reasoning is adopted by Mr. Justice Blackstone in his Commentaries.

The English law writer, laying down the law that controls in the British monarchy, says:

In all tyrannical governments the supreme magistracy, or the right both of making and of enforcing laws, is vested in the same man or one and the same body of men, and wherever these two powers are united together there can be no public liberty. The magistrate may enact tyrannical laws and execute them in a tyrannical manner, since he is possessed, in quality of dispenser of justice, with all the power which he, as legislator, thinks proper to give himself. But where the legislative and executive authority are in distinct hands the former will take care not to intrust the latter with so large a power as may tend to the subversion of its own independence, and therewith of the liberty of the subject.

Again:

In this distinct and separate existence of the judicial power in a peculiar body of men, nominated, indeed, by, but not removable at, the pleasure of the Crown, consists one main preservative of the public liberty, which can not long subsist in any state, unless the administration of common justice be in some degree separated from the legislative and also the executive power. Were it joined with the legislative, the life, liberty, and property of the subject would be in the hands of arbitrary judges, whose decisions would then be regulated only by their opinions, and not by any fundamental principles of law, which, though legislators may depart from, yet judges are bound to observe. Were it joined with the executive, this union might soon be an overbalance for the legislative.

I wish I could take the time to lay this subject before the American people, not before the five Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, the four Senators, the three Senators, the two Senators. A number of gentlemen whom I recognize there are not Senators. There are only two on the other side of the Chamber now, and neither of them is listening to what I have to say. Therefore, my time would be needlessly consumed here in reading.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to do justice to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS]. He is giving very close attention to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg his pardon.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think I have not lost a word that has fallen from the Senator's lips.

Mr. MORGAN. The country, however, all of the country, is interested in those ancient writers in respect of the institutions of our Government, who laid down and defined the boundaries of power between the different departments of a government that has separate departments and is not a pure autocracy or tyranny. Therefore, I read with great pleasure what I find in this author, whose authority, I believe, nobody in this country is brave enough or bold enough to dispute, so that my fellow-citizens in the country may have an opportunity of looking again at the foundations of their liberty, notwithstanding the Senate pays no attention to them, and may call us, myself included, into severe account for our disobedience to the organic law upon which the liberties of the people of the United States are based.

The author goes on in section 530:

It is proper to premise that it is agreed on all sides that the powers belonging to one department ought not to be directly and completely administered by either of the other departments; and, as a corollory, that, in reference to each other, neither of them ought to possess, directly or indirectly, an overruling influence in the administration of their respective powers. Power, however, is of an encroaching nature, and it ought to be effectually restrained from passing the limits assigned to it. Having separated the three great departments by a broad line from each other, the difficult task remains to provide some practical means for the security of each against the meditated or occasional invasions of the others. Is it sufficient to declare on parchment in the Constitution that each shall remain and neither shall usurp the functions of the other?

No one well read in history in general, or even in our own history during the period of the existence of our State constitutions, will place much reliance on such declarations. In the first place, men may and will differ as to the nature and extent of the prohibition. Their wishes and their interests, the prevalence of faction, an apparent necessity, or a predominant popularity will give a strong bias to their judgments and easily satisfy them with reasoning, which has but a plausible coloring. And it has been accordingly found that the theory has bent under the occasional pressure, as well as under the occasional elasticity of public opinion, and as well in the States as in the General Government under the confederation. Usurpations of power have been notoriously assumed by particular departments in each: and it has often happened that these very usurpations have received popular favor and indulgence.

The Federalist is cited in support of what I have just read.

In the next place, in order to preserve in full vigor the constitutional barrier between each department, when they are entirely separated, it is obviously indispensable that each should possess equally and in the same degree the means of self-protection. Now, in point of theory this would be almost impracticable if not impossible, and in point of fact it is well known that the means of self-protection in the different departments are immeasurably disproportionate. The judiciary is incomparably the weakest of either, and must forever, in a considerable measure, be subjected to the legislative power. And the latter has, and must have, a controlling influence over the executive power, since it holds at its own command all the resources by which a chief magistrate could make himself formidable. It possesses the power over the purse of the nation and the property of the people. It can grant or withhold supplies; it can levy or withdraw taxes; it can unnerve the power of the sword by striking down the arm which wields it.

Omitting to read the five hundred and thirty-second section:

The truth is that the legislative power is the great and overruling power in every free government. It has been remarked with equal force and sagacity that the legislative power is everywhere extending the sphere of its activity, and drawing all power into its impetuous vortex. The founders of our Republic, wise as they were under the influence and the dread of the royal prerogative which was pressing upon them, never for a moment seem to have turned their eyes from the immediate danger to liberty from that source, combined as it was with an hereditary authority and an hereditary peerage to support it. They seem never to have recollected the danger from legislative usurpation, which, by ultimately assembling all power in the same hands, must lead to the same tyranny as is threatened by executive usurpation.

The representatives of the people will watch with jealousy every encroachment of the Executive Magistrate, for it trenches upon their own authority. But who shall watch the encroachment of these representatives themselves? Will they be as jealous of the exercise of power by themselves as by others? In a representative republic, where the executive magistracy is carefully limited, both in the extent and duration of its power; and where the legislative power is exercised by an assembly, which is inspired by a supposed influence over the people with an intrepid confidence in its own strength; which is sufficiently numerous to feel all the passions which actuate the multitude, yet not so numerous as to be incapable of pursuing the objects of its passions by means which reason prescribes, it is easy to see that the tendency to the usurpation of power is, if not constant, at least probable, and that it is against the enterprising ambition of this department that the people may well indulge all their jealousy and exhaust all their precautions.

I will not read more from that work, although there is much more in the chapter from which I have been reading that is extremely interesting and extremely important at the present time. That reference to the aggressive power and the aggressive tendency of the legislative bodies of this country and of all countries is remarkably apposite just at this moment of time. We have seen here in very recent date various measures brought before Congress in which the opposition to the measures have charged that there were combinations of great monetary power in the recent form of fraudulent usurpation that we call trusts that were pressing upon the Congress of the United States personal demands for an opportunity to take money out of the Treasury of the United States.

I need not specify those cases. The recent debates in the Senate of the United States show the cases to which I refer. Now, when measures before the Senate claiming millions and hundreds of millions of dollars are charged upon just or at least probable ground with being actuated by persons and personal interests outside of the legislative circles in this Capitol, it is time that the legislators should look with some degree of jealousy and circumspection and with regard to their own powers and the exercise of them in this country when such opportunities are being made by our legislation; and it is an apt time for the quotation of this great writer to whom I have just referred, and whose writings I have just read for the purpose of causing the Congress of the United States to guard its own step lest in the desire to usurp power it should ride over the rights and liberties of the country.

Here, Mr. President, is not only a usurpation of power but a consolidation of power and a transmission of it by delegation into the hands of a single man, and from him into the hands of his inferiors or subordinates, the persons to whom he chooses to intrust it. There is no conception that I can possibly have of the virtue of the best man in the world which justifies me as a member of the Senate in conferring upon any living human being or any who has lived powers like this which may be wrested for the purposes of personal gain to the friends of the Executive and to the destruction of the interest of many poor and dependent people. Such, Mr. President, is a proper characterization of the project that is contained in this measure.

I will read another extract from Blackstone's Commentaries, which, while it repeats in a measure what has already been read in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to which I have alluded, is very important, and comes to us as a warning against what we are now about to do in this body:

In this distinct and separate existence of the judicial power in a peculiar body of men, nominated, indeed, but not removable at pleasure by the Crown, consists one main preservative of the public liberty, which can not subsist long in any state unless the administration of common justice be in some degree separated from the legislative and also from the executive power. Were it joined with the legislative, the life, liberty, and property of the subject would be in the hands of arbitrary judges, whose decisions would be then regulated only by their own opinions and not by any fundamental principles of law, which, though legislators may depart from, yet judges are bound to observe.

I have read that before.

Were it joined with the executive, this union might soon be an overbalance for the legislative.

I read that.

For which reason, by the statute of 16 Car. I, c. 10, which abolished the court of star chamber, effectual care is taken to remove all judical power out of the hands of the King's privy council, who, as then was evident from recent instances, might soon be inclined to pronounce that for law which was most agreeable to the prince or his officers. Nothing, therefore, is more to be avoided in a free constitution than uniting the provinces of a judge and a minister of state. And, indeed, that the absolute power, claimed and exercised in a neighboring nation, is more tolerable than that of the Eastern empires is, in great measure, owing to their having vested the judicial power in their parliaments, a body separate and distinct from both the legislative and executive; and if ever that nation recovers its former liberty it will owe it to the efforts of those assemblies. In Turkey, where everything is centered in the Sultan or his ministers, despotic power is in its meridian, and wears a more dreadful aspect.

I think, sir, that I have sufficiently supported my statements by the highest authority that any man can quote, to be entirely satisfied and content now to leave it to the judgment of the people of the United States. That these opinions will have any effect or will even be drawn in question or considered by the Senate I have no expectation. But they are in the RECORD, Mr. President, not upon my statement or ipse dixit, but upon the statement of the greatest law writers of this country and England. This bill violates every principle in every case that I have quoted. It runs ruthlessly and roughshod over all of the organic law of England and America, and it comes back to sweep out those traditional rights that we got from the great German ancestry that stands at least at the head of all of our civilization.

I probably have said enough on that subject. I probably have gone as far as my duty requires me to go in the investigation of this amendment. There was a point that I wanted to investigate, but I am still unable to do so, for the reason that the Taft report is still incomplete. The last installment of it was sent to the Senate on yesterday and ordered to be printed. It has not yet reached this body, so far as I am advised. Certainly I have had no opportunity to examine those additional acts, running from 55 to 68, which have been enacted by the Taft commission and which are the law of the Philippine Islands. As far as I have seen those enactments, as far as the Administration has seen proper to place them in the possession of the Senate, they cover every phase of legislative authority, and I am not at all warranted or disposed to doubt their authority in the Philippines.

I have seen none of them that violate the Constitution of the United States, and perhaps there may be none (though I have not looked particularly with that view) which violate or repeal the laws of Congress. But this bill repeals the laws of Congress, all of them, by express provisions which stand in the way of anything that the Taft commission may choose to do, if the President shall adopt that as the form of government in the Philippines, or any other government he may establish there through the amazing powers that we propose to confer upon him in this bill.

There have been other quotations made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with respect to the opinions of American statesmen, to one of which I wish to make a short reference. I will read a short extract from a debate that occurred in the House of Representatives for the purpose of getting at the state of the law, as reported in 10 Howard, page 96. The speaker on that occasion said:

The ordinance applied not to the States, but to the Territories exclusively.

That was the ordinance of 1787.

Hence, it can not be said that the ordinance extended to the States and conflicted there with the Federal Constitution. In 10 Howard, page 96, the Supreme Court held that the people of the Territories were parties to our Constitution, and that it was the "supreme law throughout the United States," clearly showing the term "United States" included States and Territories.

The court says:

The Constitution was, in the language of the ordinance—

That is the ordinance of 1787—

adopted by common consent, and the people of the Territories must necessarily be regarded as parties to it and bound by it, and entitled to its benefits as well as the people of the then existing States. It became the supreme law throughout the United States. And so far as any obligations of good faith had been previously incurred by the ordinance, they were faithfully carried into execution by the power and authority of the new Government.

In the Millikin case (4 Wallace) the court said:

This Constitution of ours operates in war as well as in peace, in all places, and under all circumstances. It is a law for the rulers as well as for the people; each and every one everywhere within our political jurisdiction is bound by it.

I read now a statement made by Thomas H. Benton, which was quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I think, by the present junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]:

Maj. Gen. Andrew Jackson, governor of the provinces of the Floridas, exercising the powers of the captain-general and intendant of the island of Cuba over the said provinces and the governors of said provinces, respectively.

In the United States, where the people are accustomed to the regular administration of justice, the summary proceedings of General Jackson appeared to be harsh and even lawless; but they were all justified by the Administration and sanctioned by the negative action of Congress.

In reply to the statements that were made by Mr. Benton, and which are here quoted in part, General Jackson wrote a letter from the Hermitage on the 27th March, 1845, while he was almost in extremis, but he still had that vitality which hung about his reputation and the grandeur of his character and made him quick and alert in every matter which concerned his personal or his political history. He said, addressing Commodore J. D. Elliott:

Your letter of the 18th instant, together with the copy of the proceedings of the National Institute, furnished me by their corresponding secretary, on the presentation by you of the sarcophagus for acceptance on condition it shall be preserved and in honor of my memory, have been received, and are now before me.

That is not the point I wished to read. However, I will insert that letter in the RECORD [illegible] appropriate place. What I wanted to read was General Jackson's refusal to accept from the Government of the United States certain powers that they wanted to confer upon him in Florida. Here is what he said:

I am clothed with powers which no one under a republic ought to possess, and which I trust will never again be given to any man. Nothing will give me more happiness than to learn that Congress, in its wisdom, shall have distributed them properly and in such a manner as is consonant to our earliest and deepest convictions.

When powers were given to him as a ruler in the Floridas which he thought were inconsistent with the laws and Constitution, the institutions and spirit of the United States, he declined to exercise them, and recommended to Congress that they would never again attempt a matter like that. It is with the utmost pleasure that I quote the statements made by that eminent statesman and lawyer, and that true American citizen, that lover of the independence and the Constitution of his country, when declining powers that the Government of the United States tendered to him as a ruler in Florida.

I would be glad to-day, sir, that the President of the United States would do justice to his own character and to his own political career by saying to the Senate of the United States, "I decline to accept at your hands the powers you propose to confer upon me in the Philippines." But instead of that his friends and supporters and partisans are here making this terrible demand upon Congress, making it upon an appropriation bill as a rider, making it under circumstances which means that if you do not pass this Philippine resolution or amendment and with it the Army appropriation bill you shall be gibbeted before the world as unpatriotic men who are unwilling to supply their Government with money for the carrying on of the war in the Philippines or in China, or for military operations in those countries, or in Cuba, or in Porto Rico.

I wish I could to-day realize that the President of the United States would rise up and rebuke the men who are trying to confer upon him powers that violate the Constitution of the United States. Suppose that they are simply doubtful, what business has a President of the United States to exercise doubtful constitutional powers bearing upon great measures like the rule of 10,000,000 of people in the Philippines and the disposal of the destiny of Cuba? How can he dare to approach a subject of this magnitude without a tremor, such as a grand, supreme Executive must feel when the ground under him trembles in doubt, and when the people are in consternation at the thought that he is about to grasp a new scepter of power, and we now about to pass through our coronation.

It takes place next Monday. He is to participate in that and become the honored object of that vast and beautiful pageant which is to sweep through the streets of Washington, in which the acclaim of the American people will be devoted in a large measure to a eulogy upon the character of Mr. McKinley, as it has been established in four years of executive administration, but in a still higher and more triumphant eulogy upon the institutions of our country, which preserve the liberties of the least as well as the greatest without touch or contamination.

In that pageant, Mr. President, the power behind the throne may ride in the carriage with the power of the throne—I do not know—but if the power behind the throne exhibits itself with the words of this statute written upon its banner it will receive the just and contemptuous scorn of a free and enlightened people. Not even the President of the United States can save that power behind the throne from the condemnation that is as sure to rest upon it as death is the doom of every man in this Chamber.

Mr. President, I now turn to this new astonishing phase of this measure, the other wing of this amendment to this bill—the Cuban question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has kindly consented to yield to me for a few moments while I present the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill, which may lead to a very short discussion, I think, for which I should like to ask the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 9, and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, and 8; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of amendment numbered 11, lines 19, 20, and 21, page 2, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, page 3, of said amendments and insert in lieu thereof:

"When any publication has been accorded second-class mail privileges the same shall not be suspended or annulled until a hearing shall have been granted to the parties interested."

And the Senate agree to the same.

As to amendments numbered 2 and 3 the conferees are unable to agree.

E. O. WOLCOTT,
WILLIAM E. CHANDLER,
MARION BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. F. LOUD,
GEORGE W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the conferees of the House and the Senate upon the Post-Office appropriation bill have agreed upon all of the eleven points of difference with the exception of two. There are two amendments to the bill inserted by the Senate to which the House conferees decline absolutely to concede or to yield. We have been for many hours in consultation and deliberation, and it has become my duty, as the conferees on the part of the Senate stood by the amendments of the Senate, to report the amendments to the Senate, and ask the Senate what action we shall take.

The two amendments were both introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. The presentation of one of them was cut short by my at once accepting the amendment, believing at the time I accepted it that there would be no objection to it. I had hoped and believed that the amendment would be accepted by the House. The first of the two amendments is this:

For the experiment in cities, towns, and villages not now free-delivery offices of the delivery of mail through mail repositories or compartment boxes, including the cost of the boxes, repository, and salary of person to serve such box or repository, $30,000.

The contention—I believe I may state it without impropriety—of the House conferees has been that this was new legislation; that it committed the Government to an experiment, at least, upon a new measure and a new movement that, if carried out, would eventually cost the Government from fifteen to twenty million dollars a year.

We have now the carrier system in all cities of over 10,000 population or where the revenues of the post-office exceed $25,000 a year. We have appropriated this year $3,500,009 for rural free mail delivery, increasing the appropriation over last year $1,750,000, which service extends to people living, not within incorporated towns, but in farm houses and isolated places, a free delivery of their mail. The Post-Office Department reports the experiment a great success. But that leaves out of the enjoyment of the advantages, if they are advantages, of free mail delivery people who live in hamlets and unincorporated towns and municipalities with less population than 10,000 and with a less post-office income than $25,000 per annum. It is to meet an experiment as to this delivery that the amendment was introduced by the Senator from North Carolina.

The House conferees contend that the pressure for this is not from communities, but from holders of patent post-office boxes who desire that in towns of a shoe-string character, where the street is long or the road is long, and it is some distance in muddy weather to go to the post-office, and not always wholly convenient, that there shall be 20 or 30 boxes bunched or grouped together, with access by a key to all of them by the mail deliverer or carrier, and the rental of the boxes to the different people residing in that end of the place. It is contended that this would be a great convenience to the people who do not desire to go to the post-office for their mail, which may be some hundreds of yards distant.

That is the contention of the House, added to which is their contention that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and that the Senate should not insist upon it if the House refuses to take it. I may say the House conferees were very strenuous in their opposition to this amendment.

The other amendment is as follows:

With a view to securing the transmission through post-offices and over post roads of communications by electricity, the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the cost of establishing, as a part of the postal service, a postal telegraph connecting all post-offices in incorporated towns and cities, and connecting therewith all remaining post-offices either by telegraph or telephone, and to report at what cost the Post-Office Department could furnish such increased service to the public and make this department of the postal service self-sustaining.

The contention of the House conferees, unanimous and strenuous, to this amendment is that it is new legislation, that it calls upon the Postmaster-General to give an estimate, which no man living could give unless he might be enlightened by an extended report of a duly authorized commission which would collate the facts, and that it simply stands as a notification to the world that the Government eventually intends to take over to its own uses the telegraph and telephone systems of the United States and apply them to postal purposes. The House conferees decline, therefore, to yield to our contention that this should go upon the appropriation bill. The amendment carries no appropriation with it.

On the other hand, the Senate conferees, led by the Senator from

North Carolina, who is a member of the committee, who introduced the amendment, and who very ably presented it to the conferees, contended that it is of the utmost value that in country post-offices there should be a constant communication by telephone with other offices by which information could be conveyed, and in which, instead of mailing letters, a man in one of the fourth-class post-offices who desired to communicate with another fourth-class post-office some distance away could, by giving the postmaster in the sending office a stamp of a certain sum, call up his customer or his correspondent at the other end of the long-distance telephone and convey his information by telephone.

The Senator from North Carolina also contended that on other matters, meteorological and otherwise, the amendment was of the greatest value; that fourth-class postmasters could give early notice of impending frosts and other circumstances which might develop in the weather, which would convey valuable and important information to other rural communities. But the House conferees refused to accept this view and, as I say, were unanimous and strenuous in their opposition to both amendments.

We have reached agreements, except as to these amendments, and the bill is ready to be reported as soon as these differences can be reconciled. The Senate conferees feel bound to loyally stand by the Senator from North Carolina in his able presentation of the reasons which impelled him to introduce the amendment, and we come back now to the Senate to ask the Senate to determine for us whether we shall recede or whether we shall go back to our conference room and again insist that the House must accept upon this bill the Senate amendments.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments; and I wish to say a few words only in reference to the principal amendment upon which there is disagreement. That amendment simply directs the Postmaster-General to make an estimate of the cost of establishing, in connection with the Post-Office Department, a postal telegraph, utilizing also for postal purposes the telephone. It was originally proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to have the Postmaster-General make an investigation. That is the way the amendment stands as adopted by the Senate; but the conferees have agreed to substitute for that proposition merely a direction to the Postmaster-General to make an estimate, to be submitted to Congress at the next session as to the cost of a postal telegraph system.

Mr. President, it does not occur to me that there is any objection to that. I can not conceive that there is any reasonable objection, at any rate. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] states that the House objection is that adopting a direction of this kind to the Postmaster-General is an intimation that Congress wants to consider the subject of a postal telegraph, and that the idea prevails in Congress that such a system of postal telegraph, in connection with the post-office service, might be desirable. That is true, Mr. President, but it is not a violent intimation, and I do not believe that the Senate will think that we are unreasonable in simply asking the Postmaster-General to submit to the Senate an estimate of the cost of establishing a postal telegraph.

Senators will please remember that, under the general telegraph law, the United States has now the right to take possession, at a valuation, of all the telegraph lines in the country. The Senator from North Carolina has the law——

Mr. BUTLER. In that connection, for the information of the Senate——

Mr. CHANDLER. And either now or when he speaks himself, the Senator will read that law.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well; I will read it after the Senator concludes.

Mr. CHANDLER. There it stands, Mr. President—the reserved right already established by a law of the United States to take all the existing telegraph systems at a valuation and make them a part of the postal service. This amendment simply proposes to ask the Postmaster-General to submit to Congress an estimate of what such a system would cost. It does encourage the idea that there may at some time be a postal telegraph in connection with the Post-Office Department. I, for one, am in hearty accord with the Senator from North Carolina in desiring that the Postmaster-General shall perform this duty, not making an expensive investigation, not spending any money whatever in making the inquiry, but that from the best data he has before him, or may be able to obtain without the expenditure of public money, he shall submit to Congress an estimate of the cost of a postal telegraph. Therefore, I hope the Senate will insist on the amendment, and that there will be another conference on the subject.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the matter in controversy has been so fully and fairly stated by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that it is unnecessary for me to make any extended remarks.

There is really no dispute on the first amendment, on extending free delivery, because the conferees agreed to a substitute, which will be brought in when we reach a final agreement for requiring the Postmaster-General to investigate and report as to the feasibility of extending the free delivery of mail to towns and villages and the best methods, without giving him any specific direction and without making any appropriation. He is to make a report to the next session of Congress. That is really not a matter of controversy, because we have agreed unanimously in the conference committee on that point.

The other matter, which is really the hitch, is a very simple one. The only objection that the conferees of the other House made to the amendment calling for information—for that is all it calls for—was that it might be considered a declaration, or at least an intimation, that the Government intended to establish as a part of the postal system a postal telegraph and telephone. Mr. President, every bridge bill which is passed carries that intimation. There is not a bridge bill passed in this body that does not contain a paragraph to the effect that the Government reserves the right to use that bridge for a postal telegraph if the Government should ever establish such a system.

Further than that, here in the permanent statutes of this Government, being chapter 230 of the laws of 1886, is a general telegraph law which provides that every telegraph line built under that law shall be built with a notice and with a condition that the Government can take all of such lines for military purposes or postal purposes or any other purposes at a fair appraisement at any time. So every telegraph line that has been built has not only been built with that notice, but with a written contract in which that reservation has been put into the contract under the provisions of this law.

Therefore, there is absolutely nothing in this question that is an intimation in advance that the Government is going into such a policy. Here is the permanent law that makes the declaration as to every telegraph line that is built the company has to sign a contract containing such a provision, and this amendment simply asks for an estimate from the Postmaster-General as to the cost of putting that law into operation if the Government should at any time see fit to do it. That is all there is in it.

Mr. President, in this connection, while not bearing on this amendment, I will take just a moment to say—and I will be as brief as possible, for I do not want to take unnecessarily the time of the Senate—that as I read the Constitution it is the imperative duty of Congress to use electricity for the rapid transmission of information. The same clause of the Constitution of the United States (Art. I, sec. 8) which empowers Congress to declare war, raise and support armies and a navy, to coin money, regulate commerce, and borrow money on the credit of the United States, includes the provision to "establish post-offices and post-roads."

If that is not an exclusive duty conferred upon Congress, then there is not one in the whole instrument; and I believe to-day that Congress is acting in an unconstitutional manner when it does not exercise that power and establish a postal telegraph and telephone. I believe it is just as unconstitutional for us to allow a part of the communications of the Government to be carried by private individuals as it would be to allow a part of the money coined to be coined by private individuals, or allow private individuals to raise one-half of our Army and support it. Indeed, the power of Congress is exclusive; therefore it is unconstitutional for this most important part of the postal service to be in the hands of a private monopoly.

There can not be any getting around this. Practically the Supreme Court has so held in 96 United States Reports, an extract from which decision is as follows:

> The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce or the postal service known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new development of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse, with its rider, to the stagecoach; from the sailing vessel to the steamboat; from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph, as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth.

This was a unanimous decision of the court.

This same view was held by John C. Calhoun, who was the strictest of strict constructionists. He held that the power of Congress over the transmission of information was an "exclusive power."

Mr. Justice Brown, of the Supreme Court, in a leading article in the August Forum for 1895, said:

> If the Government may be safely intrusted with the transmission of our letters and papers, I see no reason why it may not also be intrusted with the transmission of our telegrams and parcels, as is almost universally the case in Europe.

Mr. Sherman, who was then a Senator from Ohio, in a speech in Congress held that it was the duty of Congress to take charge of the telegraph system, and he discussed the question at some length. Among other things he said:

> I should rather, also, in this connection, consider one other subject of infinitely greater importance than even this proposition (to reduce postage), and that is whether the time has not arrived in this country when the Government should assume to convey intelligence by electricity; not the management of the present telegraph lines, but when we should transmit through our post-offices and our post-roads communications by electricity, by wires constructed by the Government itself. The Government of the United States might duplicate all the wires and all the means of transportation by electricity for about $20,000,000 or $25,000,000.

If, therefore, we wish to do an actual good to our people; if we wish to confer upon them an enormous benefit, we should assume that which we have a right to assume as a part of the postal service of the country, the transmission of intelligence by electricity. In that way, by the expenditure of probably $15,000,000 or $20,000,000, we would save to the people of the United States $10,000,000 a year and increase our revenue. This has been done by other countries situated in that connection no better than ourselves.

In a speech on the floor of the Senate, January 20, 1883, Senator Edmunds said:

What the United States, in regard to its postal affairs and the welfare of its people, needs more than anything else is the construction of a postal telegraph, beginning moderately between great points in the country and all intermediate points, and then extending it, just as we have the mail system, as the needs of the community and fair economy would require, until every post-office should have or be within the reach of a postal telegraph.

But I beg the stock operators in New York not to suppose that I for one am in favor of the United States buying out any telegraph company anywhere. I am in favor of the United States building its own postal telegraph and managing it in its own way, and leaving the gentlemen who are engaged in private pursuits to pursue their operations in their own way as private pursuits.

We introduced into the postal system not long ago a provision for carrying merchandise, but we did not think it necessary to buy out the operations of the Adams Express Company, or the Southern Express Company, or the Union Express Company, or the United States Express Company, and so on, although what we did very seriously diminished their profits and impaired their business. Everything that the United States does operates in that way upon the interests of its private citizens—everything except the appropriation of money directly.

In 1888 the Committee on Commerce said:

1. That the time has arrived when the Government should construct and operate a postal-telegraph system as a branch of its postal service.
2. That the service will undoubtedly be self-supporting.
3. That the Government has the right to build and operate telegraph lines under the jurisdiction of its Post-Office Department.

In this connection Professor Ely says:

We find that, after long years of experience, practically the whole civilized world except the United States has decided in favor of the public ownership and management of the telegraph. Nowhere has it been found that there is any political objection to public ownership and management. The experience of monarchical and that of republican countries tells the same tale.

Henry Clay made the danger of private ownership an emphatic part of his splendid plea for a national telegraph in 1844. He said:

It is quite manifest that the telegraph is destined to exert great influence on the business affairs of society. In the hands of private individuals they will be able to monopolize intelligence and to perform the greatest operations in commerce and other departments of business. I think such an engine should be exclusively under the control of the Government.

Thus we see that Henry Clay held that it was the duty of the Government to establish a postal telegraph. Cave Johnson, the Postmaster-General at the time, held that that was the duty of the Government, and Congress so declared, practically, when it reserved this right and when Congress passed this law. The law to which I refer is chapter 230 of the acts of 1866. This law provides that the Government can now, and all the time has had the right to, take charge of all the telegraph lines or establish an independent system as a part of the postal system.

In short, in every country save ours alone the power of the monopoly has failed to maintain a system so unconstitutional and so opposed to the best interests of the public. Hence, in every country except ours the telegraph and telephone are constituent parts of the post-office, with the double result that the post-office facilities of the telegraph and telephone are extended to the country post-offices and the postal revenues show a profit instead of a loss. Notably Great Britain, which has most widely extended the use of the telegraph and telephone as a part of its post-office, shows a large annual profit from its post-office, instead of a deficit, which was usual before the telegraph and telephone were added to that department by Mr. Gladstone in 1870.

Judge Walter Clark, of the supreme court of North Carolina, in a recent magazine article discussing the postal telegraph in England, says:

As taxes upon the diffusion of intelligence among men and deficiences in the postal service affect everyone, I condense the following from the official report on the workings of the Government telegraph in England made to our Government by the United States consul at Southampton, England, and printed in the last number of the Consular Reports. He says:

On January 29, 1870, all the telegraphs in the United Kingdom were acquired by the Government from the corporations which had previously operated them, and thenceforward became an integral part of the post-office. The English people owed this great measure in their interest, like so many others, to Mr. Gladstone, who bore down all opposition from the companies, who were making big profits. Till then the districts paying best had ample service, though at high rates (as is still the case with us), while whole sections off the lines of railway were destitute of telegraphic facilities.

The Government at once extended the telegraph to all sections and reduced the rate to 1 cent a word. The following is the result: In 1870, under private ownership, 7,000,000 individual messages and 22,000,000 words of press dispatches were annually sent. Now that the telegraph is operated by the post-office, the annual number of individual messages sent is 70,000,000 (ten times as many), and over 600,000,000 words of press dispatches (thirty times as many) are used. This at a glance demonstrates the overwhelming benefit to the public of the change and their appreciation of it.

The press rates have been reduced so low that every weekly country paper can afford to print the latest telegraphic dispatches as it goes to press, and a telegraph or telephone is at every country post-office. In London the telegraph has largely superseded the mail for all the small and necessary details of life—to announce that you are going to dine at a certain house, or to inform your wife that you are detained on business and not to keep dinner waiting, and the like—over 30,000 telegrams being sent daily in that city alone.

The following is quoted from the consul, verbatim:

"The service is performed with the most perfect punctuality. It is calculated that the average time employed to-day in the transmission of a telegram between two commercial cities in England varies from seven to nine minutes, while in 1870 (under private ownership) two to three hours were necessary.

"The rate of 1 cent a word includes delivery within the postal limits of any town or within 1 mile of the post-office in the country. Beyond that limit the charge is 12 cents per mile for delivery of a message. The telegraph being operated as a constituent part of the postal service, it is not possible to state how much profit the Government receives from it, but the English Government does not consider that it should be treated as a source of revenue. It regards it a means of information and education for the masses and gives facilities of all kinds for its extension in all directions."

This unbiased and impartial report, officially made to our Government, is worthy of thought and consideration. It may be added that in every civilized country except this the telegraph has long since been adopted as one of the indispensable agencies of an up to date post-office department. Even in half-civilized Paraguay (as we deem it) they have better postal facilities than we, for the post-office there transmits telegrams at 1 cent a word and rents out telephones at $1 per month.

At present, owing to high rates, 46 per cent of all telegrams in this country are sent by speculators (who thus get an advantage over producers) and only 8 per cent are social or ordinary business messages. In Belgium, where the Government rate is less than 1 cent per message, the social and ordinary business messages between man and man are 63 per cent of the whole. Figures could not be more eloquent as to the vast benefit this confers upon the great mass of people, who bear the bulk of the burdens of any government and receive so few of its benefits. With the telegraphs and telephones operated by our Post-Office Department at moderate rates, say 5 or even 10 cents per message, a similar change would take place here. Individual and news messages would increase tenfold to thirtyfold, as elsewhere—probably more—and the monopoly now held by speculators would cease.

The average telegraph rate now charged in this country, by the reports to Congress, is 31 cents per message—three times the average rate in all other countries under post-office telegraph service; and experts say that our Government could probably afford, with the vast increase of business, a uniform rate of 5 cents, as the average cost of a message is about 3 cents. According to experts, the telegraph plants now in use could be superseded by the Government with a superior plant at $15,000,000, while the present corporations are strangling commerce to earn heavy dividends on a watered stock of over $150,000,000.

According to English experience the transfer of the telegraph to the Post-Office Department would result in (1) a uniform rate of 10 cents for 10 words between all points, or possibly less; (2) an increase in individual messages of at least 10 for every 1 now sent; (3) an increase in press dispatches of 30 words or more for every 1 now sent; (4) a popularization of the telegraph for all uses, social or business; (5) an increase in the promptness of delivery, the average there being now seven to nine minutes as against two to three hours formerly; (6) no section would be destitute, but at each one of our 70,000 post-offices there would be a telephone or a telegraph. By adopting the telephone at most post-offices instead of the telegraph the increase in the number of post-office employees would be inconsiderable.

The vast influence of the great telegraph monopoly can be used for political purposes by coloring news and in other more direct ways. When the telegraph service is made a part of the post-office and placed under civil-service rules and subject to the direct force of public opinion, the experience in other countries has been that it exerts no more power on party politics than the army or judiciary. Originally the telegraph (in 1845) belonged to the post-office. When it was abandoned to private corporations on account of its supposed expense, Henry Clay, Cave Johnson, and other leaders of both parties had the foresight to foretell the mischief done in abandoning an essential governmental function to private monopoly.

To prevent this great benefit being given to the masses and to preserve to consolidated capital the control of the most efficient avenues of intelligence, with the great advantages thus given that element in addition to the enormous tolls it can thus levy on the rest of the nation, there is practically only the inexorable will of one powerful and exacting corporation which has fastened itself on the body politic. It is the oldest trust in this country. It is the pioneer on which so many others have been patterned. It is the most burdensome because its oppressive tolls restrict communication between men and levy a tax on knowledge. It is illegal, since the Constitution requires Congress to establish the post-office, to leave this most essential function of a modern, up to date postal service in the hands of private corporations.

The telegraph is a source of gigantic emoluments to these corporations, while the Government restricts its postal services to antiquated and more dilatory processes. It is no wonder that such a postal service is not self-sustaining and shows an annual deficit while the telegraph companies pay enormous dividends. In other countries, where the telegraph is a part of the post-office, that department shows annual profits; but the monopoly fastened on us is intrenched in the sympathy of all other trusts. It has the support of the large city dailies (all owned by large capitalists) who fear the competition of dailies in small towns and of the weeklies if news should become free, and its transmission cheaper over a Government postal telegraph.

It is backed by the powerful lobby which it constantly maintains at Washington, paid out of the excessive telegraphic rates still exacted in this country alone out of a long-suffering and too patient people. And not least, it is said that it distributes franks to every Senator and every member of Congress. How many accept these favors and how many are influenced by them no one knows except the corporation officials, but that they do know may be seen from the fact that tenders of such favors have not ceased.

Mr. President, that goes to the merits of the question, which I do not wish to discuss further at this time because we are not now discussing the question of the postal telegraph, but I simply make this statement to show you how pertinent this amendment is which asks the Postmaster-General to make us an estimate as to what it would cost to carry that law into effect. That is all. Congress certainly can not be afraid of the information. It is a simple matter. I do not think it needs further discussion, and without taking further time I ask for a vote on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BUTLER subsequently said: I request that chapter 230 of the act of 1866, to which I referred in my remarks on the conference report a few moments ago, be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. It is short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The chapter referred to is as follows:

An act to aid in constructing telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any telegraph company now organized, or which may hereafter be organized, under the laws of any State in this Union, shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been or may hereafter be declared such by act of Congress, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States: Provided, That such lines of telegraph shall be so constructed and maintained as not to obstruct the navigation of such streams and waters, or interfere with the ordinary travel on such military or post roads.

And any of said companies shall have the right to take and use from such public lands the necessary stone, timber, and other materials for its posts, piers, stations, and other needful uses in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said lines of telegraph, and may preempt and use such portion of the unoccupied public lands subject to preemption through which its said lines of telegraph may be located as may be necessary for its stations, not exceeding 40 acres for each station, but such stations shall not be within 15 miles of each other.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That telegraphic communications between the several Departments of the Government of the United States and their officers and agents shall, in their transmission over the lines of any of said companies, have priority over all other business, and shall be sent at rates to be annually fixed by the Postmaster-General.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the rights and privileges hereby granted shall not be transferred by any company acting under this act to any other corporation, association, or person: Provided, however, That the United States may at any time after the expiration of five years from the date of the passage of this act, for postal, military, or other purposes, purchase all the telegraph lines, property, and effects of any or all of said companies at an appraised value, to be ascertained by five competent, disinterested persons, two of whom shall be selected by the Postmaster-General of the United States, two by the company interested, and one by the four so previously selected.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That before any telegraph company shall exercise any of the powers or privileges conferred by this act such company shall file their written acceptance with the Postmaster-General of the restrictions and obligations required by this act.

Approved July 24, 1866.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has moved that the Senate further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House and ask a further conference with the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not I should ask for the yeas and nays upon this motion. I am not disposed to do it, and unless some other Senators think it should be done. I am willing to have the instructions of the Senate on a viva voce vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion before the Senate is that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a further conference.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I call for a vote upon that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. BUTLER were appointed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. DANIEL. I offer an amendment to the Army appropriation bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after line 10, on page 19, the following:

Provided, That no officer of the Army, whether regular or volunteer and whether in or out of the United States, shall receive by executive or military authority or otherwise any pay or allowance whatsoever than such as is provided for by statute law; and any such officer who shall be convicted by court-martial of violation of this provision of law shall be dismissed the service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have no intention of discussing this bill at any length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Alabama yielded the floor?

Mr. MORGAN. I consented to yield for five minutes, I believe it was.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator yields to me?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have no desire or purpose to discuss this bill at any length. That the amendments offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] are clearly in violation of the Constitution, I have no doubt. I do not think it is possible for Congress to confer upon the President of the United States or upon any other person or any body of persons all of the executive, legislative, and judicial power of this Government, in so far as they may exercise it over the Philippine Archipelago or over any other territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

The Army and the Navy, Mr. President, constitute the armed force of the United States. They are intimately connected; each is indispensable to the Government, and each is indispensable to the other. We have had occasion very recently to discuss the conditions existing at the Military Academy at West Point, and this morning I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an article appearing in the Star of last night, comprising a letter from Charles Morgan, a gunner, to Admiral Sampson, asking for promotion from his present position to that of ensign in the Navy. I desire to read the letter of Morgan and the comments or indorsement of the Admiral. This is the letter of Charles Morgan, gunner in the United States Navy:

UNITED STATES TORPEDO STATION,
Newport, R. I., February 13, 1901.

DEAR SIR: The new bill whereby 6 gunners are to be commissioned ensigns tempts me to write you, trusting you will pardon the liberty I take in so doing.

As I served on the flagship New York during your command of the fleet, you will know whether my abilities, whatever they may be, are of such merit as to warrant me in filling the position of ensign. I would say here that I never use tobacco or liquor in any form.

If, in your estimation, I am worthy of this position, I should be most grateful to you if you will recommend me to the Department.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES MORGAN,
Gunner, U. S. N.

Admiral WILLIAM T. SAMPSON,
United States Navy.

This letter was indorsed by Admiral Sampson and forwarded to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

NAVY-YARD,
Boston, Mass., February 14.

Indorsement 1. Respectfully forwarded to the Navy Department for its consideration.

2. Mr. Morgan has good professional ability. He also has, which distinguishes him from most other warrant officers, a gentlemanly bearing. If he were to be commissioned as an ensign, he would probably compare favorably, both professionally and in personal conduct and bearing, with other officers of that grade, as far as his technical education would permit.

3. It is earnestly to be hoped, however, that the Secretary of the Navy will not find it necessary to take advantage of the authority which I understand is to be granted him to appoint a certain number of warrant officers to the grade of ensigns.

While it is true that these men are selected from a large class of men of very unusual ability, which distinguishes them as perhaps the professional equals of their officers as far as their technical education stands, it is also true that they are recruited from a class of men who have not had the social advantages that are a requisite for a commissioned officer.

It is submitted that in time of peace the Navy's function consists, to a certain extent, of representing the country abroad, and it is important that the Navy's representatives should be men of at least refinement. While there are, perhaps, a certain few among the warrant officers who could fulfill this requirement, I am of the opinion that the vast majority of them could not.

CONSEQUENCES MIGHT NOT BE CREDITABLE.

Once they are commissioned they will have the same social standing as other officers, and no distinction properly could be made in extending general invitations. The consequences that would arise from their acceptance might not redound to the credit of the Navy, or the country which the Navy represents.

I do not mean to detract from the sterling worth of the warrant officers of the Navy; I merely mean to suggest to the Department that, unfortunately for them, they have been deprived of certain natural advantages, and in consequence their proper place is that of leading men among the crew, and not as representatives of the country in the ward-room and steerage.

4. I request that this may be brought to the personal attention of the Secretary of the Navy.

W. T. SAMPSON,
Rear Admiral, U. S. N.

Mr. President, I suppose this letter is genuine. I do not know whether it is or not. I take it, however, that it would not appear as it does in this paper or in any other paper unless it is a correct transcript of the indorsement of Admiral Sampson on the letter of Gunner Morgan. This proves beyond the shadow of a doubt what I have always supposed and what I have always contended, that there is a snobbish aristocracy in both the Army and the Navy that is detrimental to the public service and a disgrace to the country represented by these and other like officers.

That Gunner Morgan has the requisite education, the requisite personal bearing, whatever that may be, is not denied by the Admiral; in fact, he goes on to say that he would compare very favorably in his knowledge of his profession and in his gentlemanly deportment with those who are especially educated for this particular branch of the public service; and yet because Gunner Morgan was not born under an auspicious star, because he comes from the ranks of the plebeians, if I may so speak, the Admiral thinks that the Secretary of the Navy would be warranted in debarring him of the privilege of promotion on account of his birth.

If William T. Sampson is the author of that indorsement he is a conceited ass, and he ought to be so marked down in the world. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.] We are not rearing in this country a race of snobs. If I am correctly informed, there was a time when Sampson was no better, if as good, as Morgan, the gunner. He comes from no better stock, and I am glad to say, as a rule, that the true aristocrat, not the brass-jeweled aristocrat, is a man who is considerate of the feelings and of the worth and of the merit of the people whom he may regard as inferior to himself. Is it possible that a great admiral of the Navy of the United States would speak in disparaging terms of a young man like this gunner Morgan, as Sampson has spoken of him here?

Mr. President, if a man is debarred the privilege of an education in the Military Academy or in the Naval Academy is he to be forever stamped with the seal of inferiority, and may the time never come when through gentlemanly deportment, through education, through adaptibility, and through heroic service he may receive the rewards of his country by promotion? And yet if this rank and arrant coward—for a man is a coward who would put that indorsement upon a letter—is to be believed, and if the course he recommends is to be pursued, the time will never come in the history of this country when a poor boy, struggle as he may, meritorious as he may be, can rise to the honor and dignity of a position worthy of his talents and education.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I want to stand here and condemn this thing in the severest possible language I can use, and I want to say to Sampson and his friends that I am responsible for what I say.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to make a few remarks in reply to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MORGAN. I had no idea that there was to be any discussion as between Sampson and Schley on the pending bill. Is there any amendment in this bill——

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Alabama allowed a speech to be made, and I should like to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No Senator can obtain the floor and portion out the time to other Senators to make speeches and still hold it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the next branch of this question which I wish to discuss——

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I claim recognition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the courtesy of the Senator from Alabama to allow me to reply to the Senator from Nebraska. I hope he will not refuse.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not heard what the Senator from Nebraska said. If he said anything personal to the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. CHANDLER. I have heard what he said, and I want to reply.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it personal to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; but personal to Admiral Sampson.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon. I should rather the Admiral should be relegated to a time of war instead of a time of peace.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator decline to allow me to speak?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I claim the right to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator from Alabama had better let me speak a few words.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not propose to lose the floor upon this measure in order to accommodate any friend or any gentleman. I do not think it is required.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall desire to reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, if he is allowed to speak on this question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nothing would delight me more than to have the Senator do so, but I want him to do it after I have spoken. The Senator from Alabama is aware that he allowed quite a long speech to interrupt his speech. It destroyed the continuity of his speech, and it will not destroy it any more if he will allow me to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MORGAN. And then the Senator from South Dakota and I do not know who else will wish to speak.

Mr. STEWART. Several others.

Mr. TELLER. Several others.

Mr. STEWART. There will be several others if the Senator from New Hampshire speaks.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Alabama decline?

Mr. MORGAN. I have declined. I do not wish to be abrupt about it, but I wish to hold the floor.

Mr. President, the second amendment is one which presents the most important question that has yet come before the Congress in my recollection in reference to our foreign relations, our relations arising under the treaty of Paris. I enter upon a discussion of that amendment with apprehension and with timidity, for the reason that it may be that even what I may say may have some disadvantageous influence upon the minds of people in Cuba or perhaps upon the minds of the people of the United States, and I think no Senator will venture to discuss this amendment without feeling the same apprehension. I will ask the Secretary to read, so as to have inserted in my remarks, the amendment, in order that the Senate may get a clearer idea of it, and I may, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what amendment does the Senator from Alabama refer?

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment reported by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in relation to Cuba.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 12, insert:

That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled, "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. The first question which arises in this matter is whether the action we are about to take is required by the treaty with Spain, or whether it is required by a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress. This amendment refers to the joint resolution as the basis and foundation of the action we are now about to take. The treaty of Spain was the result of a declaration of war, which is as follows:

First. That war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist, and that war has existed since the 21st day of April, A. D. 1898, including said day, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

Second. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

The date mentioned in that act as the date at which actual war existed between the United States and Spain did not refer to any special event by the act itself, but we all understand that it refers to the sinking of the war ship Maine. That is the date at which actual hostilities are alleged to have commenced between the United States and Spain, and that event is the one upon which those hostilities are predicated as the act of war.

The joint resolution which we adopted on the 20th day of April, 1898, twenty days after that date from which war is said to have existed between Spain and the United States, was a joint resolution of the two Houses, which reads as follows:

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Habana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

It will be observed that the war declared against Spain on account of all these things recited in the joint resolution was concluded and resulted in a treaty of peace, the Paris treaty, which contained this article:

ARTICLE I.

Spain relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba.

And as the island is, upon its evacuation by Spain, to be occupied by the United States, the United States will, so long as such occupation shall last, assume and discharge the obligations that may under international law result from the fact of its occupation, for the protection of life and property.

If we were to speak of the effect of Article I of this treaty without reference to the joint resolution which was adopted by Congress, we would find no difficulty in saying that the supreme sovereignty over Cuba had been as much and as thoroughly and fully ceded to us by this treaty as the sovereignty over Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands; for while it does not mention the transfer of the sovereignty, it confers upon the United States, to exercise at its own option, discretion, and according to its own judgment, occupation, under which occupation we have assumed to discharge obligations that may arise under international law, or that result from the fact of occupation, for the protection of life and property. That is as complete sovereignty over a country as can be stated, for the reason that there is no country in the world that has any right to make an objection to it. There is no organized people recognized by acts of Congress who have the right to make an objection to the manner in which we shall exercise, and the time for which and during which we shall exercise, the powers and be held to the responsibilities that devolve upon us by that first article of that treaty.

Now, whatever rights Cuba or the Cuban people may possess, whether they are actual, legal, or simply moral in respect of the United States Government, are not derived from that instrument at all. They have no recognized rights in that treaty, either as a body, a community, a body politic, or government. They have the rights of life, liberty, and property, and that is as far as that article of the treaty goes. But the political rights which are covered in the resolution of the two Houses of Congress are not mentioned in this treaty. One sovereign transfers its supreme jurisdiction by relinquishment to the next, the successor sovereign, without taking any notice of the Cuban people or the manner in which they are to be treated by the United States.

Spain did not go into those joint resolutions for the purpose of determining how we should treat Cuba, and consequently in the transmission of sovereignty there was no qualification of that sort upon the act of transmission, or the act of abandonment—if you please to call it such—or relinquishment, if you please to call it that.

So, in considering the questions now before the Senate we must address ourselves to the relations between Cuba and the United States, and between the United States and the outside world as the Government which has the right to control the relations of Cuba to-day, as to all the nations of the earth, and as to the people who are located there or the people who may go there as visitors, commercial men, or otherwise during the period of our occupation. The most prominent feature of this obligation on our part is to enforce all the rights that belong to all the people of the world who may be in Cuba with their persons or their property, according to the laws of nations.

We have assumed the obligation to do this thing. We have not left Cuba in an irresponsible position without a sovereign head and without a government, and no one at all liable for her or responsible for any wrongs that might be done there to the citizens of other countries. We have assumed the whole burden. It is ours, and it will continue to be ours so long as we choose to occupy it. We have said nothing in that about the pacification of Cuba or about the establishment of a permanent government. None of the questions that are brought forward by this amendment here are questions that grow out of the treaty relations between the United States and Spain, and a government foreign to Spain, foreign to the United States, foreign to Cuba in every possible sense has a perfect right to say to us, "You have assumed responsibility to us which continues until a certain time; that is to say, so long as we have people in that island who need your protection;" and that government has something to say about this business.

We are not left alone to judge of our relations and duties toward the people who may be found in Cuba by our will or caprice, leaving it when we please and abandoning it into the hands of anybody we please. If we had that privilege, we could wait until a moment of time when insurrection and strife of every imaginable character, attended with crimes that belong to a condition of insurrection or rebellion or mobocratic outbreak, existed, and then say to the nations of the world, "We leave your citizens and your property in the island of Cuba to the mercies of such a distracted community."

Now, Mr. President, what I am trying to determine is this: Whether our control in the island of Cuba under that treaty, that being the only instrument in existence that we find to describe what that control shall be, is in the nature of sovereignty. It must be in the nature of sovereignty, because it requires of the sovereign Government of the United States the performance of certain duties under the laws of nations, which duties we could not perform except as a sovereign power, duties that may require not merely judicial intervention, but which may require the intervention of the military arm of the Government of the United States. We can not escape from this responsibility to Christendom, because we have assumed it in this treaty. Neither can we be released or absolve ourselves from these responsibilities toward the people who may be in Cuba, whether they are natives or whether they are Spanish immigrants who have come from the peninsula since the time of peace, or whoever they may be.

In the amendments that are proposed we assume to assert that sovereignty over these islands. We can not legislate, as we are asked to do in this amendment, to confer these rights upon the Cuban people otherwise than as a sovereign possessing the right. When the Cuban people obtain the rights that are proposed to be guaranteed to them by the United States under this amendment, they have obtained them from the sovereignty of the United States. They are not mere waifs that have been lost and are floating about in unknown places and conditions waiting for the period of time when we may choose to give our assent to the Cuban people that they should duly exercise them, but they are rights that pass by the instrument, they are rights that pass by the amendment, they are rights that pass by the law, and only by the law, which we are about to enact.

So in every view of the question, whether you take the duties and obligations that arise out of the treaty or whether you take the proposition which is contained in this amendment, the sovereign Government of the United States proposes to a certain people or to a certain government yet to be instituted and ordained in Cuba what is here proposed to be turned over to them in the way of political power, autonomy, and government.

It occurs to me that the legislative branch of the Government of the United States in limine, in the beginning of this matter, has very little to do in dealing with this subject. It occurs to me that there is presented here a class of questions that the Constitution of the United States devolves upon the diplomatic functions of this Government, and that the recognition of a government in Cuba which is contained here upon conditions that can be made by the Congress of the United States or by the diplomatic power of the Government so as to give them the status of a free, sovereign, and independent country, and thereby capacitate them to treat with us, had better come after the terms of the agreement have been settled between the United States and Cuba by diplomatic action, and have been considered by that function of our Government which is diplomatic and which can not act by a bare majority, but must act by a majority of two-thirds.

I believe, sir, that the future destiny of Cuba, so far as her sovereignty and independence are concerned, is to depend upon the consent of the two-thirds vote of the Senate of the United States in ratification of some agreement or some compact between the United States and a recognized government there. I do not believe that the lawmaking power of the United States can do anything more than make a tentative proposition, which must be followed up and accepted by the Cuban government by an appeal to and an exercise of its treaty-making power. The operation of this amendment, if it should be carried into law, would be merely to enable the President of the United States, upon the performance of certain conditions which, in his opinion, would meet the requirements of this amendment, to recognize that in Cuba there was a government capable of treating, and after that recognition the government there would have to treat with the Government here through our treaty-making power, and it would require a vote of two-thirds of the Senate of the United States as a treaty-making power to consummate this arrangement.

Now, that is perhaps a question which is very debatable, but at the same time it is a question, and it is a serious question, and it is one that the act of Congress upon this appropriation bill can not foreclose. Congress can not make an agreement with a government in Cuba which it undertakes in part at least to create by a legislative act here. Suppose the people of Cuba have some imaginary sovereign power in that island, would it follow from such a condition as that, admitting it as strongly as you please, that the Congress of the United States to-day would have no right to pass an act which should have its full operation and effect within the limits of the island of Cuba and which would control the destiny of those people?

They are subject to the power of Congress to-day, as far as our sovereignty is concerned, and we can enact laws, if we choose to do so, by which crimes will be punished, by which revenues will be collected, or anything of that kind. If we wish to do so, Congress has the power to enact these laws, so that the very moment of time they are signed by the President of the United States they shall be operative within the limits of the island of Cuba. We have already enacted one law in regard to Cuba, and that is a law for the rendition of fugitives from justice (I believe that is the ground they put it on), but, at all events, a law to send a man there and answer before a tribunal in Cuba for an offense against the government of what? Against the Post-Office Department of the United States.

I do not care now to go into that, but I want to call the attention of Senators to the proposition that in whatever we do here we ought not to undertake finally to foreclose this question by an act of Congress, but we ought so to provide as that by mutual authority of commissioners or otherwise both sides to this question can be heard. For us to-day to enact an iron rule which Cuba must conform to must necessarily be offensive to the pride of those men who feel that they have the right to govern in Cuba and that that is their country. We come at them with an ultimatum, not laid down after a discussion and presentation of their side of the case at all, but an ultimatum fixed in an act of Congress, which neither the President nor anybody else can escape from or deny, and they shall stand up now and subscribe to what we prescribe to you, or else what?

Now, what? We will continue to occupy the country; we will continue to preserve the peace; we will continue to preserve life and property; we will continue to hold our obligations to outside nations in respect of the conduct of the Cuban people toward their citizens. What is the result? What is the penalty? What is the end of this process of legislation that we are about to institute now? Who can execute it, and in what way? It amounts to either an assumption of authority over Cuba that implies an absolute right to govern them and compel them to submit to such terms as we prescribe, or else it amounts to nothing more than a mere tender of a diplomatic agreement to them, and shall there be a tender of an agreement of a diplomatic sort where they shall not be heard to question the rights that we insist upon or to dispute the justice of the ground we take?

The whole matter, Mr. President, is premature, and it is unwise, and it will lead to consequences of which we have now, I fear, no real conception. It is a dangerous attitude for the Government of the United States to take. Then they will ask us the question, and I make the answer to it here, Have you read the constitution of Cuba, formed by a convention which was assembled under an electoral law that was prescribed here by Gen. Leonard Wood, your governmental representative in the island of Cuba? Have you read it? No; we never have read it. Have you ever seen it? We have not seen it. Has it ever been officially communicated to the Congress of the United States? No; it has not. How have you arrived at your conclusion as to what you ought to force us to do until you see the attitude we have assumed, at least in that constitution, and are capable of judging of its wisdom and propriety?

I answer to Cuba to-day, we have seen none of it; we are working now upon our own judgment, our own forecast of the future; our estimate of your right. We are doing that despotic kind of an act which we would not do with a tribe of Indians in the United States. We have often judged what their destinies shall be and what they shall do without ever having consulted or sent an agent amongst them to find out through a talk what they claim that they desire.

Who has the power to rise in the Senate to-day and declare what Cuba is bound to accept or ought to accept in reason, or will accept? Nobody. This is an ultimatum, a legislative ultimatum to Cuba. Take this or die, for they can not resist. Take this and abandon your hopes of an independent, sovereign, autonomous government. Take this and lay your national and your race pride beneath the feet of the Anglo-Saxon and let him walk over you. You must stand and deliver. We make the exaction upon you through a solemn act of the Congress of the United States, and we leave nothing to be adjusted in the future except, perhaps, the mere terminology of the agreement, but in substance all the provisions that we here lay down to you must be adopted by you as conditions precedent to your expectation or your right to demand any sort of autonomy, independence, sovereignty, or freedom.

Then they will appeal to that academic declaration which we made in the joint resolution, which a man can scarcely read without either laughing or weeping. What is that? Before the war with Spain had actually been inaugurated, as a matter of fact before any guns had been fired except by the Cubans, and after we had refused to recognize the republic of Cuba under General Cisneros, that had a written constitution and a pretty well formed government—before any of these events, and in the presence of these events and of our action in that direction, we made the declaration:

Resolved, That the people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free, sovereign, and independent.

Well, were they free, sovereign, and independent at the time we made that famous declaration? That is why I say there is a time for tears or a time for laughter, according to the mood that a man may be in; whether he is in a mood of regret for his folly or in a mood of amusement for having been so ridiculous. "The people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free, sovereign, and independent." Mr. President, the first declaration in that series can not be proved by anything we can do hereafter, that they were at that time free, sovereign, and independent; and while I admit that the sentimental or, if you please, the moral duty which arises out of that declaration should guide us in our conduct hereafter in Cuba, I can not admit as a matter of fact that there was any truth in it at all. It was not true. Does it stand in the way; does it qualify; does it in any wise release us from the duties and obligations that we entered into with Spain, the sovereign whose recognition we completely confess in this treaty? Not by any means. It has no effect upon it.

Now, in the execution of the engagements that are contained in that treaty it is not necessary for us to repeat to the people of Cuba the words which are contained in that joint resolution. I do not care whether we do or whether we do not. I do not want to depart from them at all. Under that condition we went into Cuba and we found there an organized Cuban army, and we appealed to it. We furnished it with guns, uniforms, and provisions and put them to work fighting Spain, increasing the power of Gomez, Garcia, and other men who were engaged then in open hostilities with Spain, and had been in a state of war with that Monarchy for then five or six years.

We had refused to these same men who belonged to the army of Cuba a recognition of their independence or their autonomy or their existence as a power, either de jure or de facto, when we refused to grant to these Spanish people and the Cuban army or the Cuban government the rights of belligerency under a declaration of neutrality on the part of the United States. We had condemned them by the refusal to grant that privilege to such a condition as that they had no autonomy at all, either de facto or de jure. We treated them as a set of rebellious subjects of Spain, and when we declared war against Spain we declared war against every man, woman, and child in Cuba or elsewhere in the Spanish power or in the Spanish realm, making by law each one of the men who comprised and constituted the so-called republic in Cuba the national enemy of the United States. Does anybody deny that proposition? During all that war, and until the time peace was declared through the Paris treaty, every man, woman, and child in the island of Cuba that owed natural allegiance to the Government of Spain was declared a public enemy of the United States.

So, Mr. President, they were treated at the time the treaty was made. They were public enemies of the United States, and notwithstanding our resolution as to what they wanted and what we intended to do with that country in the event it fell into our hands as a result of the war, we were then making concessions to men who were our national enemies. We might just as well have made concessions to the people in Madrid, Catalonia, or anywhere else in the peninsula of Spain as to have made them to the people in the island of Cuba, for the reason that they all stood on the same ground precisely, and were all of them national enemies of the United States.

I am not mentioning this to get rid of the moral effect of our obligations, self-assumed, self-imposed, and to be self-executed, without any respect at all to the request of the people of Cuba or any faction there, and particularly of the faction in Cuba that we had refused to recognize as a government either de facto or de jure.

Now, let us see what these amendments do propose to the people of Cuba and let us see whether we have the power under our Constitution to do things that are required by this act.

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise lodgment in or control over any portion of said island,

That is a perpetual covenant, a perpetual obligation. No lapse of time will change it. There is no period for its determination, and there is no event upon which it is to be determined. It can never be determined as long as the United States Government has the power to maintain it own sovereignty and independence as a nation. The obligation runs along with our sovereignty, and we are never released from it, and it can not be taken away from us so long as we are a sovereign and an autonomous nation. That is the first obligation as to the length of time when this amendment of ours on Cuba is to extend. It—

Shall never enter into any treaty.

Now, can you imagine a country so bound to another that it can never enter into a treaty with any foreign power upon any subject whatever, that is a sovereign power? It is a power under a suzerainty, and according to the terms of the agreement which creates that relation of suzerain it may be a protectorate. But unquestionably in either view Cuba is placed by that declaration in a position where she is not sovereign. So we would be obliged to admit to the Cuban people if they made the question.

Mr. President, the world has had a fresh and recent example of a great national and widespread catastrophe, growing out of such a relation as this between the Orange Free State and the Transvaal Republic and the Government of Great Britain. Great Britain had acquired it, I think, from the Netherlands, by one of those ancient treaties that swept about over the world and gathered in territories and realms, which were inscribed upon maps and written in the body of instruments, but which were not practically attended with occupation by the power to which sovereignty was transferred. One of these treaties, running back upon a line of treaty obligation and transfer that dated centuries before, put the Government of Great Britain in the possession of a certain portion of South Africa which extended above the line where the Transvaal and the Orange Free State were afterwards located.

They were the nominal sovereigns on paper of that part of South Africa. The Boers came up from Cape Colony or Cape Town, the southern part. They made a movement and first settled down in the southern or eastern portion of South Africa, at Natal. The British followed them there, claiming their rights of sovereignty, and the Boers retreated to another part of the same territory, over which this paper title of Great Britain continued to exist.

When they grew into power through their own energies and virtues the British Government found it necessary, particularly after the discovery of the gold and diamond mines in those countries, to assert that ancient title, and did so. They came to a compromise, and the compromise was that Great Britain should be suzerain over these countries and should have the right to assent to all the treaties with foreign powers that these Republics, when they got to be divided into two Republics, should make at any time. But there was an implied understanding, so the Boers insist, that there should be no interference with local government. It was entirely confined to the foreign relations of the Boer people. That subject got into controversy, and as the Boer power increased their laws became, as the British contended, in some sense—perhaps in an extraordinary sense—oppressive on the British subjects and discriminative against British property in taxation. The British Government came down upon the Boer settlements and insisted that they should modify their statutes and that they should not have intercourse with other nations at all.

Who has ever heard of a consul or a minister from the Transvaal or from the Orange Free State in the United States? Why have they not been here? Why have we not had diplomatic or consular relations with that great country? We send consuls there, but they have sent none here. They could issue an exequatur under their arrangement with Great Britain for consuls to reside in their country, but they could send neither consuls nor ministers to the United States. They were hampered.

Let us begin to draw the parallel a little. Here is the rich island of Cuba, with mines of iron in it that are more valuable to the United States and to Cuba than the diamond mines and the gold mines which are found in the Orange Free State or in the Transvaal, and whose agricultural productions are of almost immeasurable and inconceivable value. The time has passed in which there was a transmission of authority from Spain to the United States of some kind or other in regard to the island of Cuba, and in that period of time the Government of the United States has exercised control over Cuba, and our control has been as authentic and very much of the same character as that which the British Government exercised, or undertook to exercise, over the Transvaal.

Now comes the question in dispute, the right of the Cuban people to govern that land according to their own pleasure. We propose to them that they shall put themselves in relations to the Government of the United States very similar to those that exist between the Transvaal and the Orange Free State and Great Britain. Suppose those relations are adopted, suppose that we assume a protectorate over the island of Cuba, or become suzerain over the island of Cuba, have we not a perfect right, Mr. President, to anticipate, and must we not anticipate and expect that in the further development of that island in its mines, in its forests, in the valuable productions of its agriculture, its lands, the same class of questions will arise between the United States and Cuba as have arisen between the Transvaal and Great Britain?

We invite it; we provide for it. We shut our eyes to the lessons of the most recent history of the whole world, and the most disastrous, and we deliberately enter upon a proposition here by which we shall become suzerain over Cuba. What else is it? We say to them in the first branch of this proposition:

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

Suppose, after we have imposed these obligations upon Cuba, she does not comply with them, where is your remedy? War, nothing but war—a renewal of the Transvaal struggle. If Cuba should undertake, after she has entered into that engagement, to shake off the fetters imposed upon her by that article, we manacle her by this proposition, if she accept it, and then we ask her forever to be still; but in the history and course of nature men will not keep still when they are goaded by chains like these. The least of all we have the right to expect is that the Cubans will keep still.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate very briefly to the question whether or not we have got the power on our side to enter into a protectorate—for that is a protectorate or a suzerainty—I want to know whether the Government of the United States has got the constitutional power to become the protector of any foreign country? While that question makes no impression upon this Senate, Mr. President, it will arise necessarily. It is one of the most formidable questions that can possibly be suggested, not in respect to Cuba alone, but also in respect of the Philippines. Have we a right, for instance, in the Philippines to relinquish our actual title and drop down to a protectorate?

There is one view of the question which has been very much insisted upon by certain gentlemen in this body—have we a right in the case of Cuba to establish a protectorate? We have no right to establish any State. I care not what it may be, except a State that has a republican form of government. It is very true that by the treaty that was made by one of our military officers we have assumed a certain jurisdiction over the sultan of the Sulu Islands, at the southern extremity of that archipelago. It is equally true that under our authority in the Constitution we make treaties with the Indian tribes. We have assumed authority over them by treaty; some of those tribes, like the Seminoles, being polygamists and also slaveholders, and many of the tribes being addicted to polygamy, and not only addicted to polygamy, but recognizing it distinctly as a law of their tribal government.

So that I do not count those instances as bearing upon us at all, because they are based upon the idea that subject or Indian tribes in this country under our Constitution may be treated with, not because they are sovereign or foreign powers, but simply because they are subject powers or subject organizations. But I am speaking now of the power of recognizing a State, whether it is in the Union or out of the Union. Can we go abroad, for instance, and accept a suzerainty or a protectorate over a foreign monarch? I put it in that view. There is no power in this Constitution to do that, Mr. President, because the Government of the United States can not extend its powers into or over any government that is not republican in form. That is enough to say about that view of the question.

We can not go to any island of the Pacific Ocean, or any other place in the world, neither could we go to China, where we are now with armies and ships hovering about the border, and with the consent of all the civilized powers in the world, including those who have got armies there, we could not accept a protectorate over China. If we had as much physical power as you please to do it, as much inducement as you could imagine for doing it, the question arises, Is it possible that the Government of the United States can accept and exercise a protectorate over an oligarchy or an autocracy in China, retaining that Government in the same fashion as it is now as an autocratic monarchy?

I think, Mr. President, that the answer to that question is at once felt and seen by every person to whom it is stated. There is no answer necessary to a question of that kind. It is not within the powers of the United States to hold the relation of protectorate toward any government, at least that is not republican in form, for our Constitution and our laws are totally at variance with all governments that are monarchic or autocratic; and so our Constitution can not enter such a country, and our laws can not enter there; and that would shut us off from the power to create and carry on the suzerainty in such a country.

Neither can we create a suzerainty or a protectorate over any country, whether republican or otherwise, that is not within the limits of the territory of the United States. We have had offers of that kind from republics. Honduras has made such offers to us, and in a very famous case Haiti has done it; but yet we have refused to accept the annexation of those States, and we have never been called upon to accept a protectorate over them, because everybody knew that we could not and would not do it.

When we go to creating a government independent of us in Cuba, and then to exercising a protectorate or a suzerainty over that government, we simply step outside the lines of constitutional power that this Government possesses, whether in the diplomatic, executive, or legislative branch.

There are, then, two reasons why this proposition should not be submitted. One is that Cuba would never accept it; the other is that the Government of the United States as a government has no right to offer it—two sufficient reasons, in my judgment.

The amendment proceeds:

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

If we have a positive agreement between the island of Cuba and the United States Government, and if Cuba chooses to violate it by creating some debt that runs over the margin of its limit, or if, disregarding it absolutely, she goes along like a free government, making the engagements that she must make suited to her necessities, what is the penalty you impose upon Cuba in this case? What are you going to do with her if, after having made the engagement, she is unable to comply with it and live, or is unwilling to comply with it? Do we not foresee that no government that has a pretension to or expectation of sovereignty will ever consent to enter into such a stipulation as that?

Mr. President, we must not act toward the government and people of Cuba as if we supposed they were children. We must at least assume that they have intelligence enough to take care of themselves when we propose to give them autonomy, and yet that second branch of this amendment assumes everthing else but that. We can not expect Cuba to accept it, and what is the use of putting it in this act, and putting it here as a part of an ultimatum, when it is perfectly obvious that Cuba can not accept it consistently with her own dignity as a free government, as an independent power?

Again, the amendment provides:

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene—

What is meant by intervening? It means to send troops and ships of war into that country—for the preservation of Cuban independence.

That means to draw us into any war that Cuba may force herself into with any foreign power, for any war that Cuba might get into with any foreign power of any magnitude whatever would necessarily involve her independence. The result of that war would be that the foreign power would either be defeated, or, if successful, conquer and annex or conquer and appropriate the island of Cuba.

Is not that perfectly manifest? If we intervene with an idea for the prevention of that, how do we intervene? We do it with armies and navies, and we are bound here by a stipulation that we will make war on any power that makes war against Cuba if that power has the ability, or the supposed ability, at last to conquer Cuba and to make intervention necessary for the preservation of her independence. That comes to us. I do not see that I would be willing at this time to make an engagement of this solemn character with Cuba, by which we are obliged to intervene in her wars whenever a war that is made against her would threaten her independence.

How easy it would be for the ruling authorities in Cuba to involve themselves in a war, and thereupon call upon the United States and say, "If you do not come to our support, we will be obliged to yield our independence," and then we have got to go to war with some foreign country to fight, not merely for the independence of Cuba, but to fight in order to preserve her rights and her relations toward the United States. I would not give to any power which exists in this world a compact or a treaty right to draw this Government into her quarrels under such conditions and circumstances. It is an unwise thing to do; it is a dangerous thing to do.

We have a right also under this amendment to intervene for—the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty.

Whose right, whose property, and whose individual liberty? That means, of course, of the people of Cuba.

Suppose that some case occurs down there in which we might suppose that the government was not adequate to the preservation of life, property, and individual liberty, either through the corruption of its authorities or for the want of enough police power or strength to enforce the decrees of its courts or tribunals, then we have the right to intervene; and not merely the right, Mr. President, but when such rights are connected with life, liberty, and the preservation of property it is our duty to intervene, and we have got the privilege of intervening.

Thus we may be drawn into the actual administration of the internal affairs of Cuba, to ascertain from time to time whether her government is adequate to the maintenance of life, liberty, and property in Cuba. Here we are with that kind of a protectorate over the people of Cuba against the government—the people against the government. We say to the people of Cuba, "You are not adequately protected by this government and can not be; and therefore we will intervene under the arrangement we have made with Cuba, in which we have got the right to and it has become a duty on our part to intervene." Then we also have a right to intervene—for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States.

We recognize obligations there as continuing; we recognize in that phraseology that there is no period of time that terminates our obligations toward Cuba so long as we retain suzerain power or the protectorate power that is conferred under this and other articles of this proposition, for we have the right to intervene with respect to Cuba to discharge all the obligations to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, and that is an unlimited obligation in point of time; it is not terminated at the time that we give up to Cuba the right to this so-called independent and autonomous government.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

That is clearly right. There is no question about that.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised, or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island.

The difficulty in that is that we do not know how we are going to enforce the obligation after she has consented to it. We have not prescribed what sanitation is, and what is effective sanitation; and if Cuba does not apply proper rules as to sanitation she will lose her independence. What are we going to do with it? I am afraid that in any event and under all the circumstances presented in this amendment to the bill we are about to become the owners of a white elephant that we do not know how to control or get rid of. It is extremely dangerous legislation in any aspect of it.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

Mr. President, that is giving away the Isle of Pines to Cuba if she can beat us in a negotiation for it hereafter, when this treaty gives us as clear a title to the Isle of Pines as it does to Porto Rico or the Philippines:

Spain cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico and other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies, and the island of Guam in the Marianas or Ladrones.

That follows the first article of the treaty, in which it is said:

Spain relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba.

And she also—

cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico and other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies, and the island of Guam in the Marianas or Ladrones.

What can be plainer than that, this being an island under Spanish dominion and authority in the Caribbean Sea, or in the group of islands in the West Indies, that it was passed by this treaty to us without a recognition of one particle of title of Cuba to the Isle of Pines? Why should we palter with this subject when dealing with Cuba, and say to her that we will relinquish to you the title that we have acquired from Spain to the Isle of Pines? Did the Isle of Pines ever belong to Cuba? Never. Cuba never owned any territory outside of her own insular boundaries. She was neither sovereign nor suzerain over any part of the islands in that West India group of islands. She was herself but a province of Spain.

Some time before the last war occurred the Spanish Government had changed its relations to Cuba, and had decreed that she was one of the provinces of the Peninsula, not geographically, but politically, and she had her right to representation in the Cortes accordingly, but she had her separate captain-general, who was not a captain-general of Cuba or of Cuban authority, but a captain-general of Spain assigned to command in Cuba. That was all. He might have included the Isle of Pines or of Porto Rico, for that matter, or any other Spanish islands in his jurisdiction without changing the political or geographical relations between the Isle of Pines and the island of Cuba.

They were both under the Spanish Government, and the Isle of Pines received no part of its government from or through Cuba. All her rights came directly from Spain. We are entitled to that island beyond all question, and why do we put in here this proposition to negotiate with Cuba, after a government is established there, about the ownership of the Isle of Pines? There is no reason for it, you know, except one of these boastful contentions of the Spaniards, or the Cubans, or the Spanish people in Cuba, that they intended to have the Isle of Pines; that it was a necessary part of the geography of Cuba, necessary for her protection and her defense against foreign enemies.

When a suggestion was made, as we were informed by the newspapers, in the Cuban constitutional convention that perhaps the United States might assert some title under the Paris treaty to the Isle of Pines, there was a general flutter of the cocks all over the main, crowing and carrying on, swearing and insisting that they intended to have that island. That was a mere bluster, a mere idle boast, and we ought not to pay any respect to it. If we want to treat with these people so as to have results, we had better not set out by giving an admission of this sort in their favor, where we have got a perfect title, and trying to settle it by some future negotiations. I oppose that.

The Isle of Pines, as I am informed, is a fruitful island, well inhabited. It was used by the Spanish Government as a penal colony during the time that Spain had the dominion of it. It has a most admirable harbor, deep and well protected, and it lies nearer to Jamaica and nearer to Santa Lucia, and as near to the passage between the island of Cuba and Haiti as Habana. It is in a very commanding position with respect to all future rights that we may have in a canal through the Isthmus of Darien, whether it is in Nicaragua or Costa Rica or elsewhere. It is a very important military possession for the United States, which, above all things else, we ought not to put in question by yielding it as a subject of negotiation when our title under the treaty is absolutely perfect.

I would not vote for any measure that contained that provision in it, for I would feel that I had given away a very important part of the acquisitions from Spain in doing such a thing as that.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

There we transfer the power of diplomacy and negotiation to the President. We here abandon the legislative function of prescribing an ultimatum, and we say, in respect of this particular matter found in the seventh proposition, "We leave that to you and the President to negotiate as to whether it shall be a lease or whether it shall be a sale outright, carrying a title," and not naming the ports or points or the number of them to which we are entitled or would be entitled under the agreement. But "lands necessary for coaling or naval stations" means two at least. It does not mean three. It does not mean four. We can not have naval stations on the island of Cuba that are of any real advantage to us unless they command the entrances or the passageways between that island at either end and the countries that are opposite over the sea. What we want with naval stations at Cuba is to guard the entrance into the Caribbean Sea. We have San Juan. I hope we will get St. Thomas, the Danish possession. It is quite easy, if we choose, to get Samoa, in Haiti.

We ought by all means to acquire a naval station at the easternmost end of the island of Cuba, and we ought to swing around to the west and have one at the westernmost end of the island of Cuba to cover that deep-water passage that all the ships must pass through between that and Yucatan. There is where we need these places. But we need more than two. We need one on the north coast to cooperate with our naval stations and our fortifications at the Dry Tortugas and at Key West. The possession of the Isle of Pines makes unnecessary, or, at least, not very important, that we should have the Bay of Santiago de Cuba. What we have there would probably stand as a substitute for such possessions or such rights as we might want to get in either of the ports I have mentioned; but while we are fixing up for this business, what are we doing it for?

What is our purpose? Why do we want any naval stations in the Gulf of Mexico or in the Caribbean Sea. I can suggest a reason why we want them. It comes from a Government that is wiser than we are, from men who certainly are wiser than I am, for reasons which have materialized in the fortifications from Nova Scotia around to Honduras, in the possession of the British Government, and have been in their possession since the first ordination of our Government here, and upon which they have spent millions and millions of money. For what purpose? Not to protect Great Britain, not to keep our vessels from approaching her coast, but to guard our coasts so that she shall have the shortest lines from her naval stations to every important city in the United States—the picket post of Great Britain that looks right down into the heart of the United States on the Atlantic.

Now, if we shall acquire these ports there, commencing with two or three in Cuba, one in Haiti, one in St. Thomas, to be added to the one we now have at San Juan, we will have a string of fortifications, including the Dry Tortugas and Key West, which will prohibit Great Britain from assuming and holding the absolute military control of the Caribbean Sea, and when we have done that she will lose her interest in the subject and be willing to abandon her fortifications at any place, at least north of that line.

Mr. President, we have not made any acquisition in connection with this whole war that is more important to us than the Isle of Pines, and it is impossible for us, considering our own national defense, to permit Cuba to escape from the situation she is now in and rise to the dignity and power of a free, sovereign, and independent republic until she has stipulated with us as to at least two, perhaps three, perhaps four places which we shall have the right to control, so that we can use them for purposes of national self-defense. We ought not to quibble with this subject and leave so material a matter as that open to a discussion and to a diplomatic controversy with Cuba after she has risen to the dignity of a sovereign power through our assistance.

It must be remembered, on our side of the question, that the republic of Cuba was as prostrate as any people or any person who pretended to be an organized community had ever been in all the history of time. Weyler had persecuted those people with starvation until they had died by hundreds of thousands and until it is said now that you can scarcely find a child who was born in the period of the Spanish struggle. Their mothers were destroyed or else population was interrupted by starvation. The horrors of that period I do not wish to recite. They are very disagreeable to any man, but certainly extremely disagreeable to those of us who had to deal with them while they were in existence.

Look back at the history of the people of Cuba from which we have delivered them. We began with them in the abject extremity of want and desperate disease, and we have raised them and raised them and raised them by our charity, by our benevolence administered through Government agencies, by our laws, by our moral and actual military and legal influence, until now it is said that the island of Cuba is covered with wealth newly sprung from her soil. We see that this convention, met in Cuba, has set itself up as the arbiter of the destiny of the United States, instead of being willing to accept from the United States a fair share of the benevolence that we have bestowed upon them.

Do I imagine that there is any man in the world who has a higher grade of the opportunity of liberty than have I, a citizen of the State of Alabama, in the American Union? If we were to conceive of a higher political status than that, where would we go to find it? Why is not a position of that kind quite sufficient for the security of the life, the liberty, the property, and the pride even of a Spanish hidalgo? Who is it that outclasses an American citizen in his political rights and privileges? And for these men to stand and spurn and with contumely to deride that, the idea of being associated with Americans in an American Union, is something that invokes simply the pity of mankind. That is all. We know what we are doing, and we know that if we could confer those blessings upon that people we would confer the last and the utmost of all the privileges that have ever been conferred by any government in the world upon a people.

So I have very little patience with the kind of obstruction and objection that arises out of the thought that a temporary or, if you please, a perpetual independent government of the people of Cuba, as they are called (a most queer admixture of people after all), is to them or to the world a matter of more consequence than that they should be in, of, and with the Government of the United States, whether as States or Territories. The people of our Territories have as many rights as the people of the States, except that they do not have the trouble of being harassed with Presidential elections.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

What is a permanent treaty? One that can not be broken, or one simply that has the continuity of moral obligation attending it? That is all.

I wish to say to the honorable Senate that I have communications from the officials of Cuba, dating way to February 16, 1899, which show their disposition toward the United State Government as clearly as those people do now, and practically in the same line, and that they are absolutely irreconcilable to the United States unless we would withdraw from the island of Cuba all sovereignty and all suzerainty. If the Senate has doubt about this, at some appropriate time—it may not be during this debate—I will present to it in a secret legislative session what I do not choose to publish to the world, not because there is any ban of confidence about it, but because I do not wish to ever inform our people of the sentiment in the breast of those people.

How do these official papers happen to exist between a Senator of the United States and a Cuban committee? I had been the friend of Cuba during all the struggle of her warfare, and was known as such. I had not had any correspondence with any Cuban whatever. I had a personal acquaintance with only a very few of them. After the struggle was over and the treaty of Paris had been made, in February, 1899, General Garcia, who fought most splendidly along with our troops at Santiago de Cuba, a prominent and splendid officer belonging to the Cuban republic, came here in company with about 20 of the leading men of that island, sent as a committee to the President of the United States for the purpose of making some arrangement with him in respect of the plans and theories upon which the future of Cuba was to be administered and conducted.

When they got to the city of Washington, of which I knew nothing until their arrival, except that the newspapers informed us that they were coming, they did me the honor to write me a note asking me to appear before them at the Hotel Raleigh, intimating in their note that they wanted a conference with me about Cuban affairs.

I instantly took warning from that, and I determined that what I had to say to them should be in writing and not otherwise. I determined also that I would neither see the President nor the Secretary of State nor anybody else to ascertain from them any information whatever about their views in regard to Cuba, because I expected them to try to get information from me, and I intended to be entirely free.

I went to those gentlemen two days after their invitation reached me. I notified them when I would appear, and there they all were, including General Garcia and several gentlemen who are members of the present Cuban convention, and very important members. Mr. Quesada was one, Mr. Sanguilly was another, and there were various others. They were men magnificently educated and in every respect gentlemen; high-toned, splendid people. I was struck with admiration that the island of Cuba could produce a committee of that kind. Where did they come from? They came from a convention which met in the island of Cuba, which was a part of and an advisory body to the Cuban republic, and had been all the time. They came with instructions from that convention to hold their intercourse with the President of the United States.

When I came before them, as I said, what I had to say was in writing, in sixteen propositions, not propositions for settlement, but propositions defining what I believed to be the relations between the United States and Cuba. I can read these propositions without reading the answers, and I think I will do it if the Senate will permit me. They are not long. Immediately after these propositions had been submitted to them in open council and taken under advisement by them for three or four days and replied to by them, I sent the original propositions and the original reply to the Secretary of State to inform him of the actual feeling, opinion, belief, and attitude of this great committee of Cubans; and the Secretary of State wrote me a letter thanking me for having done so.

Since that time I have never mentioned the matter to mortal man, but I have had the papers here to note what changes, if any, have taken place in Cuban sentiment, and there were none. We deceive ourselves when we suppose that we are going to meet in Cuba a set of men who are not bent and determined on having their own way about that government. I think it is my duty to caution the Senate about this business; and in order that you may see the scope of what happened between us, without reading what they had to say, I will read what I said to them. I left the paper in their possession:

1. Congress expressly refused to recognize the existence of any government in Cuba except that of the Spanish monarchy. This refusal included the Cuban republic and the autonomist government.

2. Congress declared war against Spain to avenge the destruction of the Maine and for wrongs done to our people and the insult to our flag while it was in Habana Harbor by invitation.

3. In this declaration there was an ultimatum, which, if it was accepted, would have prevented active hostilities. That condition was that Spain should withdraw from Cuba and abandon her claim of sovereignty over the island of Cuba.

4. Spain refused and resented this condition and declared that a state of war existed.

5. This situation made all the people of Spain, including those of Spain and Cuba, national enemies of the United States. No exception was made by Congress as to the supporters of the republic. This was refused by voting down an amendment to that effect—

I offered the amendment which was voted down. The members thanked me for it—

6. But Congress denounced the treatment of the Cubans in arms, by the Spanish army and Government, as being inhuman and contrary to the laws of nations—

7. Congress failed to act on the Senate resolutions that declared the belligerent rights of the Cuban republic, thus leaving its supporters in the attitude of insurrectionists against the authority of the Crown. This was the actual and legal situation when the war commenced and when it ended.

8. But Congress, in its declaration of war, declared that the people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

9. That declaration is good and is binding in morals upon the United States, but it is not an agreement with anybody, nor is it a decree or a law—

Right there they took sharp issue with me—

It remains to be executed by the United States in such manner and at such time as the competent authority in the United States shall provide.

It will be so executed.

10. In executing this self-imposed policy and duty the initial step is, necessarily, the restoration of peace and industry in the island, and for this purpose, chiefly, the Army of the United States will occupy Cuba, as the supreme military power.

11. Until this has been accomplished, and until a permanent civil government has been established in Cuba, or its establishment is assured, the military power of the United States can not be withdrawn, and the civil powers in Cuba, as well as any military organizations will be subordinate to the military power of the United States. Its flag, supported by its arms, will represent sovereign power and authority in Cuba, and civil sovereignty will be in suspense. This sovereignty will be accorded to the people of Cuba when they have established a permanent government, republican in form.

Until that event the military control of the island and the civil administration will remain in the government of the island.

12. The method of procedure on the part of the United States to bring about this result will be left largely, if not exclusively, to the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, as Congress can not enact laws to govern Cuba until the full sovereignty of the island has been assumed by the United States.

13. Congress can enact laws, if it is necessary, to empower the President to enlist Cubans in the Army or to organize them into police forces, and can provide for their supply and payment.

The President, in my opinion, now possesses that authority. Peace between Spain and the United States does not establish peace in Cuba, if there are organizations there that refuse to accept the military authority of the United States as being supreme throughout the island. Nor does it establish the condition of peace in Cuba until civil government has been established, which is the only form of government that can be recognized as sovereign by the nations of the earth. All purely military government is provisional.

14. If these views are correct, the first duty of the United States and of every inhabitant of Cuba is to establish peace, order, and industry in the island, and then to establish just and permanent civil government.

15. This should be done, and can only be done, upon the initiative of the supreme military authority in Cuba, while it remains in power, addressed to the people through such agencies or organizations as it may select.

16. The selection of these preliminary agencies or organizations should be made with reference to the sincere and free expression of the will of all the people of Cuba, for it is all the people, and not a part of them, whom Congress has recognized as being entitled to become "free, sovereign, and independent."

I withhold the answers that these gentlemen made to these propositions, to some of which they most seriously disagreed. I learned from that transaction with these very important men of Cuba that we are handling edged tools in this business, and we are not to expect, however much it might be desired, a pacific and proper-minded submission, I will call it, to what is the actual situation and to what would be an indescribable blessing to those people, who have much of my confidence and respect and a large share in my affections. But I do not want to put the Government of the United States in contact with a magazine that a match might set off and impose upon us the necessity of controlling by arms.

When you had your Army organization bill before this body, I offered an amendment that authorized the President of the United States to enlist volunteers and to carry them to Cuba in the event that an emergency arose. You rejected it. You would have nothing to do with it. I would have been perfectly willing and was desirous that we should provide in that act for an additional army of 25,000 men at least, and in doing that we should have admonished Cuba, as well as the rebels in the Philippines, that the Government of the United States intended to go on its course of absolute but unimpeded justice.

Mr. President, I will speak for myself alone; but if I wanted to reconcile the Cubans to the Government of the United States my first proposition would be absolute free trade between the United States and Cuba. My second proposition would be immediately to recognize their independence without any other proposition at all, and leave them to see whether they could fight their way out. I believe that the Government of the United States, standing as it does in its relation to Cuba, will never be wanting in power or determination to take care of her own interest, but I believe what I recommend now would almost necessarily result in a picnic down there of throat cutting, which would very much convince those people that the best way to become free is to have respect for the liberties and rights of each other.

I have stated only what I believe to be the correct policy in Cuba, and I do not oppose these resolutions upon that policy so announced, for they all work in harmony with it; but if I was going to say what the result of the working out of this programme here would be, granting that it can get through without too serious friction, it would be the same that I desire for Cuba—absolute free trade between the people of Cuba and the people of the United States and a government there which would last long enough to satisfy those people that the best home for liberty, after all, is in the United States.

I have said now all that I desire to say at this time and probably at any time at all upon this bill. I can not express my thanks to the Senate for their kind attention to what I have been saying, with three Republican Senators in the Chamber at a time; but I have tried to do my duty in this business, and only that; and if I have uttered any language in this discussion that is expletive or superfluous, it has been in some unguarded moment, for I have not desired to occupy the time of this body except simply long enough to present my objections against this measure, and both wings of it, as embraced in these amendments. If I were to make the very last invocation in the world to the Senate, it would be, gentlemen, abandon these amendments and let us pass the Army bill.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CLARKE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives upon the death of my late colleague, Mr. CLARKE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSBROUGH in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 25, 1901.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. FRANK G. CLARKE, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may now be given for paying fitting tribute to his memory.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy of the same to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the House, at the conclusion of the memorial exercises of the day, do adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. FRANK G. CLARKE, late a Representative from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do take its recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on Wednesday, January 9, FRANK G. CLARKE, Representative in Congress from the Second Congressional district of New Hampshire, died at his home in Peterboro after a brief illness. His death came as a great shock to the community in which he lived, to his friends in all parts of the State, and to his Congressional associates, by whom he was highly respected and deservedly honored. Congressman CLARKE was not a man of strong physique, but he was active, energetic, and self-reliant, and no one who knew him was prepared for the sad news of his death when the end so suddenly came.

With a fatal disease firmly fastened on him he entered the Presidential campaign with vigor, making many addresses in different parts of the State, and when the campaign closed he quietly went to work organizing his forces as a candidate for United States Senator. While thus engaged his health completely gave way, and, after vainly struggling for a short time against the malady, he gracefully withdrew from the Senatorial contest and bravely met death, after a struggle marked by true heroism and wonderful calmness. He had selected the very day he died for a journey to the capitol to look after his Senatorial interests, but instead he entered on a journey the length and nature of which is beyond human knowledge or calculation.

Mr. CLARKE was born in the town of Wilton, N. H., September 10, 1850. He was the son of Moses Clarke, who survives him. His early education was received in the public schools of his native town, after which he attended Kimball Union Academy, at Meriden, N. H., there fitting himself to enter Dartmouth College, from which he graduated with honor. After his college course was completed he studied law, and in his twenty-fifth year entered upon the practice of his profession in the town of Peterboro, being associated with the late Albert S. Scott. His genial manners, kindly disposition, and ability as a lawyer drew clients to him, and soon his practice became large and lucrative. He was both a safe counselor and an able advocate, and the success that he achieved in his profession was but a fulfillment of the promise that his school and college days gave.

He early took an interest in political affairs, and became the acknowledged leader of his party in the town of Peterboro. In 1885 he was elected to the State legislature, after having served two years as a colonel on the staff of Governor Hale. In the legislature he was associated with many able men, and by common consent he was early accorded a place in the front rank. He engaged in many warm debates and gained a reputation for forensic ability of a high order, winning many laurels in the hot debates of that year.

In 1889 he was again called from his professional duties to represent his district in the State senate, where he greatly added to the reputation already achieved. In 1891 he was again selected to represent his town in the State legislature, and was honored with an election to the speakership of that body, in which position he won unstinted praise for his impartiality and ability as a presiding officer.

Continuing active in politics, he was made the nominee of his party for Congress in 1896, being elected by a flattering majority, and in 1898 he was given a reelection. In the House of Representatives Colonel CLARKE won many friends.

His cordial manner and genial disposition made him a favorite, and his witty sayings and amusing stories will long be remembered by his Congressional associates. He was fond of society, while at the same time devoted to his family; and among men he was universally recognized as a true friend, a pleasant companion, and a generous, honorable, high-minded gentleman. His death removes from the State an honored son and public servant, whose memory will long be cherished, and whose good deeds will not be forgotten.

Mr. President, on these occasions the mind naturally turns to the contemplation of divine things, and especially are we led to meditate upon the great question of immortality. For our friend life's work has ended. What of the future?

At a dinner given to Victor Hugo in Paris many years ago that great man delivered an impromptu address in which he gave expression to his faith in the infinite and in the soul's immortality. It is one of the most remarkable utterances on the subject that ever fell from mortal lips. His friend Houssaye, who was present, describes the scene in these words:

Hugo at that time was a man of steel, with no sign of old age about him, but with all the agility, the suppleness, the ease, and grace of his best years.

He was contradicting the atheists, and his friend further says:

His face was bright with the heavenly halo, and his eyes shone like burning coals.

"There are no occult forces," he said, "there are only luminous forces. Occult force is chaos; the luminous force is God. Man is an infinite little copy of God. This is glory enough for man. I am a man, an invisible atom, a drop in the ocean, a grain of sand on the shore. Little as I am, I feel the God in me, because I can also bring forth out of my chaos. I make books, which are creations. I feel in myself that future life. I am like a forest which has been more than once cut down; the new shoots are stronger and livelier than ever.

"I am rising, I know, toward the sky. The sunshine is on my head. The earth gives me its generous sap, but heaven lights me with the reflection of unknown worlds. You say the soul is nothing but the result of bodily powers. Why, then, is my soul more luminous when my bodily powers begin to fail? Winter is on my head and eternal spring is in my heart. I breathe at this hour the fragrance of the lilacs, the violets, and the roses as at twenty years ago. The nearer I approach the end the plainer I hear around me the immortal symphonies of the worlds which invite me.

"It is marvelous, yet simple. It is a fairy tale, and it is historic. For half a century I have been writing my thoughts in prose and verse, history, philosophy, drama, romance, tradition, satire, ode, and song. I have tried all, but I feel I have not said a thousandth part of what is in me. When I go down to the grave I can say, like many others, I have finished my day's work, but I can not say I have finished my life. My days will begin again the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes on the twilight to open on the dawn."

Has ever human language more clearly expressed the thought that comes to us always as we contemplate the mysteries of death and the grave? To every human soul sorrow and death must come. The sunlight is ours, so also is the darkness, and as Hallock has said, "If we never had nights we could never see the stars."

When the sun withdraws its light,
Lo! the stars of God are there;
Present host, unseen till night—
Matchless, countless, silent, fair.

It has well been said that we are passing toward final rest, and that we should not regret it if the eyes grow dim, for we will see better by and by. If the ear is heavy we need not be sorry. If youth is passing and beauty fading, we need not mourn. If the hand trembles and the foot is unsteady with age, let us not be depressed in spirit. With every impediment, with every sign of the taking down of this tabernacle we should remember that it is the striking of the tent that the march may begin, and that when the tabernacle is next pitched it will be on an undisturbed shore, and that there, with eyes unwet, and before a God unveiled and never to be wrapped in darkness, that there, looking back upon this world of ignorance and suffering and trouble, and upon the hardships of the way, we can with full and discerning reason lift up our voices and give thanks to God and say: "There was not one trouble too much; there was not one sorrow too piercing." And we will thank God in that land for the very things that wrung tears from our eyes in this.

Such is our hope and aspiration, and that is the message that we would to-day convey to the hearts of the family and friends of our dead associate and brother.

We all instinctively shrink from death, yet why should we? The physician knows that death brings a feeling of unutterable relief and joy to the poor, burdened, suffering body. Herman Merivale has painted a beautiful picture of what death really is in these lines:

Miscall me not. Men have miscalled me much,
Have given hard names and harsher thoughts to me,
Reviled and evilly treated me,
Built me strange temples as an unknown god,
Then called me idol, devil, unclean thing,
And to rude insult bowed my godhead down.
Miscall me not, for men have marred my form
And in the earthborn grossness of their thoughts
Have coldly modeled me of their own clay,
Then fear to look on that themselves have made.
Miscall me not. Ye know not what I am,
But ye shall see me face to face and know.
I take all sorrows from the sorrowful
And teach the joyful what it is to joy.
I gather in my landlocked harbor's clasp
The shattered vessels of a vexed world,
And even the tiniest ripple upon life
Is to that calm sublime as tropic storm.
When other leechcraft fails the breaking brain,
I only own the anodyne to still
Its eddies to visionless repose.
The face distorted with life's latest pang,
I smooth in passing with an angel's wing,
And from beneath the quiet eyelids steal
The hidden glory of the eyes to give
A new and nobler beauty to the rest.
Believe me not. The plagues that walk the earth,
The wasting pain, the sudden agony,
Famine and war and pestilence and all
The terrors that have darkened round my name,
These are the works of life; they are not mine;
Vex when I tarry, vanish when I come,
Instantly melting into perfect peace
As at His word whose master spirit I am
The troubled waters slept on Galilee.
Tender I am, not cruel. When I take

The shape most hard to human eyes and pluck
The little baby blossom yet unblown,
'Tis but to graft it on a kindlier stem,
And leaping o'er the perilous years of growth,
Unwept of sorrow and unscathed of wrong,
Clothe it at once with rich maturity.
'Tis I that give a soul to memory,
For round the follies of the bad I throw
The mantle of a kind forgetfulness,
But canonized in dear love's calendar
I sanctify the good for evermore.
Miscall me not. My generous fullness lends
Home to the homeless, to the friendless friends,
To the starved babe the mother's tender breast,
Wealth to the poor, and to the restless rest.

And so, Mr. President, to-day we choose to think of our friend as being free from the cares, labors, and disappointments of this life in a better and more peaceful world than this. He acted well his part here, and his reward will be commensurate with his good deeds and his generous, kindly, helpful life on earth. We deeply realize our loss, and tenderly and reverently place on his tomb a garland of appreciative and tender remembrance.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, it has been an unbroken custom when one of the members of either branch of Congress has deceased to lay aside the intense work of official life to recall his virtues and to pay our tribute of respect to his memory. It is well to sometimes forget the intense everyday work of the life we live and turn our thoughts to the life beyond. Life and death are the most significant words in our language. We are often more deeply concerned about the life we live, the success we achieve while living, than we are about death, the life beyond the grave. Life and death and their issues are of such transcendent importance it is well to lay aside the affairs of state, where there is so much of strife and contention, that we may think upon not only what we are, but what we are to be when our work is finished here. We sit to-day in the presence of the voiceless mystery of death.

Hon. FRANK G. CLARKE, a member of the House of Representatives from the Second Congressional district of the State of New Hampshire, and a few days ago vigorous in life, radiant in hope, and strong in courage, has joined the silent army of the dead. He was at the time of his death in the meridian of his life. He died at the early age of 50, and was respected, honored, and loved by the people of his State. I can not speak of the distinguished dead from the standpoint of a close and intimate personal friendship. I, however, knew him as a member of Congress, and that he was recognized as an able, conscientious, industrious, and painstaking member.

He enjoyed to a high degree the respect and confidence of the people of his State, and had been honored by his own people. He had received honors at the hands of his own people to a degree which it is the privilege of few men to enjoy. He represented a progressive, intelligent, patriotic, liberty-loving constituency. In every way he demonstrated his fitness for the high position which he filled. He was faithful to his trust and his official life makes a record of which his State may well be proud. The deceased had been a member of both branches of the legislature of New Hampshire and enjoyed to a remarkable degree the esteem and confidence of his fellow members, and this fact is borne out by the history of his public services, for he was elevated to the position of speaker of the house of representatives during his second term as a member of that body and discharged the duties of that position with conspicuous ability and such impartiality as to give entire satisfaction to both political parties.

The history of the public life of the deceased points unerringly to the conclusion that he was a man of eminent ability, a useful legislator, and a wise and safe counselor. This was the estimate placed upon his character by the people of his own State. He served as a member of Governor Hale's staff with the rank of colonel in 1883, and in 1885 was elected a member of the house of representatives of his State. We are told by those who were familiar with his public life that he immediately forged to the front and won many laurels in the hotly contested debates of the year. In 1889 following he was again called into political prominence by an election to the State senate. Two years later he was again elected a member of the house of representatives of his State and was chosen speaker by a handsome majority in the Republican caucus. This was a high honor which few public men enjoy.

His public life, however, did not end with his service to his State. He was elected a member of Congress from the Second Congressional district of New Hampshire, and reelected in 1898, and his term of office would have expired March 4, 1901, and at the time of his last illness he was a prominent candidate for the high office of United States Senator. This field of eulogy, probably, belongs to the distinguished Senators from his own State, and I merely mention the public positions he held to show that he possessed the esteem and confidence of the people of New Hampshire, where he was born, lived, and died.

These facts, Mr. President, bear testimony that the deceased was no ordinary man. I know that no man can be honored by a State like New Hampshire with the positions of trust held by the deceased who is not deserving, able, and strong, and who has not earned in some way the confidence of the people whom he represents. We know that the best traditions and instincts of the Anglo-Saxon race long ago took deep root in New England. The people of New Hampshire have made for themselves a character for honesty and intelligence; and a certificate of election from the people of that great State is the highest evidence of the integrity, ability, and fidelity of their public officials.

He left behind him a character of inestimable value to his beloved wife and daughter and to the people of his State. He was regarded as a useful, intelligent, and painstaking legislator. As a private citizen his life was without reproach, and he was universally esteemed by those who knew him well as a member of Congress. To have won the political success which he achieved and to have enjoyed the confidence of the people among whom he lived as he did evidences the purity of his life.

A distinguished Senator, who knew him well and who enjoyed his close and intimate friendship, said to me that Mr. CLARKE was a lawyer of ability, faithful in the discharge of his duty to his clients, one in whose judgment they could trust implicitly; that he was a kind and affectionate father and devoted husband, a good neighbor, and a private citizen who met and discharged faithfully all the duties of good citizenship, and that he was a public official of the highest integrity, working unceasingly for the upbuilding of his country. He was loyal and devoted to the best interests of his own great State. What more can be said of the life of any man? He knew his duty and did it well. His work is ended, and, as the passing years move on, the influence he has left behind him will live to bless his memory. An exemplary life of strong integrity, of sterling honor, and of sincere devotion to the cause of justice, and marked with a high degree of interest in the welfare of others, properly and correctly sums up his life. Such a life needs no eulogy, and such a life marks the career of our departed friend.

Mr. President, has that life which so impresses itself upon others ended? We are taught that no man lives for himself and that no true man lives entirely in himself but also lives in the lives of others with whom he associates and upon whom he impresses his own character. Faith and reason convinces us that such a life is not ended. We hope, we believe, and in the light of revelation we feel, we know that the mortal life which was so developed and rounded out here has now begun its period of immortal development and growth.

The able lawyer, the faithful, practical, efficient legislator, the modest, unassuming, dignified private citizen has preceded us across the river, but he has left a monument builded by himself—the spotless record of a pure, dignified, useful public and private life.

Mr. HEITFELD. Mr. President, my acquaintance with Hon. FRANK G. CLARKE dates back to the extra session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. We first met as members of the funeral party which accompanied the remains of the late Isham G. Harris to their last resting place at Memphis, Tenn.

Who would have thought at that time that after only three years we would be called upon to visit the old Granite State on a like sad mission, and that FRANK CLARKE would be the one we were to mourn?

Mr. CLARKE was a quiet and unassuming man, sincere and honest in all his dealings with his associates. Others may have attained greater reputations and greater fame, but there are few who have left behind a better and a purer name. He was faithful and true to his position, ever looking after the interests of his constituency and his State, always at his post of duty, never tiring when it came to serving those who had honored him with the high office he held.

In the modest biographical sketch inserted in the Congressional Directory we find that he had served his native State in various official positions, and the positions he was honored with are evidence of the confidence his fellow-citizens had in him.

Mr. President, the esteem in which a man is held at his own home is generally a criterion of his true worth, and while paying the last, sad tribute to our friend I observed that his friends and neighbors fully realized what a loss the death of their Representative was to them. After the services at the quaint old church in his home town a great many of the residents took a last parting glance at his remains. There were men and women of all classes, from every station in life, and their faces expressed the sadness that was in their hearts. Truly the old proverb "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country" had no application in this case, especially when we take into consideration the fact that he lived and died within a very short distance from where he was born.

Mr. President, our departed friend did not live man's appointed time. The time given him fell far short of the allotted three score and ten years. He was cut off in the midst of his usefulness, but those who remain have the satisfaction to know that the time which was given him was used to good purpose and that the world is better for his having lived in it.

Mr. President, we laid him among the rugged, snow-covered hills of old New Hampshire. He sleeps surrounded by the stately pines and firs of that picturesque old State. He is gone, but with those who knew him best his memory will live for years to come.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, among the granite hills of New Hampshire the late Representative CLARKE was born September 10, 1850. He died January 9, 1901. He is said to have been a self-made man, though little is here known of his early career. His education was received at the schools in Wilton, his native town, and he was afterwards graduated from Dartmouth College, where he was held in high esteem by his classmates and college associates. He was admitted to the bar in 1876, and by his ability, high character, and great energy became a leader in his profession.

The people of his section showed their regard for him by repeatedly sending him to the house of representatives of his State and afterwards to the State senate. While a member of the State house of representatives that body showed its appreciation of his ability by electing him speaker, and he presided over its three hundred and fifty-odd members with impartiality, ability, and promptness, demonstrating his fitness for the discharge of the duties of the position the people of his district had intrusted to him.

He was elected to Congress in 1896, and served with ability in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was again elected to serve in the Fifty-sixth. Such is a brief outline of the life of the late Representative FRANK G. CLARKE, to whose memory we, in connection with his colleagues in the House and the people of New Hampshire, to-day pay tribute.

As one of the thirteen original States, New Hampshire was the ninth to adopt the Constitution. She came into this Union intending to stay and to develop this nation and make the Union what it is to-day. When necessity arose, it was a son of New Hampshire, Daniel Webster, the great expounder and defender of the Constitution, who made it possible for the Union to survive.

Among her other distinguished sons I recall to mind Franklin Pierce, Levi Woodbury, and John P. Hale. Perhaps some of them, like the great Webster, were inclined in their course to yield and to compromise on the then great subject before the country; but every year that a conflict was put off the union of the States was being more thoroughly knit together, and so, if they were wrong then, we think them right now.

New Hampshire has been fortunate in her distinguished sons as representatives in the Senate and House in former years, and none the less fortunate to-day. May she in the future occupy the same position that she has held in the past.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I think it is a happy custom, a sad one, and yet a suggestive one, that both Houses of Congress lay aside public duties for a brief hour when one of their number has died, for the purpose of paying tribute to his memory.

The rewards of public life are very evanescent; the applause for those who are active in it is very rare, but it is a gratification that there will be placed in the minutes of the two Houses a record of the public service of the departed member, and in the printed proceedings of the two Houses the tributes to his memory by his associates.

There is another and deeper significance to these ceremonials which is of special moment to those of us who are in active life, and especially in public life, and that is the uncertainty of our career.

We are here to-day; we are gone to-morrow. The milestones which we pass to-day are behind us. Therefore we learn the lesson of the folly of not gathering by the way as we go along all that there is of infinite variety which is offered to every man in the course of his career. I deem that man to have led a foolish life who has not gone out of his own occupation in which he is engaged to enlarge his understanding and to broaden his horizon. We see constantly around us men who might contribute much to the pleasure and instruction of their fellow-men who do nothing toward either.

The career of our departed friend is an illustration of the best view of American life, from the fact that he did have the courage to break away from his profession and enter the public service, to enlarge and broaden his vision, and to be something more than the mere accumulator of this world's goods. I have found in my experience that the one question which is constantly coming through the mails and in the press is how to succeed. It seems to press more urgently at present than at any period in our history; but what is success is a broader and a more interesting question. We measure the standards of success by the ideals of any period. Find out what may be the ideals of a people or a country, and then you can judge with reasonable accuracy whether that country is to advance or retrograde.

We look over our own history and find that the ideals have changed several times since the day when George Washington was inaugurated President of the United States. For his generation the ideals before the youth were Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton, Adams, and their compatriots. It was a high standard of public duty, to which everything else must be surrendered. We come to the next period, and then the ideals were Webster, Clay, and Calhoun; to be distinguished in the profession of the law, and then to win equal distinction in Congress, in the Cabinet, with the ultimate aim of the Presidency. We come down to the period of the civil war, and then the ideal of the country, whether on the Union or on the Confederate side, was to risk life in the charge, in the imminent deadly breach, or at the cannon's mouth, in order that there might be won the stars which signify the reward of a grateful country.

After the civil war our industrial development has been so rapid and fortunes have accumulated so fast that the ideals of to-day seem to be purely material. Anywhere in the press, in our travels, in the social circle, we do not find that there is admiration for great achievements in statesmanship or in letters or in arms, but almost worship for those masters of the industrial problems of the day who have solved them for the accumulation of fortunes for themselves beyond the dreams of avarice and incomes beyond the revenues of kingdoms and republics.

I deem it unfortunate that the country should in its schools and colleges have abandoned its old ideals and surrendered to these sordid propositions. We respect the masterful men who can create great enterprises and in them accumulate fortunes. It is a duty to secure independence and make provision for our families. But I trust that there may be a turn in the public sentiment, so that our youth will look upon those who have won distinction by their brains and their contribution to the information and the happiness of mankind as having contributed the larger measure to the best interests of their country.

Environment goes a great way in the make-up of a public man or a man in private station. I believe in the influence of heredity, not only of ancestry, but of the great examples in the lives of the distinguished citizens of ones State and country. We see what this accomplishes illustrated in the fact that in New England there is still a high ideal of public life. There the rewards of public life are coveted by her sons regardless of the sacrifice of material interests. We recognize that the New England Representatives are trained and able, and inspired by a long line of statesmen, and have a power in the councils of our Government wholly disproportionate to the territory from which they come. With only about one-fifteenth of the population of the United States, New England is to be reckoned with in every measure which passes either House and in every policy which is to be adopted by any party.

It was the good fortune of the member to whose memory we to-day pay tribute that he lived in New England and that he was a product of the Puritanism of New Hampshire. The Puritanism of New Hampshire has been little invaded in modern times except in the broadening and the liberalization which puts it abreast with the spirit of the age without losing anything of the force, the energy, and the purity which made the Puritan Commonwealth and from it so much of the Republic in which we live to-day. The impress of Dartmouth College and its traditions, the impress of the inviolability of charters against the encroachment upon vested rights which came in the Dartmouth College case, the inheritance of Daniel Webster, of Jeremiah Mason, of Levi Woodbury have been felt in every school in New Hampshire and by every man in the public and private life of the Commonwealth.

I remember as if it was yesterday one of the first impressions which I received of what a grand idea uttered by a great man can be in the possibility of its moving a nation to wonderful deeds. It was a speech upon the anti-slavery side of that question from a statesman of New Hampshire, a great advocate of liberty and a strong factor in the results in which we all rejoice, Senator John P. Hale.

Now, Mr. President, we have in that life which has passed away a proof of what can be accomplished by grasping opportunities for the enjoyment of this world. This is a bright, beautiful, happy world in which we live. It is full of pleasures of every kind and of the best kind. Its accidents and its misfortunes are simply incentives to energy, to activity, and to achievement.

To have been born in a little village in a mountain State, to have educated one's self in liberal learning and acquired a profession, and then to have won distinction in it, and then, in this day when we are grasping at materialism as the only element of success, to have had the courage to accept the call of his fellow-citizens to serve them in the legislature and in Congress, shows just that quality of mind and just that result of heredity which makes a great man, a good citizen, and a valuable contribution to the best side of American life.

Mr. CLARKE whose career is commemorated here to-day and whose many virtues have been stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and will be stated again by the other Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] seems to me to have made what we all wish to leave behind us, the record of a good citizen, father, and husband, the record of a wise and an able legislator, of a man who in every sphere in which he was did his best for his State, his country, and his kind, a record of which his family, State, and country may well be proud.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I have no set words in which to express my thoughts on this occasion. I knew the deceased member of the House but slightly, and my greater knowledge of his character comes to me from what I know of his public career.

Mr. CLARKE was a New Englander, born of New England parentage, inheriting the New England characteristics. It has been said that New England is rock bound, that it is a land of mountains, that its reluctant soil yielded to the early pioneers but scant livelihood. Yet, Mr. President, New England has furnished one product that has done much to make this country what it is to-day. It has given to the nation character of the first quality and of the highest type.

Ever since the Puritans landed on the shores of the New World and set up the standard of religious tolerance on this side the sea the New England character has been foremost in everything that tends to the progress and civilization and advancement of the people of the United States. Their orators, their soldiers, their statesmen, their preachers, have all done and said much to elevate and strengthen and secure the highest standard of American excellence. Their sons, born in the shadow of the eternal hills, have gone out into every settlement and every hamlet of the country, and have in a large measure became leaders of men, molders of public affairs. To-day in the Congress and Senate of the United States the New England representation is not alone from New Hampshire, or Vermont, or Maine, or Massachusetts, or Rhode Island, or Connecticut, but there are more New England born men representing other States in the two branches of Congress than there are from east of the Hudson River.

Mr. President, Mr. FRANK G. CLARKE grew up in his boyhood home. His life from the beginning to the end was witnessed by his neighbors. A man who grows up among those who have known him from childhood to distinction, yea, to greatness, to political preferment, to popular indorsement, must be a good man. Some men in the turmoil incident to a newer civilization may succeed in public affairs, not on their merits, but by various efforts and processes not altogether creditable; but no man can grow up in New England in the place of his birth, with his daily life open to the eyes of his youthful associates, of his friends and neighbors, and acquire great distinction without being a good man.

So the deceased was a good man, as his record testifies; a good husband, a good father, a good neighbor, a good citizen, a good representative of his people. He must have been a man of great natural ability to have succeeded as he did in this New England community and this New England State.

The New England people are all able; they are all educated; they have a high standard of excellence. No man grows in public esteem unless he possesses far more than the ordinary amount of natural ability.

Mr. CLARKE succeeded as a lawyer. He succeeded among environments which made it necessary for success that he should devote himself to his chosen profession. A lawyer to win distinction at the bar amid such surroundings must be a student; he must be in earnest. He must make constant effort. He must be the careful adviser and the skillful advocate, for in a rural community there is not the division of practice in the several branches of the law that we find in the great cities of the country, where our professional brethren become specialists.

He must have been an able man, for early in life he came to represent his people in the legislature of his State. He came to be speaker of the house of representatives, a great body of men, between three and four hundred in number, drawn from the people of the whole State. A house of that character could not select for its presiding officer an unworthy or a weak man. In smaller legislative bodies political combinations might prevail, but in an assemblage of that kind it must be true that Mr. CLARKE was selected speaker because of his peculiar ability for the position. So when he was elected by the people of his State to represent them in the National Congress it must have been because of his high qualifications, because of his ability to clearly present and secure consideration for the important interests of his State and of New England.

How powerful New England has been in the Congress of the United States! She has been powerful in every avenue of American development, but most powerful of all in the Congress of the United States; and it must be because of two things. The New England people select men on their merits to represent them in Congress. They are chosen for their ability and honesty and integrity and patriotism and popular qualities. And when New England once places a man in Congress or the Senate of the United States she does not make it necessary for him to devote a large part of his time and energy to secure a renomination or reelection. His tenure of office under the customs and usages of New England has been made to a reasonable extent secure, and the people he represents see to it that he is not disturbed or put aside as long as he serves them faithfully.

Mr. President, I am of the New England people, and I love that section of the country. I have seen how strong the New England influence has been in the settlement of the great West. I have noticed how powerful have been the efforts, how successful the work of the New England pioneers who have gone into the West and have pushed backward the barrier of the wilderness and made way for the civilization and development of our country.

New England is to-day what she always was. She represents the best thought, the highest purpose, the most patriotic endeavor of the American people. The man whose memory we mourn was one of her chosen representatives, bearing her certificate of greatness, devoting himself to her interests, holding her confidence, and to-day he is mourned by all those whom he represented in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I do not mourn in the presence of death. When I stand by an open grave, I do not look down, but up. I do not give myself over to sad memories, but to glorious hopes. For after all, this life is but the beginning of the infinite life beyond. The human soul has protested since the beginning of time against the idea of a finite existence. God wrote in a legible hand upon the tablets of human consciousness the assurance of eternal life. So I do not mourn for him who is dead. His family will miss him and mourn him. His State will miss him and mourn him. The body in which he occupied so distinguished a place will miss him and mourn him.

But, Mr. President, his work is but just begun. He has been thus suddenly summoned from his sphere of usefulness for some wise purpose. We do not understand, but we believe—

> God keeps a niche in heaven for our idols,
> And though He break them to our sight
> And deny that our soft kisses shall impair their white,
> Yet I know that we shall see them again,
> The dust swept from their faces, glorified,
> Singing in the great God-light.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, in the southwest portion of New Hampshire, on the Massachusetts border, stands the solitary mountain Monadnock. Its summit is barren granite rock, but its lower sides are encompassed by balmy forests and verdant fields, by attractive rural villages, and by charming summer residences. From its base flows the river Contoocook, which runs north and east until it reaches the Merrimac near Penacook, in Concord, at the spot were lies the island renowned by the fierce vengeance and heroic escape from the Indians of Hannah Dustin.

Near the sources of the Contoocook is the thriving manufacturing town of Peterboro, where our late associate, Representative FRANK G. CLARKE, made his home, and not far away is the prosperous town of Wilton, where he was born on September 10, 1850. He lived, he died. Behold the sum. His life was not a strange, eventful history, yet it was the complete life of a New England gentleman. Educated in his own State, at the noted Meriden Academy and our beloved Dartmouth College, he entered upon his law studies well grounded in the essentials of general learning. His career was principally that of a lawyer, and the pursuit of his chosen avocation required great acuteness of mind, constant devotion, and strenuous labor.

New Hampshire has never adopted a code of laws, and its legal proceedings are governed by the principles of the common law as modified by a few carefully drawn statutes and by the occasional edicts of adventurous judges. Mr. CLARKE stood high in his profession, and leaves a record as a lawyer and advocate with which those who knew him and loved him may well be more than satisfied. Necessarily, all such lawyers in our State take some part in local government. Mr. CLARKE served in the house of representatives in 1885, in the State senate in 1889, and was again a member of the house in 1891 and became its speaker. It is no light honor to be called upon to preside over a New Hampshire house. Its members have always numbered between three and four hundred, and impartiality combined with graciousness, firmness manifested with tact, are qualities necessary to success as speaker, and these traits Mr. CLARKE showed in ample measure.

In 1897 he came to Congress, was reelected for a second term, that of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and died at Peterboro on January 9, 1901. Those of us who were called to attend his funeral aided in laying him to sleep surrounded by the midwinter snows of his earthly home and returned to our duties in this Capitol with kind thoughts and tender words concerning our comrade whom we had known and loved and for a time had lost.

It is now my privilege, having known Mr. CLARKE during his whole life, to speak of his character truthfully and without exaggeration of his merits, because of my sweet memories of our personal relations. He had superior intellectual powers, and was a master of his profession of the law. He was a rhetorician of no inferior rank, and as an orator was instructive, argumentative, humorous, and pathetic by turns, with a pleasing voice and clear and attractive utterance. On special occasions and at political meetings he demonstrated his ability and influence as an orator whom his State will place in the front rank of her eloquent speakers of the present generation.

But I love best to think of him as a friend of genial and gentle manners. To his wife and daughter, to his brethren of the bar, to his Masonic associates, to his political comrades, to the Senators and Representatives who knew him, he was ever cheerful, courteous, and kind. No one ever disliked to see him approach; everyone instantly rejoiced to see him coming; and there can be no truer test than this of the affection which is borne toward an acquaintance. His death brought to me a great and subduing shock. His tendency to the ailment of which he died had never been known to me. He was a candidate for United States Senator, with a support sufficient to make him hopeful, and he looked forward with interest and inspiration to the canvass before the legislature.

During the first week he could not come to Concord, but he did not doubt that he should be there on the second week, before the nomination, which was to take place on January 10. I received a letter from him dated January 3 saying he should come and join in the friendly contest with high hope and confident expectation. But on Sunday, the 6th, his doctors forbade him to move, and he wrote a letter of withdrawal on the 7th. It seems that only a determined mind had sustained him so long against the failing powers of his body. He died on the 9th; and on the 12th we, his friends, saddened and softened by this startling illustration of the fact that always in the midst of life we are in death, all of us—including the victor and all the vanquished in the worldly contest—bowed sorrowfully over his mortal frame as it was carried to its resting place.

Mr. President, these oft-recurring ceremonies in the Senate, which are tributes to the memories of our departed comrades in both Houses, make deep impression upon me.

Coming here in December, 1887, there entered with me only 5 new Senators. Fourteen years later, when I go out on the 4th of March, 1901, there will be left but 16 Senators who have been here longer than myself. Retirement and death have done their work, and the new men are here to control the action of the Senate according to their judgment and will.

It is with me an interesting question what should be the age for retirement from active participation in the affairs of government. Mr. Lecky, in The Map of Life, expresses very decided views. "In the case of men who have played a great part in public affairs, the best work is nearly always done before old age. It is a remarkable fact that although a senate, by its very derivation, means an assembly of old men, and although in the Senate of Rome, which was the greatest of all, the members sat for life, there was a special law providing that no Senator, after 60, should be summoned to attend his duty." This fact is asserted by Mr. Lecky on the authority of Seneca, de Brevitate Vitae, cap. 20. A search for the original authority leads to the conclusion that the limitation of age mentioned by Seneca was not 60, but 65.

Mr. Lecky proceeds: "In the past centuries active septuagenarian statesmen were very rare, and in parliamentary life almost unknown. In our century there have been brilliant exceptions, but in most cases it will be found that the true glory of these statesmen rests on what they had done before old age, and sometimes the undue prolongation of their active lives has been a grave misfortune, not only to their own reputations, but also to the nations they influenced. Often, indeed, while faculties diminish, self-confidence, even in good men, increases.

"Moral and intellectual failings that had been formerly repressed take root and spread, and it is no small blessing that they have but a short time to run their course. In the case of men of great capacities the follies of age are perhaps even more to be feared than the follies of youth. When men have made a great reputation and acquired a great authority, when they become the objects of the flattery of nations, and when they can, with little trouble or thought or study, attract universal attention, a new set of temptations begins. Their heads are apt to be turned. The feeling of responsibility grows weaker; the old judgment, caution, deliberation, self-restraint, and timidity disappear.

"Obstinacy and prejudice strengthen, while at the same time the force of the reasoning will diminishes. Sometimes, through a failing that is partly intellectual, but partly also moral, they almost wholly lose the power of realizing or recognizing new conditions, discoveries, and necessities. They view with jealousy the rise of new reputations and of younger men, and the well-earned authority of an old man becomes the most formidable obstacle to improvement. In the field of politics, in the field of science, and in the field of military organization these truths might be abundantly illustrated. In the case of great but maleficent genius the shortness of life is a priceless blessing. Few greater curses could be imagined for the human race than the prolongation for centuries of the life of Napoleon."

Mr. Lecky reenforces his argument thus: "We are here, however, dealing with great labors and with men who are filling a great place in the world's strife. The decay of faculty and will that impairs power in these cases is often perceptible long before there is any real decay in the powers that are needed for ordinary business or for the full enjoyment of life. But the time comes when children have grown into maturity and when it becomes desirable that a younger generation should take the government of the world, should inherit its wealth, its power, its dignities, its many means of influence and enjoyment; and this can not be fully done till the older generation is laid to rest."

Yet his sketch is not one of old age, wholly gloomy. He says: "Often, indeed, old age, when it is free from grave infirmities and from great trials and privations, is the most honored, the most tranquil, and perhaps on the whole the happiest period of life. The struggles, passions, and ambitions of other days have passed. The mellowing touch of time has allayed animosities, subdued old asperities of character, given a larger and more tolerant judgment, cured the morbid sensitiveness that most embitters life. The old man's mind is stored with the memories of a well-filled and honorable life.

"In the long leisures that now fall to his lot he is often enabled to resume projects which in a crowded professional life he had been obliged to adjourn. He finds, as Adam Smith has said, that one of the greatest pleasures in life is reverting in old age to the studies of youth, and he himself often feels something of the thrill of a second youth in his sympathy with the children who are around him. It is the St. Martin's summer, lighting with a pale but beautiful gleam the brief November day." Again, however, he recurs to his saddening picture: "But the time must come when all the alternatives of life are sad, and the least sad is a speedy and painless end. When the eye has ceased to see and the ear to hear, when the mind has failed, and all the friends of youth are gone, and the old man's life becomes a burden, not only to himself, but to those about him, it is far better that he should quit the scene. If a natural clinging to life or a natural shrinking from death prevents him from clearly realizing this, it is at least fully seen by all others."

Nor, indeed, does this love of life, in most cases of extreme old age, greatly persist. Few things are sadder than to see the young, or those in mature life, seeking, according to the current phrase, to find means of "killing time." But in extreme old age, when the power of work, the power of reading, the pleasures of society, have gone, this phrase acquires a new significance. As Madame de Staël has beautifully said, "On déposé fleur à fleur la couronne de la vie." An apathy steals over every faculty, and rest, unbroken rest, becomes the chief desire. I remember a touching epitaph in a German churchyard: "I will arise, O Christ, when Thou callest me; but oh! let me rest a while, for I am very weary."

Mr. President, here again is repeated the idea of rest in the grave. While it is true that this idea of rest is the prevailing one when sad and weary mortals meditate concerning the future state, yet reason teaches us that if we are immortal we are, after resting awhile, to be called to new activities and we are to arise when called. Alternate rest and movement are the rule for us in this life: rest alone will not be the rule of the next.

The true and complete idea is that after rest will come renewed labor and service. We shall be laborers in our new homes among the stars. If it is not to be so, life is a mockery and all the experiences of life are useless. Existence is given for the formation of character with which to engage in the activities of the coming hereafter; and the only encouragement for good thoughts, good words, and good deeds in this world comes from the conviction that they fit us for active happiness in the world to come.

These are obvious conclusions, but worthy of reiteration and acceptation. For the encouragement of those, whether young or old, who are truly striving for excellence of soul against the adverse influences of this imperfect world, let me read some assertions by high authority that such exertions become happily visible in the outward forms which the spirit temporarily inhabits in this probationary state.

Ralph Waldo Emerson says: "There is no beautifier of complexion or form or behavior like the wish to scatter joy and not pain around us."

John Ruskin wrote: "It is not in words explicable with what divine lines and lights the exercise of godliness and charity will mold and gild the hardest and coldest countenance, neither to what darkness their departure will consign the loveliest. For there is not any virtue the exercise of which, even momentarily, will not impress a new fairness upon the features, neither on them only, but on the whole body the moral and intellectual faculties have operation, for all the movements and gestures, however slight, are different in their modes according to the mind that governs them, and on the gentleness and decision of right feeling follows grace of actions, and, through continuance of this, grace of form."

James Lane Allen, in The Choir Invisible, says of his heroine: "Her beauty had never faded. Nature had fought hard in her for all things, having prepared her for all things, and to the last youth of her womanhood it burned like an autumn rose, which some morning we may have found on the lawn under a dew that is turning to ice. But when youth was gone, in the following years her face began to reflect the freshness of Easter lilies. For prayer will in time make the human countenance its own divinest altar; years upon years of true thoughts, like ceaseless music shut up within, will vibrate along the nerves of expression until the lines of the living instrument are drawn into correspondence, and the harmony of visible form matches the unheard harmonies of the mind. It was about this time also that there fell upon her hair the earliest rays of that light which is the dawn of the eternal morning."

These may be fancies, but they give us happiness and hope, and they induce us to strive that men may take knowledge of us that we are not wholly of the earth earthy, but are resolutely setting our faces heavenward, ready, first, for the rest, and next for the labors of that world which eye has not yet seen and of which we have but a faint conception, but concerning the glories of which we love to think. Two eloquent writers, in words somewhat alike, picture our future home as beginning with the waves of a heavenly ocean.

Read Mr. Blaine's closing words in memory of President Garfield: "As the end drew near, his early craving for the sea returned. The stately mansion of power had been to him the wearisome hospital of pain, and he begged to be taken from its prison walls, from its oppressive, stifling air, from its homelessness and its hopelessness. Gently, silently, the love of a great people bore the pale sufferer to the longed for healing of the sea, to live or to die, as God should will, within sight of its heaving billows, within sound of its manifold voices.

"With wan, fevered face tenderly lifted to the cooling breeze, he looked out wistfully upon the ocean's changing wonders; on its far sails, whitening in the morning light; on its restless waves, rolling shoreward to break and die beneath the noonday sun; on the red clouds of evening, arching low to the horizon; on the serene and shining pathway of the stars. Let us think that his dying eyes read a mystic meaning which only the rapt and parting soul may know. Let us believe that in the silence of the receding world he heard the great waves breaking on a farther shore, and felt already upon his wasted brow the breath of the eternal morning."

Stopford Brooke sings these notes of heavenly triumph: "When all is over here and the noise and strife of the earthly battle fades upon your dying ear, and you hear instead thereof the deep and musical sound of the ocean of eternity, and see the lights of heaven shining on its waters, still and fair in their radiant rest, your faith will raise the song of conquest."

That conquest will be of immortal life, whether we float upon the waves or linger upon the shores of an eternal ocean, or wander by the streams or climb the slopes in the valleys of delectable mountains, or walk the streets of the golden city—the New Jerusalem—and dwell in the house of many mansions prepared for us by the Saviour of all the souls of men.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13865) relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ACCOUNTS OF OFFICIALS IN ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 14th instant, a copy of all accounts presented to the Department of Justice by officials of the second judicial division of the district of Alaska during the present fiscal year, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) providing for the publication of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 259) to regulate the distribution of public documents to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange.

The message also announced that the House had passed with an amendment the bill (S. 3205) for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3491) granting a pension to Melvina Greenawalt, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

AUTOMATIC CAR COUPLERS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution, which I desire to have read and lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from further consideration of H. R. 10302, an act to amend an act to promote the safety of employees, etc., by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, etc., approved March 2, 1893, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of said bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that, if I am not greatly mistaken, the bill referred to in the resolution was reported favorably by the committee some time ago.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; but it was recommitted yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered against the United States by the circuit and district courts of the United States under the provisions of the act to provide for bringing suits against the Government of the United States, approved March 3, 1887, not heretofore reported to Congress.

LIST OF CLAIMS ALLOWED.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund, under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those heretofore reported to Congress at the present session; also a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress.

GEORGE WEISEL.

On motion of Mr. KYLE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relating to the application of George Weisel for the correction of his military record, there being no adverse report.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) providing for the publication of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 259) to regulate the distribution of public documents to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] offered an amendment to the pending bill, and asked that it be printed. The Chair understood the chairman of the committee to say that he modified the amendment before the Senate by accepting that amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I so understood it, Mr. President. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, to announce that he accepted the amendment offered by his colleague [Mr. HOAR].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that modification of the amendment will be made to perfect it; and the pending question will be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let that be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, at the end of line 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no judgment, order, nor act by any of said officials so appointed shall conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, I came in a moment late, and I desire to ask what has been done with the amendment I proposed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator having the bill in charge accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and perfected his amendment by so doing.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. Is the amendment now accepted a part of the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a part of the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be kind enough, if I may ask the indulgence of the Senate so far, to have the amendment read as accepted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as amended.

Mr. HOAR. I do not desire to have the whole amendment read, but only the part added.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part of the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. SPOONER the following has been added:

Provided, That no sale or lease or other disposition of the public lands or the timber thereon or the mining rights therein shall be made: And provided further, That no franchise shall be granted which is not approved by the President of the United States and is not in his judgment clearly necessary for the immediate government of the islands and indispensable for the interest of the people thereof, and which can not, without great public mischief, be postponed until the establishment of permanent civil government; and all such franchises shall terminate one year after the establishment of such permanent civil government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will be read.

Mr. ALLEN. What does the amendment which has just been read amend, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It amends what is known as the Philippine amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the whole thing be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. As it will stand with this amendment added.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole paragraph will be read, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, beginning with line 3, as amended, the amendment reads:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion: Provided, That all franchises granted under the authority hereof shall contain a reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal the same.

Until a permanent government shall have been established in said archipelago, full reports shall be made to Congress, on or before the first day of each regular session, of all legislative acts and proceedings of the temporary government instituted under the provisions hereof, and full reports of the acts and doings of said government and as to the condition of the archipelago and its people shall be made to the President, including all information which may be useful to the Congress in providing for a more permanent government: Provided, That no sale or lease or other disposition of the public lands or the timber thereon or the mining rights therein shall be made: And provided further, That no franchise shall be granted which is not approved by the President of the United States, and is not in his judgment clearly necessary for the immediate government of the islands and indispensable for the interest of the people thereof, and which can not, without great public mischief, be postponed until the establishment of permanent civil government; and all such franchises shall terminate one year after the establishment of such permanent civil government.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I shall not offer an amendment to this bill against the wishes of the committee having it in charge, but there is a subject connected with the government of newly acquired provinces or territories which ought to be deliberately weighed.

An honest judiciary, where men can have their rights maintained, is of the first importance. I speak with over fifty years of experience and observation in new countries, where conditions existed similar to those which must exist in the Philippines.

In California everything was easy except the settlement of land titles. After thirty years of expense and trouble and riot and corruption and bribery and scandal, 8,000,000 acres were confirmed. There was not an adequate judiciary to dispose of the cases to the satisfaction of the people there and to keep order and preserve peace.

In the Territories, where large mining interests exist, the judicial system was an absolute failure. First came the Comstock, out of which $600,000,000 have been produced. The whole of that title was litigated before judges who were sent from the East with salaries of $3,000, to live with their families, where the expenses were at least $10,000; and of course they failed. Scandals grew up; exposures were made; resignations were forced; and particularly was this the case preceding the admission of Nevada into the Union. The reason why the people of the Territory of Nevada consented that it should become a State was that the territorial court was in such a condition and the exposures were of such a character that the whole court was compelled to resign in a single day. The same things occurred, only in a less degree, in the State of Colorado, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who has had some of these experiences, can speak for himself.

In Cape Nome to-day we have the same thing, and I have the documents here to prove it. There is a worse condition of things there than ever occurred in the Philippines or Cuba under Spanish rule, and those things are now occurring in Cape Nome for the want of a proper judiciary.

Mr. SHOUP. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STEWART. No; I will not yield now. I want to get through with my remarks.

I say if you go to Cape Nome you will find that a worse condition exists there than ever existed in any country under Spanish rule, and it is for the want of taking into account the necessity of an honest and able judiciary that such is the case.

In the Philippines there are vast property interests. Under Spanish rule titles were seldom perfected. There was always something left open for litigation. Everything was litigated in California; so it was in Texas; so it was in Louisiana; and so it was in Florida.

It is well known that when we take possession of a Spanish country everything has to be litigated. So far as the Philippines are concerned, I would have less litigation. I would try to buy out the friar and other mythical titles; I would quiet titles in that way if it can be done, and then dispose of the land to bona fide purchasers; but I shall not discuss that now.

The first thing to be established there ought to be a judiciary. I am satisfied that it is impossible to appoint the members of that judiciary here, with such salaries as we pay, to go into one of these new countries and discharge the obligations required by the office. Many men have gone to such countries with high aspirations to do right, but they have generally failed. The conditions were such that they were not able to acquit themselves satisfactorily.

I had prepared an amendment which I intended to offer, but I do not wish to embarrass this bill and will not offer it. I will, however, ask to have it read, merely as a suggestion as to the organization of a judiciary for the Philippines. I ask the Secretary to read what I send to the desk as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That there shall be a supreme court for the Philippine Islands, consisting of five judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold their offices for life, unless sooner removed by the President, with such salaries as the President may find it necessary to secure the services of competent persons, not exceeding $20,000 per annum for each of the associate justices and $25,000 for the person who shall be named for chief justice. Such court shall have appellate jurisdiction of all matters at law and in equity where the amount in controversy exceeds $500, and shall have power to make rules and regulations for the transaction of business in all inferior courts and tribunals in the islands, and for the taking of appeals and writs of error from inferior courts to said supreme court; and the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of appeals and writs of error from the supreme court of said islands of all questions involving the validity of any law of Congress or construction of the Constitution of the United States, and of all other matters where the value of the property in controversy exceeds $20,000. Said supreme court of said islands shall also have power to appoint all judicial officers, marshals, and prosecuting attorneys in the islands, and to remove the same at pleasure. The judicial system hereby authorized shall extend to all districts and places in said islands where peace exists and the orders of the courts can be enforced without resort to military power.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, that is a suggestion. I believe if we had such a court in the Philippines, composed of five men, with salaries sufficient to secure the best talent in this country, salaries sufficient to take them from the supreme benches of the States, men of great experience, men who could be relied on to appoint the inferior judges and marshals—if we could have such a court as that, the problem might be worked out. A court of that character would have immediate supervision of the inferior courts. The judges of the inferior courts would not have large salaries. They would be mostly natives.

But to the judges of the supreme court we should offer such a salary as would tempt such a man as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], for instance, to accept the position and secure his services. That is the kind of men I want. I want to be sure that we are going to secure men equal to him. It would satisfy me very well if we could have that. We do not want such a man as a speculator might put in his pocket and carry out there. I do not think the Senator from Nebraska would fit in such a position, for he is too large, and I do not think he would consent to it. I have seen that too often in the fifty years of my experience; and the troubles that it brings are immeasurable.

If you appoint judges to go to these far-off islands and you have to wait until we try them and bring them back here to get them removed, the amount of harm that you and we might do in the meantime would be incalculable; but if an appellate court on the ground were to appoint the judges of the inferior courts, they would be better acquainted with the qualifications of the men, and if they proved to be unsatisfactory or corrupt, the court could remove them immediately. They could also reform many Spanish methods.

I say with regret that I have not the highest respect for the justice of Spanish methods. It is true they are not as bad as some of our methods have been; but they are bad enough. They have more uncertainty in the administration of justice than we have in some of our Territorial courts, where great interests are involved. There is some irregularity about it; but that the Spanish system is based upon our ideas of justice is untrue. It is not. Some of the Spanish-American countries, however, are working up to it. President Diaz is getting Mexico up to it. He is educating the judges in Mexico up to the idea of deciding cases on their merits. He is a wonderful man; in many respects the most wonderful who has ever been on this hemisphere, and he has done great things for Mexico.

In the Philippines you will find the judges demoralized. You must have native judges, and if you appoint them from here and wait for a report of their unfitness before removing them, everything will be in confusion and the people there will run the gamut of fraud, oppression, anarchy, discord, and riots. If you could but establish justice in the Philippines and let the natives understand that they will have a fair trial of their rights, every good man in the whole archipelago would soon become a friend of the United States.

I am not going to insist that the amendment I have offered be adopted, but I want to make this suggestion, and I want to put myself on record as making a suggestion for a way out of the trouble which seems to me inevitable.

The matter of appointing governors and other officers for Territories, and all that, is a matter about which the Administration can not go far wrong. The governors will be good enough, but the trouble will be to get a court of justice to decide honestly. I have seen that occur too often under our system of appointing judicial officers.

Gentlemen in the best of faith will recommend a lawyer who has not been tried, but is a respectable gentleman, who has never been greatly tempted; a gentleman whom his neighbors recommend as an honest man; and Senators and Members will sign his recommendation, and the President, without knowing anything to the contrary, relying on what they say, will appoint him, when at the same time he may have made an arrangement with some speculator to go out there and make a raid upon the people over whose courts he is to preside. That often happens. Then when you come to bring this man to justice his friends say he has borne a good reputation and you must give him a hearing. While you are giving him a hearing the property of the people is being confiscated. They have rights. They can not wait for a hearing when you have got a bad judge, and the only way is to have a supervision over him in the shape of a superior court present on the ground.

You have got to use native judges in the Philippines. There are 10,000,000 people and a great deal of property there. You will have to give them a judicial system, and you will have to use it; you must have alcaldes and local judges and other officials. If you have nobody to supervise them they will go wrong and you will have great scandals.

We have undertaken to protect life and property and do justice in the Philippines, and we must take the necessary measures to accomplish that object. I know that it may seem to some Senators that a salary of $20,000 or $25,000 is large; but it is not too large for this service when you consider the sacrifices that a man would have to make to go to those island possessions. You will have to take them off the supreme benches of the States—you will have to take the best talent in the country.

You do not need to pay all the judges large salaries. You will have many native judges there whose salaries will be low. The ordinary judges there will be the natives, and it will be cheaper to have them. Men from this country do not understand the native language. They do not understand the great mass of the people. A judge going there under the ordinary arrangements is lost at once.

We must have somebody in those islands who will appoint those judges and see that justice is done. I understand that the Philippine Commission is doing that, but the commission can appoint judges only during the military possession, and the commission can not appoint permanent judges, because it only lasts during the military occupation. You can, however, appoint a supreme court, and you can give the appointing power to that court under the Constitution. The Constitution provides for that, and you can have it legally done.

There is occasion for courts there now. Let your military go on just as it does wherever insurrection is rampant; but where there is peace, courts can be established and can be put in operation. There are many places where the military is not necessary now, and there will be many more before long. The courts can go there, and as fast as the military is withdrawn justice can be administered, and it will be much easier to bring about peace if justice is firmly established. If the people know that with peace comes justice, if they can be sure that they will be protected in their property—and there are a great many property holders in the Philippines—if they can be sure that their rights will be absolutely and scrupulously protected and impartial justice administered, they will be friends of the United States.

In the sense that we understand it, justice has never been enjoyed by the people of the Philippines. They are unacquainted with impartial justice. Let us, then, establish a thorough system of justice, and with such a system great reform will follow. All other great questions of administration will also follow. That is the great problem before us in pacifying those people. Let them know that their rights of property and person are to be protected absolutely and impartially, and they will be our friends. They will know that speculators are not going among them to get their money. We will have no Cape Nome scandals or California land-title scandals, or such scandals as occurred during the Comstock trial. Let them feel that such is to be the case; let them understand that justice will be secured to them, then you will not have anarchy and you will not have to destroy the people. They do not love injustice.

I should like very much to see justice established in the Philippines. I believe that a court of appellate jurisdiction, with power to appoint all subordinate court officials, with the judges paid a sufficient sum in order to get five of the best men in America, would do more to pacificate the islands and make the inhabitants our friends than 200,000 soldiers. You would not have to kill them if they understood that justice was going to be done. There would be no trouble about that. All people love justice, no matter who they are.

Those who have property want justice in order to have their property protected; and the protection of life and property are the main things that are guaranteed by the Declaration of Independence. The right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is a great thing, and without a court of justice in the Philippine Islands all of that is denied. You can not secure it at long range. The power to see that justice is done must be lodged near home, and you should give the people a court that the whole United States will have confidence in.

Judge Taft, the head of the Philippine Commission, would be an admirable man for such a place as that. If we would get five such men as he, we might then rest our souls in peace, sure of having justice and of having the Filipinos love this country and of hastening the time when free institutions and liberty would be established in those islands. Nobody can have confidence in the temporary courts that we are appointing there. They are simply military courts. Everybody understands who studies our Constitution that the arrangement in the islands is only temporary, and people do not have confidence in temporary arrangements. They want a pillar of justice so firm and strong that it can not be torn down by anybody. I believe it is in the power of Congress to erect that pillar of justice on so firm a foundation that the world will know that wherever the American flag goes there goes justice.

Are we going to be speculators in the Philippines where we have undertaken to guarantee the rights of liberty, property, law, and order? There are many foreigners interested in that country, in fact, all the world is interested in the Philippine Islands. They will know very quickly whether we carry out our pledge and whether we administer to them justice. If we do, the name of America will be respected everywhere; but if we have repeated there the California scandals, the Comstock scandals, the Cape Nome scandals, then the name of America will be a reproach in every nation on earth, because they are all interested there. I say that the establishment of courts in the islands, which would have supervision and control over the lower courts and would see that justice was done, ought to be the paramount object of all we have in view.

Of course this amendment will not be accepted, because the committee do not want it; they have got another scheme; but I may hereafter bring it in. I do this in simple justice, hoping that the powers that be will reflect seriously upon it and will see the responsibility resting upon us to make sure that justice is done. Having tried to appoint judges here under like conditions and found that they failed to administer justice, finding that justice at long range is not always the most accurate, finding that attempts to act under such circumstances have failed everywhere, we ought not to try it in the Philippine Islands.

We ought to try something else, because the honor of the nation and the good name of every American is involved under the solemn pledge to protect life and property and give these people liberty and a government by law. It seems that we ought to leave no stone unturned to accomplish that grand result. I believe it can only be done by a few brave, strong, learned men, men that can be found in the United States who will set up a court there to preside over the destinies of that country and see to it that the inferior courts do their duty, and if they fail to do their duty, that they are removed.

Let that be done, and the inauguration of a new era will begin in the Philippine Islands. The people there have been under Spanish rule for more than three hundred years, and justice is unknown to them. It is only the Anglo-Saxon race that has a conception of justice as we understand it. Let us first plant the foundations of justice srtong and deep there, and the tree of liberty will grow and flourish.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator from Nevada to say imperial courts.

Mr. STEWART. I am not a blasphemer. I do not trifle with a thing of that kind.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to use that word.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator knows I did not use it at all. I do not belong to that criticising, harping class of men. I speak of it as imperial. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. BACON. If I am wrong——

Mr. STEWART. The Senator is wrong; he never has been right.

Mr. BACON. I will say that if the Senator did not use the word imperial not only I but those sitting around me understood him to use it.

Several SENATORS. "Inferior."

Mr. BACON. Oh, "inferior."

STREET RAILWAY TRACKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3205) for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That whenever the Bunker Hill road or Wisconsin avenue is improved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the said Commissioners are authorized to permit the street railroad tracks upon said highways to be located in the middle of the roadway, should such location be considered for the best interests of the public.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

THEATER LICENSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 163) regulating licenses to proprietors of theaters in the District of Columbia, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any license issued by the assessor of the District of Columbia to the proprietor of a theater or other public place of amusement in the District of Columbia may be terminated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia whenever it shall appear to them that, after due notice, the person holding such license shall have failed to comply with such regulations as may be prescribed by the said Commissioners for the public decency.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

SPANISH WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898. It was under consideration earlier in the session to-day and was at the time passed, upon the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], but he has since notified me that he has examined the report and that I need not defer asking consideration of it further on his account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. It was fully read and explained at the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the suggestion I made to him this morning, that the conference report contains, in my judgment—it is not alone my judgment, it is the judgment of other Senators whose judgment is superior to my own—a provision that is utterly unconstitutional; and if so, we would stultify ourselves in putting it upon the statute books.

I allude to the matter to which I called the attention of the Senator from Ohio this morning—that it is beyond the jurisdiction of Congress to appoint a commission for any purpose and give that commission the power to certify questions to the Supreme Court and lay upon the Supreme Court the obligation to answer those questions. The Supreme Court is a court created by the Constitution, with powers limited and defined by the Constitution, powers which we can not add to or subtract from, and if I am correct in this, I think we ought not to proceed without an amendment in that particular.

Very hurriedly I called the attention of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is a member of that committee, to the matter. I had no time for conference, but I called their attention to it hurriedly, and they agreed with me about it. If so, we ought to give it attention before we dismiss it.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that that part of the conference report which raises this question may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part about which question is raised will be read. Will the Senator from Ohio call the attention of the clerks to it?

Mr. FORAKER. In just a moment I will be able to point it out.

The provision was incorporated in the bill upon the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who, I regret to see, is not in his seat at the present moment; but it did not occur to me or to any other member of the committee that there was anything unconstitutional about the provision. It is simply a provision which was inserted in lieu of a provision that was in the original bill as it passed the Senate, providing for an appeal from an award made by the commissioners to the supreme court of the District, and the substitute is that the commission, while their award is final and no appeal can be taken from it, may nevertheless as to any legal question about which they may have difficulty among themselves, certify that legal question to the Supreme Court of the United States for its opinion upon it.

This does not undertake to lay, except only, of course, by inference, upon the Supreme Court the duty of rendering an opinion upon such certificate of difference of opinion by the commission. I have not myself thought there was any difficulty about it, and I have made no examination whatever of the matter. As the Senator from Georgia says, he has——

Mr. BACON. No; I beg pardon. The Senator will permit me for a moment. The Senator will recall that this morning I called the attention of the Senator to it and stated that while I did not intend to affirm that as a correct principle, I was very strongly of that opinion. I did not anticipate that it was coming up again to-night or I would have given it a little more careful attention, but upon general principles the principle seems to be correct.

Mr. HOAR. I think when the Court of Claims was established and throughout the history of the legislation in regard to the Court of Claims Congress has always gone on the theory that the Supreme Court of the United States could not have imposed upon them any jurisdiction or duty which did not involve the rendering of a judgment. It is not very uncommon, at any rate in our State constitutions, to provide that the supreme court shall answer legal questions put to them by the executive or one of the houses of the legislature of the State.

But that was not adopted in our Constitution in regard to the Supreme Court of the United States; and I understand that when the Court of Claims was established Congress was of opinion that they could only refer such questions to the Supreme Court, going up from the Court of Claims, as were accompanied by the power to render judgment, and that wherever the Court of Claims find facts for the government of Congress or as in some recent statute are obliged to find and give their opinion as to the law governing those facts, there is no appeal to the Supreme Court. I should be sorry indeed to interpose an objection, without having reflected and examined the question, to anything to which so eminent a lawyer as my honorable friend the Senator from Ohio has given careful attention and thinks is right, but I hope the report will be allowed to go over until to-morrow morning, and perhaps the matter will then be cleared up by examination.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will bear with me for a moment, it does not seem to me that there is any difficulty about it at all. I have not been able to hear all that the Senator from Massachusetts said, but it seems to me it is competent for Congress to confer upon the Supreme Court jurisdiction to give an opinion in such a case as that provided for by this amendment. I will first read the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Where is the jurisdiction in the Constitution?

Mr. FORAKER. Section 2 of Article III provides:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects.

If not found under any other clause, certainly it is found under that all-comprehensive clause which provides that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States shall extend to all controversies to which the United States shall be a party.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator read the last sentence of the clause on the two hundred and fifth page, or I will read it, if the Senator will allow me.

In all the other cases before mentioned—

That is, cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which the States shall be parties—

In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to the law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

My suggestion is, Is this jurisdiction over a case in the constitutional sense as applied to a court, when all it does is to ask a question? Is it a case in the technical sense, as is suggested to me by a Senator? The case does not go there. The controversy does not go there. The right to render any judgment does not go there, and when the court answers the question, as the bill is, it speaks with no authority. The power that has to render judgment or settle the matter may regard or disregard the opinion of the Supreme Court, as it sees fit.

Mr. FORAKER. The point I make in answer to all that the Senator from Massachusetts says is that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution and the laws enacted by Congress, and not alone to all cases arising under the laws enacted by Congress, but also to all controversies with respect to which the Congress of the United States may see fit to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court, to which controversy the United States is a party. Here is a controversy. The United States creates a commission. It gives it jurisdiction to hear the controversy, to hear testimony, to ascertain the facts, to hear argument as to the law applicable to those facts, and it provides that the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction with respect to that controversy to which the United States is a party to the extent in the case given of rendering an opinion as to the law governing the question that has been certified.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the report go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOAR. The provision, if I now understand it correctly, is very different from what has been stated. I did not hear the reading. The provision is:

When the commission is in doubt * * * they may state the facts and the question of law so arising and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision, and said court shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide the same.

That removes my difficulty.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much gratified to have the Senator from Massachusetts reach that conclusion.

Mr. HOAR. I thought from the statement made on the floor by the Senator from Georgia that all the Supreme Court of the United States did is what our supreme court in Massachusetts does—answer a question of law and send it back to the other party for final decision. But I do not see why this is not as competent as the ordinary judgment of the Supreme Court on cases appealed from the Court of Claims.

Mr. FORAKER. It seems to me to be so most clearly, because the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is by the terms of the Constitution so comprehensive as to cover all controversies, and the matter in which a controversy may be taken to the Supreme Court is for the Congress to decide, and we propose to do that here.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that that part of the conference report be read.

Mr. FORAKER. I will read it as a part of my remarks. I have it before me:

When the commission is in doubt as to any question of law arising upon the facts in any case before them, they may state the facts and the question of law so arising and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision, and said court shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide the same.

And the constitutional jurisdiction conferred upon the Supreme Court is as to all controversies to which the United States shall be a party.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there any appeal from the decision of these commissioners to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. FORAKER. No appeal is provided. The award is final, except only in the case specified, when in doubt as to the law. Then the case in that instance must be certified to the Supreme Court for its decision upon the law and facts.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Ohio please read the sentence which speaks of the final decision by the commission? I wish he would read it in connection with the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. It says:

When the commission is in doubt——

Mr. BACON. No, preceding that. I wish to have read that part of the bill which says the decision of the commission shall be final, and then says when they are in doubt as to a question of law they may get the decision of the Supreme Court on the question.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator wants me to read the whole section?

Mr. BACON. Only that part of it to which I refer. The Senator stated it this morning.

Mr. FORAKER. It is rather lengthy.

SEC. 12. That all awards of said commission shall be final, unless a new trial or hearing shall be granted by said commission or the order reversed or modified as hereinafter provided.

Then this follows as section 13:

When the commission is in doubt as to any question of law arising upon the facts in any case before them, they may state the facts and the question of law so arising and certify the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for its decision, and said court shall have jurisdiction to consider and decide the same.

As I remarked a while ago, this section was incorporated in the report upon the motion of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. MORGAN), who is not here to-night.

Mr. TELLER. May I interrupt the Senator long enough to ask him who renders the judgment in this case, the commission or the court?

Mr. FORAKER. As I said a moment ago, this is the language of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I understood it to be a provision under which the case in the contingency named would go to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the final decision would be rendered.

Mr. HOAR. Final judgment.

Mr. FORAKER. Final judgment, and it would be sent there upon a statements of facts, to avoid the expense and trouble of certifying up the entire record, which might be burdensome.

Mr. SPOONER. Where questions are certified, as they sometimes are under the Federal law, to the Supreme Court, the court answers the question, but the court below enters the judgment.

Mr. FORAKER. That is true.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the court to decide under this proposed law—questions of law that are certified up?

Mr. LINDSAY. That is all.

Mr. FORAKER. I think that is all. That would be my interpretation. They decide the questions presented to them.

Mr. SPOONER. Then we might have so provided for the Southern Claims Commission, when there was one, or the Interstate Commerce Commission——

Mr. FORAKER. We might do it.

Mr. SPOONER. And for a vast variety of commissions.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a question of policy, I imagine, rather than a question of power. It may not be good policy. I would not have thought of it, of putting in the provision, but the Senator from Alabama did, and it met with favor at the hands of the conferees, and it was put in.

Mr. SPOONER. My recollection, if the Senator will permit me, is that way back somewhere there was a decision of the Supreme Court upon this question. Does the Senator object to permitting the report to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. FORAKER. No; certainly not. I was only trying to get it out of the way at a time when I thought it would suit the convenience of the Senate and save as much time as possible; but if any Senator desires to examine the question further, I recognize its importance and am quite willing to let it go over.

Mr. SPOONER. I remember an opinion of the Supreme Court in which they defined the controversy and held that it must be a suit.

Mr. FORAKER. I think that is true, but I think the Senator will concede that this is a suit. This bill provides that claimants who are eligible under the proposed law to have their claims adjudicated shall file a petition against the United States; the United States shall appear and answer or demur or plead otherwise, as they may see fit; and then, after issue has been joined, testimony shall be taken, and there shall be a hearing of witnesses and an ascertainment of facts; and then, when the facts have been ascertained, an order shall be made. But if, when the commission comes to consider the law applicable to any particular case, there be any troublesome question, it may certify it up; and then the Supreme Court is called upon to render an opinion as to that question which is certified to it in a case, or rather, I should say, to employ the language used in the Constitution, in a controversy to which the United States is a party. It seems to me it is competent for Congress to confer jurisdiction upon the United States Supreme Court in this kind of a controversy as well as any other.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a question? What is the jurisdiction of this commission?

Mr. FORAKER. The jurisdiction of the commission is a general jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims against the United States of the character specified.

Mr. ALLEN. Is this commission a court? Are you creating it into a court?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. I should call it at least a quasi judicial tribunal. It is a judicial proceeding.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator gets it right. It is quasi.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I used that term.

Mr. SPOONER. The Supreme Court is not quasi.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not talking about the Supreme Court in this connection at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think a quasi tribunal can send a question to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. I will retract, then, what I said. I simply meant by that that this is not a judicial tribunal in one sense. We do not call it a court. It is simply a commission that is created by Congress and clothed with judicial powers and judicial functions.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator ought to retract it.

Mr. ALLEN. How are you going to enforce its decisions?

Mr. FORAKER. I can not hear both Senators.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator ought to have retracted. "Quasi" was right.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I was right in a sense and I was not right in the sense the Senator from Wisconsin undertook to put me.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask——

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that this matter may go over.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator from Ohio had finished.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that we had better have the regular order, and let this go over until to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the better course.

Mr. HOAR. This is the regular order. It is a conference report.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that the conference report has been already adopted. Debate is too late.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to make one observation, if the conference report is before the Senate and is to go over, in order that it may go into the RECORD. It will take but one moment.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to suggest that the conference report has already been adopted?

Mr. HOAR. What does the Chair say on that subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will consider it an open question. It was declared agreed to by the Chair, but where on matters of this kind Senators rise immediately afterwards, the Chair regards it as an open question.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make one observation. I do not wish to interfere with the desire of any Senator by haste, but I should like to make it now.

It seems to me that this commission is precisely like the Court of Claims in the substance of its authority and in the substance of its composition, except, of course, the appointments are not for life. It is an inferior tribunal. Therefore, it has a controversy regularly before it, a suit through a claim stated in writing in the proper way against the United States, and renders a binding judgment.

That being the condition of this tribunal, I understand this proposition is that instead of rendering its own final judgment in any particular case it may certify the facts and the questions of law arising thereon to the Supreme Court for its decision, and thereupon the Supreme Court decides the controversy—decides the claim. The defendant has forever lost his suit if it decide against him, and there is a decision in the nature of a judgment against the United States if it be that way.

It is equally the substance of a final judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, whether the Supreme Court enters a judgment on its own records or whether it enters what is in substance a final judgment, a mandate to the commission below to enter its judgment and certify there. That is exactly what the Supreme Court does in a great many instances of inferior courts. It sends its mandate to the tribunal. Questions go up by certificates of disagreement, and did from the beginning. Where the circuit judge and the district judge disagree, the question was certified up to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court decided the question and issued its mandate to the court below to render judgment accordingly, or it rendered a judgment itself, if it saw fit, without the further interposition of the court below.

I have not heard the whole bill read, and there may be a mistake about what the text of the bill is; but if I can understand correctly the Senator from Ohio, that is precisely what he undertakes to do; nothing more and nothing less; and I can not see that there is any greater constitutional difficulty in making such a provision in regard to this commission than in the similar provision which exists in regard to the Court of Claims.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Massachusetts has correctly stated the character of this bill, the character of the commission, and its powers created by the bill.

The first section of the proposed law provides that these commissioners are to be appointed, who shall be learned in the law. They shall constitute a commission whose duty it shall be, and they shall have jurisdiction to receive, examine, and adjudicate all claims of citizens of the United States against Spain, which the United States agreed to adjudicate and settle by the treaty of peace, referring to the seventh clause with appropriate words.

Then it provides that the proceeding shall be instituted by each claimant by the filing of a petition, in which he shall set up his claim with particularity. It prescribes what the procedure shall be, how the United States shall be served with process, how it shall make answer or otherwise plead, how an issue shall be finally joined, and how testimony shall be taken, and each commissioner is authorized to minister that oath. In short, it is a judicial tribunal and procedure throughout.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The Senator from Ohio stated some time ago that this report might go over. What is the use of debating it now and debating it in the morning? Several of us would like to look at the report. It seems to me that we are wasting a good deal of time to-night that we will repeat to-morrow morning.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator is going to give us an opportunity to look at it, let it go over. If not, let us go on and debate it the rest of the evening.

Mr. FORAKER. I appeal to the Senator to bear me out in the statement that I have not been insisting that the report should be disposed of this evening.

Mr. TELLER. As long as the Senator continues to debate it some one else will reply.

Mr. FORAKER. After I agreed that the report might go over some remarks were made about it, to which I wanted to make a brief answer, and I was making them, not for my benefit, but for the benefit of Senators who had not read the bill, in order that there might be a correct comprehension of it. I had already concluded my statement that it is a judicial tribunal, a judicial procedure throughout, resulting in a final judgment.

Mr. TELLER. It is a subject too large to finish to-night, and I hope the Senator will let the report go over.

Mr. FORAKER. It will go over.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to submit an observation or two in this connection before the report passes by. It might as well be debated to-night as at any other time. I do not want to take it for granted, or I do not want the Senator from Ohio to think, at least as far as I am concerned, that I concede for a moment the power of Congress to pass a bill of this character.

The Senator has not explained, and he will not be able to explain, perhaps, that we undertake to delegate to an administrative court judicial powers in plain contradiction and plain contravention of the provisions of the Constitution, for if the Constitution is plain in anything it is that all judicial power is invested in a Supreme Court and such subordinate courts as Congress may from time to time establish.

Now, I want to ask the Senator from Ohio how he proposes to delegate, or by what means Congress can delegate, judicial power to this administrative board, which has not the functions of a court, which has no jurisdiction whatever because of its lack of judicial power. If that be true, how is it true, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, that the Supreme Court can get jurisdiction from a tribunal which itself has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action?

In the first place, there is no action before this commission. It is a mere administrative board. It proceeds as irregularly as a county board of supervisors. Now, if it be without jurisdiction, if under the Constitution you can not confer judicial power upon an organization like this, how is it possible that the Supreme Court, upon a certificate from these commissioners, will obtain jurisdiction sufficient to make its judgment or its conclusions of law binding upon that tribunal and binding upon the party?

I know, Mr. President, it is not a very uncommon thing to undertake to parcel out the judicial power of the Government to administrative boards, but the Supreme Court, it seems to me, has settled this question when it determined that the Interstate Commerce Commission has no jurisdiction whatever.

There is an entire lack of power on the part of this board to enforce any of its judgments. A court must have power to enforce its judgments. If it can not issue an execution, if it can not put process in the hands of a marshal, if it can not seize property, if it can not sequester property and subject that property to its jurisdiction and to the payment of the judgment rendered by it, then it is not a court within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. LODGE and others. Regular order!

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, when I came into the Chamber a few moments ago, I was informed by a Senator that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] had undertaken to reflect very seriously upon a judge in Alaska. I presume the Senator from Nevada referred to Judge Arthur H. Noyes, of the Nome division.

I regret very much that at this late period in this short session this matter should be brought up here, but it does seem to me that I ought to be heard, in view of the fact that the friends of Judge Noyes up to this moment have kept quiet upon this matter, and notwithstanding the fact that the newspapers and persons who appear to have a peculiar interest in the matter have industriously denounced Judge Noyes during the past six or eight months Judge Noyes and his friends have not seen fit to reply up to this time. I was in hopes that out of consideration for the high office of judge nothing would be brought into the Senate; but now that it has been brought in here it does seem to me that something should be said in behalf of Judge Noyes. I do not propose to occupy the time and attention of the Senate at any great length, but I do want to read from a letter which I received from Judge Noyes a short time ago indicating the condition existing in that country and entering something of a defense against the outrageous charges that have been made against that officer.

I have here a letter, dated the 15th day of October, from Judge Noyes. This controversy, as Senators probably know and as the country well knows by reason of the newspaper advertising certain parties have done, grew out of the appointment by Judge Noyes of a receiver for certain mining properties at Cape Nome. The receiver appointed is in every respect an honorable and responsible man. On this subject Judge Noyes writes me as follows, under date of October 15:

> The cases in which I appointed McKenzie receiver are known as the Anvil Creek cases. When McKenzie was appointed receiver he was called upon to give a bond in each case. I further made an order requiring the receiver to deposit all the gold dust taken from the various mines separately in the safety-deposit vaults of the Alaska Safe and Deposit Company, and that no portion thereof should be withdrawn without an order of the court and on notice to all parties interested. I further made an order allowing both the plaintiffs and the defendants and all parties interested or claiming an interest in the different claims to be present either in person or by authorized agent at all "clean ups," so that they might know the exact amount of gold taken from the claims regardless of the report of the receiver.
> McKenzie has never received a dollar for his services as receiver nor has he been allowed a dollar to pay attorney's fees, and has conducted the business of the mines in the most economical and approved manner, as is admitted by both plaintiffs and defendants themselves, so that as a result of his stewardship there is now on deposit in the safety-deposit vaults all the gold that has been taken out of these mines, subject to the final determination of the court, and then the court above should either party conclude to carry the case so far.

Further along in his letter Judge Noyes says:

> It is not necessary for me to ask you to withhold your judgment in regard to the outrageous charges made against me in the newspapers. I never did a dishonorable thing in my life and never spent a dishonest dollar in my life and I never expect to. The golden opinions of my fellow-men are treasures far too rich to be swapped for golden dust. If I am ever rich it will be in such opinions rather than in dollars, and I feel an ambition to demean myself here in such a way as to receive a welcome from you and the others who placed me here.

Again, in his letter, the judge has this to say:

> The only offers of money—

And, by the way, I wish to remark that I understand the Senator from Nevada indicated that owing to the very small salary that is paid to these judges in these new parts of the country it is necessary for them to go outside of the salary they receive in some way in order to gain a living. I think this part of the judge's letter applies to that feature of the discussion—

> The only offers of money that I have received have been to do something in favor of the gang that has tried to destroy me. I do not say the offers came from them, because I have no proof of it; that I leave to inference. And that I have been offered money—and good sums of money, too—often is perhaps something of a shame to me. In years gone by I have wondered how the man would look who would have the temerity to offer to buy me, but his face has appeared so many times of late that it has become familiar, but I have not sold yet, Senator, and I will not sell for some time. If not honest, I am at least high-priced, and I shall claim some credit on that score, and I can assure you that they have not the price.
> It is impossible for you to conceive of the species of emissaries that are sent to me and the traps that are laid for me. A party came to me the other day and said it was reported that I was going to resign, and that before resigning I was going to make some orders in favor of the defendants in the Anvil Creek cases, and in a very simple way asked me if it were true. He knew it was false, but I allowed him to think that I was just stupid enough to believe that he was honor bright, and informed him that nothing short of a Gatling gun or an order from the Government would take me off this bench.
> They charged me with dishonor and corruptness, and when they found that they would not go they consented to give me back my reputation in that regard, and then, to be more contemptible, circulated the story that I was weak and vacillating. Now, if I am not pulled off by the Government or shot off the bench by these cowards, I am going to assist in establishing the fact that I am fairly strong and tolerably certain.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that has the ring of a true man and is an honest expression of an interesting situation.

Now, further than that, the Department of Justice in this city has had an agent in Alaska to investigate the transactions of the various courts in that country. That agent has reported to the Department. Just what those reports say of course I do not know, because they are the secret papers of the Department, but I do know that several affidavits have been filed with the Attorney-General, and I am satisfied that with the tremendous pressure which has been put upon the Attorney-General and the Administration here generally to have Judge Noyes removed without a hearing, had it not been for the reports of those agents and the affidavits which were laid before the Attorney-General, doubtless some hasty action would have taken place.

In this connection I have here a brief of the affidavits which have been filed with the Attorney-General. It consists of about four pages of typewritten matter, and I will ask the Secretary to read it. I think it is due Judge Noyes that this recital of what has been going on in Alaska should be read before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Is the paper read by the Secretary as of right under the rule? It does seem to me that this discussion ought not to go on in the Senate—a discussion of the character of an individual judge having no relation whatever to the matter before the Senate. If there be any question in regard to this gentleman's conduct, it should come up in the other House and not before us. If he is impeached, we then sit as judges. If he is not impeached, the presumption is that he is an upright man. I hope the Senator——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will say to the Senator there are but four pages of that brief. The affidavits are very lengthy, and I will not ask that they be read. I desire to have the summary read.

Mr. STEWART. All right; have it read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will not occupy the attention of the Senate beyond the reading of the paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts make the point of order or make the objection? If any objection is made to the reading of the paper, the question must be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I will not make the point of order or objection against the Senator. If the Senator insists, after the suggestion, and thinks it ought to be read, I will not go so far as to object.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is done about twenty times a day here every day of the year. Of course the question will have to be submitted to the Senate if objection is made, but I think the Senator from Massachusetts is not going to object. The Senator from North Dakota can read it himself.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I can read it myself in my own right if necessary; but I prefer to have the Secretary read it, and then I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection being made, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the summary of affidavits.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I will not insist upon a further reading, but will ask simply to have the summary inserted in the RECORD. I do not want to take up time under the pressure of business. I would not have brought the matter up at all if it had not been alluded to by the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEVERIDGE in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and the paper will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY OF AFFIDAVITS.

The Pioneer and Wild Goose Mining Companies, assisted by their attorneys, united first in their efforts to break down the district court of Alaska (second division) by bribery, secondly by intimidation, and lastly by perjured testimony.

Immediately upon the arrival of Judge Noyes and party at Nome last summer C. P. Braslan, an employee of the Pioneer Mining Company, offered Judge Noyes and Deputy Court Clerk Dickey free quarters at the Lawrence Hotel. The offer was refused. At many and divers times Braslan told A. K. Wheeler, the Judge's private secretary, that his people (meaning the Pioneer Mining Company) had plenty of money; that they were willing to spend it and that Judge Noyes was a fool if he did not get on their side of the litigation then pending in court, and thus get some of their money.

Next, Braslan offered Judge Noyes half of his earninge if he would appoint him United States commissioner at Council City, which offer was promptly declined. Braslan also told the judge that he could easily make $20,000 to $25,000 a year. The mining company did build a house for C. E. Dickey, deputy clerk of the court, within two weeks after his arrival at Nome, and which he continues to occupy.

Last July Judge Noyes was offered $20,000 by United States Marshal Vawter if he would discharge Alexander McKenzie as receiver, after a motion for the discharge of said receiver had been made in court. Noyes was also threatened in anonymous communications with death if he did not "change his ways" in the litigation then pending. Spies and detectives, in the employ of the Wild Goose and Pioneer mining companies, occupied rooms adjoining the judge's chambers. They had bored holes in the walls and ceiling for the purpose of spying and eavesdropping. The Judge was also continually shadowed.

Charles Herron was a detective in the employ of the mining companies to secure evidence of various sorts for them. During the latter part of August Attorney Metson gave Herron a quantity of twenty-dollar marked gold pieces to give Judge Noyes for the appointment of a commissioner in an outlying district. In the event of Judge Noyes accepting this bribe Metson stated that he would have the Judge and Mrs. Noyes shadowed and regain possession of the money for comparison with other marked coin in his safe. About the same time Metson handed Herron $100, to be given some pugilist or tough character who would agree to knock Alex. McKenzie on the head.

Instead of complying with the above requests, Herron immediately reported the circumstances to Assistant District Attorney Humes. Following the above attempts and failure to entrap Judge Noyes, it was then decided by Attorneys Knight and Metson to continue the attempts to buy the judiciary, if possible. Herron was shown $22,500 by Knight and Metson, and informed that that amount had been set aside for the purpose of disposing of the judge, who, in return for $20,000, was to consent to these four propositions:

(1) That he would remove McKenzie as receiver.

(2) That he would cause all the gold dust in McKenzie's possession to be turned over to the mining companies.

(3) That he would sign an order removing R. N. Stevens as commissioner of the Nome mining district.

(4) That he would place his resignation as judge in their hands, but would stay on the bench until the mining companies could communicate with San Francisco and Washington and have a man of their own choice appointed in Noyes's place.

Herron informed Metson that he did not see how they could expect him to bribe the judge with $20,000, as they had already offered him that amount through the United States marshal. Metson replied that they expected an order, allowing an appeal, from San Francisco, and that they now believed the judge would be willing to accept the $20,000 and leave the country.

After being satisfied that they could neither intimidate, entrap, or bribe the judge, Attorneys Metson and Knight asked Herron to make an affidavit accusing Judge Noyes of accepting a bribe. Herron declined, and was then told to find someone who would make such an affidavit. On October 9 Herron went to one Frank Reece, who agreed for $1,000 to make the affidavit. Before doing so, however, Reece laid the matter before the United States district attorney, and also made an affidavit for him setting forth the proposition that had been made to him by the attorneys.

Upon the advice of the district attorney Reece made the false affidavit for the sole purpose of exposing Knight and Metson. This was on October 16, and Reece was paid only $750 instead of $1,000, as promised. Immediately thereafter Reece made a counter affidavit for the district attorney exposing the attempt to impeach the character of Arthur H. Noyes for honesty and integrity in his official conduct as judge. Knight informed Reece at the time that he and his clients would probably need Reece to testify in person before a committee at the present session of Congress respecting and substantiating the matter and things contained in the affidavit, which are and were false and untrue, in an effort and attempt to be made in Washington to have Noyes impeached and have him removed as judge.

The district attorney at once informed Judge Noyes of the existence of the false affidavit, and on the morning of October 20 Noyes sent for Knight, who appeared at his chambers about 10 o'clock. Knight was then and there informed by the district attorney that he understood he (Knight) had an affidavit in his possession, in which it was charged that one of the judicial officers of the district court had been guilty of accepting a bribe.

The district attorney demanded that Knight turn over to him such affidavit in order that he (the district attorney) might enforce the laws of the district. Knight admitted that he had such an affidavit, but not in his possession at that time; that he knew where it was and would procure same and turn it over to the district attorney within two hours. This Knight did not do, and at 4 o'clock that afternoon writs of attachment for Knight were issued and placed in the hands of four deputy marshals, but they were unable to locate or find Knight, as he had left the country.

It was afterwards learned that Knight had secreted himself on the steamship St. Paul, en route from Nome to San Francisco, on which vessel Reece had also taken passage for Seattle. On the way down Reece was hounded and frequently asked to make another affidavit, to the effect that anything he might have said in the counter affidavit was untrue. This he declined to do, notwithstanding that many tempting offers of money had been made to him. At Port Townsend a notary public was brought aboard and much pressure was brought to bear upon Reece to sign the desired affidavit.

After Reece's arrival in Seattle he continued to be hounded by Knight and his gang, and finally he was threatened with arrest on some fictitious charge unless he would make the affidavit which Knight wanted, for which they agreed to pay Reece $2,000 more. While in Seattle, Attorneys Knight and Hatch learned that General Metcalf was Reece's counsel, and they immediately went to him, with a prepared affidavit, and agreed to give Metcalf all of the Seattle business of the Pioneer and Wild Goose mining companies if he [Metcalf] would advise his client, Reece, to sign this affidavit, which exonerated Knight of subornation of perjury. Metcalf declined to so advise Reece, and has made an affidavit setting forth these facts.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I can not allow any whitewashing of Judge Noyes to pass unnoticed, and I will not depart in my remarks from his judicial record. I have examined a large number of the record cases from Nome, and I find in those records the following facts:

Judge Arthur H. Noyes, Receiver Alexander McKenzie, and Robert Chipps, the plaintiff in the most important of the Nome cases which was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of certiorari, left Seattle together on the same ship for Nome, arriving there Saturday, July 21, 1900.

Monday, July 23, 1900, Judge Noyes granted injunctions ex parte and without bond against the persons in possession of five of the most productive claims in the mining district, and in each of these cases appointed Alexander McKenzie receiver before any papers were filed, and ordered him to take immediate possession of all these claims, which he did.

That is the record and is undisputed.

Similar proceedings were continued by Judge Noyes in granting injunctions and appointing receivers in numerous cases, including nearly all of the mines in operation in the mining district, and in nearly all cases injunctions were granted not only ex parte and without notice, but in all without bond, although the civil government law of Alaska, section 384, page 297, requires bond upon the issuance of an injunction.

Now, here a whole district was enjoined without bond. Just contemplate that for a moment—placer claims to be worked out in a few days or a few months and to have an injunction without bond and a receiver appointed! Do you talk about a supervision of the mines? Who can supervise a receiver, with numerous mining claims under his control, to see whether the gold dust is properly cared for?

There was no showing in any of the cases for either an injunction or a receiver except the naked affidavit of the complainant attached to the complaint, and in no case was there any showing in the bill or otherwise that a receiver was necessary to protect the property from injury.

In the case of Chipps vs. Lindeberg, folio 156, the record of which is now in the Supreme Court of the United States, the receiver was ordered by Judge Noyes to take possession of about $100,000 worth of personal property——

Mr. TURNER. I should like to ask the Senator what he is reading?

Mr. STEWART. I am reading from an abstract of the record in the Nome mining cases that I made myself, and I know it is true. I took the record and made the abstract. I had the record copied, and I know what it is. I know that every word of it is true, and it is commented upon by the judge of the circuit court of San Francisco.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to ask the Senator, having come in late, what section of the Army appropriation bill it is that is now under discussion?

Mr. STEWART. It is the first and last section, and all of it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is the first and last?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Thanks.

Mr. STEWART. This record proceeds:

The receiver was ordered by Judge Noyes to take possession of about $100,000 worth of personal property, without even an averment in the complaint or in any other pleading that the property belonged to the complainant, and the receiver took possession and held such personal property without bond or any other authority than the arbitrary order of Judge Noyes, which order was made without pleading, petition, or written application from any person whatever.

All this the record shows, and the court of appeals finds the same facts in the contempt case against Mr. McKenzie.

In all cases the first notice which the defendants and the parties in possession of the mines had was from the receiver in person, who took possession of the mines—

There was no office of the clerk of the court or anything of the kind. This is proved by the record contained in the appendix. I will ask that this document, with the appendix, referring to the record, be put in as part of my remarks, if there is no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE CASE OF JUDGE ARTHUR H. NOYES, OF NOME, ALASKA.

[References to Appendix, hereto attached.]

Judge Arthur H. Noyes, Receiver Alexander McKenzie, and Robert Chipps, the plaintiff in the most important of the Nome cases which was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of certiorari, left Seattle together on the same ship for Nome, arriving there Saturday, July 21, 1900.

Monday, July 23, 1900, Judge Noyes granted injunctions ex parte and without bond against the persons in possession of five of the most productive claims in the mining district, and in each of these cases appointed Alexander McKenzie receiver before any papers were filed, and ordered him to take immediate possession of all these claims, which he did. (Appendix, p. 5.)

Similar proceedings were continued by Judge Noyes in granting injunctions and appointing receivers in numerous cases, including nearly all of the mines in operation in the mining district, and in nearly all cases injunctions were granted not only ex parte and without notice, but in all without bond, although the civil government law of Alaska, section 384, page 297, requires bond upon the issuance of an injunction. (Appendix, p. 5.)

There was no showing in any of the cases for either an injunction or a receiver except the naked affidavit of the complainant attached to the complaint, and in no case was there any showing in the bill or otherwise that a receiver was necessary to protect the property from injury. (Appendix, p. 6.)

In the case of Chipps vs. Lindeberg (folio 156), the record of which is now in the Supreme Court of the United States, the receiver was ordered by Judge Noyes to take possession of about one hundred thousand dollars' worth of personal property, without even an averment in the complaint or in any other pleading that the property belonged to the complainant, and the receiver took possession and held such personal property without bond or any other authority than the arbitrary order of Judge Noyes, which order was made without pleading, petition, or written application from any person whatever. (Appendix, p. 7.)

In all cases the first notice which the defendants and the parties in possession of the mines had was from the receiver in person, who took possession of the mines. The defendants applied to the court with a mass of evidence, showing title to the property and the injustice of the proceedings. No showing whatever was made by the various plaintiffs, except the original complaints, which were then on file. (Appendix, p. 5.)

Judge Noyes refused every application made for relief against the arbitrary orders granting injunctions and appointing receivers. (Appendix, p. 8.)

The defendants then in several cases in which the records are here made application for appeal to the circuit court of appeals, at San Francisco, from the orders granting the injunctions and appointing receivers. Judge Noyes refused to allow the appeals (see below), although appeals in such cases were expressly authorized by section 507 of the Alaska Code (Appendix, p. 9), signing the following order:

"Defendant herein having this day presented a proposed bill of exceptions for settlement and allowance by the judge of this court as the bill of exceptions herein, together with a petition for an order allowing an appeal to the circuit court of appeals of the United States for the Ninth circuit, and assignment of errors, and an undertaking on appeal:

"Now, therefore, it is by the said judge ordered that the said proposed bill of exceptions is in each and every part thereof disallowed as a bill of exceptions herein, and the settlement thereof or of any proposed bill of exceptions herein is hereby refused; that said petition for an order allowing said appeal is hereby denied, and said judge declines to accept or fix the amount of any bond for costs thereof, or to allow a supersedeas bond to be given, or to fix the amount thereof.

"Dated Nome, Alaska, August 15, 1900.

"ARTHUR H. NOYES, Judge."

The circuit court of appeals for the Ninth circuit, on the filing of the records in that court, set aside the orders of Judge Noyes granting injunctions and appointing receivers, and ordered the property to be turned over to the defendants. (Appendix, pp. 10, 11.)

McKenzie, the receiver, refused to deliver up the property, and upon application to the circuit court of appeals a peremptory order was issued for the delivery of the property and the arrest of McKenzie for contempt. (Appendix, p. 13.)

McKenzie, in his defense against proceedings for contempt of the orders of the circuit court of appeals, states that after the service of the order of said court upon himself and Judge Noyes, setting aside the injunction and orders appointing receivers and directing McKenzie to deliver over the property in his possession to the defendants, he was unable to make such delivery for the reason that Judge Noyes ordered the United States marshal to take possession of the gold dust which the receiver had deposited in bank and to allow no one to interfere with it. (Appendix, pp. 16, 17, 18.)

The marshal also makes affidavit in the McKenzie contempt case that he was ordered by the court to take possession of the gold dust which the receiver had on deposit and to hold it against everybody. The marshal continued to hold the property under the orders of Judge Noyes until the military authorities, under the orders of the appellate court, took possession of the gold dust and delivered it to the defendants.

APPENDIX.

NO BOND REQUIRED FROM PLAINTIFFS UPON ALLOWING INJUNCTION.

The civil government law of Alaska provides (sec. 384, p. 397, Session Statutes, first session Fifty-sixth Congress) that before allowing an injunction "the court or judge shall require of the plaintiff an undertaking, with one or more sureties, to the effect that he will pay all costs or disbursements that may be decreed to the defendant, and such damages, not exceeding an amount therein specified, as he may sustain by reason of the injunction, if the same be wrong or without sufficient cause."

No bond was required (Chipps v. Lindeberg, folio 144; Webster v. Nakkela, folio 12; Rogers v. Kjellmann, folio 9; Melsing v. Tornansis, folio 12), although the defendants were enjoined from interfering with the receiver in mining and working said placer-mining claim or interfering with his possession and management of any part of the property or of its operation, such orders all being made ex parte on July 23. (Chipps v. Lindeberg, folio 145; Melsing v. Tornansis, folio 11; Rogers v. Kjellmann, folio 8; Webster v. Nakkela, folio 11.)

EX PARTE APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER.

McKenzie was appointed receiver on July 23, under bill filed the same day, without any supporting affidavit except plaintiff's, and without notice or process.

Chipps v. Lindeberg, folios 11 to 23, inclusive, and 144 and 145.
Webster v. Nakkela et al., folios 2 to 12, inclusive (no supporting affidavit).
Melsing v. Tornansis, folios 2 to 11, inclusive (no supporting affidavit).

NO GROUND FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER.

There is no averment contained in the bills of complaint justifying the appointment of a receiver. The bills are framed upon the theory that the plaintiffs will be wronged unless the defendants are enjoined, but they do not show that the plaintiffs will be in any respect injured if the mine is left unworked, nor do they show plaintiffs' ownership of, or interest in, the personal property on the surface of the claims. The appointment of a receiver to work a placer-mining claim is entirely unknown, except on special averments, none being contained in the bills herein.

APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER WITHOUT NOTICE NOT JUSTIFIED.

No exigency was stated in the bills, and none appears of record, justifying the extraordinary procedure of the appointment of receivers without notice to the persons to be deprived of their property, nor was it alleged that there was any difficulty in serving process. In fact, copies of the orders of appointment were served in certain cases on the day they were made, and, of course, rules to show cause might have been as readily served. (Melsing v. Tornansis, folio 12; Webster v. Nakkela, folio 12.)

RECEIVER'S BOND INADEQUATE.

The bond required of the receiver in each case bore no relation to the value of the property coming into his hands.

Chipps vs. Lindeberg: Amount of gold theretofore extracted, $200,000; being taken out daily, $15,000; bond, $5,000. Folios 13, 21, and 145.

Rogers vs. Kjellmann: Gold theretofore extracted, $10,000; being taken out daily, $500; bond, $5,000. Folios 7 and 8.

Webster vs. Nakkela: Gold theretofore extracted, $50,000; being taken out daily, $500; bond, $5,000. Folios 5 and 11.

Melsing vs. Tornansis: Gold theretofore extracted, $150,000; being taken out daily, $5,000; bond, $5,000. Folios 5 and 11.

APPOINTMENT OF IMPROPER RECEIVER.

Although the bills in each case (Chipps vs. Lindeberg, folio 14; Webster vs. Nakkela, folio 6; Melsing vs. Tornansis, folio 5; Rogers vs. Kjellman) all charged unskillful management of the mines claimed, yet in every case a receiver was appointed who was without mining experience and had lived at Cape Nome but two days, reaching there, in company with the judge, on July 21.

DEFENDANT'S PERSONAL PROPERTY SEIZED.

The bills of complaint do not aver that the personal property upon the placer mines in question was the property of the respective plaintiffs, nor at any point is there any petition disclosed by the records for the appointment of a receiver for such personal property, yet the court ordered (Chipps vs. Lindeberg, folio 156) that the receiver shall take possession of "tents, buildings, safes, scales, and all personal property, fixed and movable; gold, gold dust, and precious metals; money, books of account, and each and all personal property upon said claim, connected therewith or in any way appertaining thereto, in possession of or under the control of the defendants," etc., estimated to be worth $200,000, contrary to the provisions of the special code of Alaska limiting the appointment of a receiver to special actions or proceedings "other than an action for the recovery of specific personal property."

On August 15, 1900, orders relative to personal property, similar to that in the Chipps case, were granted in the remaining cases.

REFUSAL OF RELIEF.

Motions to set aside the orders appointing receivers were all denied. (Chipps vs. Lindeberg, folio 146; Melsing vs. Tornansis, folio 48; Webster vs. Nakkela, folio 65; Rogers vs. Kjellmann, folio 60.)

The usual form of order was as follows:

"On reading the complaint and petition of the above-named plaintiff and the affidavits in support thereof, and on reading the affidavits of the defendants herein in support of a motion asking for the discharge and dismissal of the receiver heretofore appointed in the above-entitled proceedings, and on hearing the oral arguments of the attorneys for the several parties plaintiff and defendant herein, it is hereby

"Ordered, That the said motion asking for the discharge and dismissal of the said receiver, heretofore made under order of this court, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed, the appointment of said receiver being hereby confirmed, and that the receivership be continued until the further order of this court.

"Dated August 10, 1900.

"ARTHUR H. NOYES, Judge."

WRONGFUL REFUSAL OF APPEAL.

The judge refused to allow an appeal (Chipps vs. Lindeberg, folio 161; Melsing vs. Tornansis, folio 60; Rogers vs. Kjellmann, folio 72; Webster vs. Nakkala, folio 75), although the civil code of Alaska provides (section 507, page 415, Session Statutes, first session Fifty-sixth Congress) that "An appeal may be taken to the circuit court of appeals from any interlocutory order granting or dissolving an injunction, refusing to grant or dissolve an injunction made or rendered in any cause pending before the district court within sixty days after the entry of such interlocutory order"— and although the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the passing of an order precisely similar to those passed in these cases, had decided, in 168 U. S., page 583, In re Tampa Suburban Railroad Company, that the order granting an injunction was appealable.

The order refusing appeal is contained in the foregoing statement.

REFUSAL TO ALLOW BILL OF EXCEPTIONS, OR TO FIX BOND, OR ALLOW SUPERSEDEAS BOND.

The judge refused to settle or sign bill of exceptions or fix amount of bond or allow supersedeas bond. (Melsing vs. Tornansis, folio 60; Rogers vs. Kjellman, folio 72; Webster vs. Nakkala, folio 75.)

See copy of the order so signed in each case in the foregoing statement.

ALLOWANCE OF APPEAL BY CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

Appeal was allowed by circuit court of appeals.

See Chipps vs. Lindeberg, folio 169.

ORDER ALLOWING APPEAL.

On motion of J. C. Campbell, esq., counsel for respondents, and on filing the petition of Jafet Lindeberg, Erik O. Lindblom, and John Brynteson for an order allowing an appeal, together with an assignment of errors, it is ordered that an appeal be, and is hereby, allowed to the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit from the interlocutory order entered on the 11th day of August, 1900, granting an injunction pendente lite against respondents herein, and from each and every part and portion of said order.

That the amount of the bond upon said appeal be, and is hereby, fixed at the sum of $35,000.

That upon the execution and approval of said bond by this court a writ of supersedeas issue under the seal of this court, directed to complainant herein, his agents and servants, and the receiver therein appointed under said order, that they desist and refrain from in any manner interfering with said property, or in any manner enforcing or attempting to enforce said order of August 11, 1900, until said appeal be heard and determined, or the further order of this court.

That a certified transcript of the record and proceedings herein be forthwith transmitted to the said United States circuit court of appeals.

Dated August 27, 1900.

WM. W. MORROW, Judge.

WRIT OF SUPERSEDEAS.

Folios 175, 176, and 177 of the record in the case of Chipps vs. Lindeberg contains the following form of supersedeas:

Whereas in the above-entitled cause, upon petition of the appellants to this court for an order allowing an appeal to this court from an interlocutory order and decree made and entered by the said district court for the district of Alaska, second division, on the 11th day of August, 1900, granting unto the complainant herein an injunction ordering and directing the defendants and appellants to cease from working a certain mine in said bill of complaint mentioned, called the "Discovery," situated within said district of Alaska, and also ordering and directing said defendants to turn over the possession of said mine, together with all the personal property in said order mentioned, unto the said Alexander McKenzie, as receiver thereof, and also ordering and directing said receiver to take possession of said mine and mining property and conduct and work the same as receiver thereof, together with such other and various things as are in said order provided; and whereas said appellants also pray for a writ of supersedeas, and said appeal having been by said circuit court of appeals allowed and said petition for a writ of supersedeas granted upon the appellants filing a bond in the sum of $35,000, to be approved by this court, and said bond in said sum of $35,000, with approved sureties, having been filed and approved by this court.

"Now, therefore, you, the said Robert Chipps, Alexander McKenzie, and Arthur H. Noyes, judge of said district court for district of Alaska, second division, and each of you, are hereby commanded that from every and all proceedings on any execution of the aforesaid order or in anywise molesting the said defendants on the account aforesaid or in any manner interfering with their possession of said property you entirely surcease and refrain as being superseded, and that you, the said Alexander McKenzie, do forthwith return unto said defendants the possession of any and all property of which you took possession under and by virtue of said order, and that you do make return of this supersedeas, together with your acts and doings thereon, to said district court for said district of Alaska, second division, as you will answer the contrary at your peril; and you, the judge of said district court for the district of Alaska, second division, are hereby commanded to stay any and all proceedings which may have issued, as aforesaid, upon said order, and to stay any and all further proceedings in relation to the said order, and the appointment of a receiver thereunder in this case pending the appeal last aforesaid in this court.

"Witness the Hon. Melville W. Fuller, Chief Justice of the United States, this twenty-eighth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred.

"F. D. MONCKTON,

[SEAL.] "Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit."

(Indorsed:) "Copy writ of supersedeas."

(Similar writ in other cases cited.)

SERVICE OF COPY OF WRIT ON JUDGE NOYES AND OTHERS.

The following certificate of service fixing date thereof appears at folio 183, Chipps vs. Lindeberg:

I certify that I served a duly certified copy of the within writ on each of the following-named persons by handing each of them said certified copy in Nome, Alaska:

Alexander McKenzie, at 12 m., September 14, 1900.
Messrs. Hibbard, Beeman & Hume, at 12.30 p. m., September 14, 1900.
Robert Chipps, at 12.30 p. m., September 14, 1900.
Hon. Arthur H. Noyes, at 2 p. m., September 14, 1900.
Dated Nome, Alaska, September 14, 1900.

C. L. VAWTER,
United States Marshal, District of Alaska, Second District Thereof.

ORDER DIRECTING ENFORCEMENT OF SUPERSEDEAS AND ATTACHMENT OF M'KENZIE FOR CONTEMPT.

In the United States circuit court of appeals. In and for the ninth circuit. William J. Kjellmann, defendant and appellant, vs. Henry Rogers, complainant and appellee.

Whereas on the 29th day of August, 1900, an order was made by the Hon. W. W. Morrow, one of the judges of this court in the above-entitled cause, allowing an appeal from the decree of the district court of the United States for the district of Alaska, second division, and a further order was made by said W. W. Morrow granting a supersedeas in the said action; and

Whereas a writ of supersedeas based upon said order was thereupon issued from this court, signed by the clerk thereof and attested by the seal thereof, to Arthur H. Noyes, judge of the said district court, and to Alexander McKenzie, receiver appointed by the said district court in the above-entitled cause, which writ was in the words following, to wit (then follows a copy of the writ of supersedeas, before given):

And whereas it has been made to appear to the satisfaction of this court by affidavit that the said Alexander McKenzie has been served with the said writ, and that he has refused to comply with the orders therein contained: Now, therefore, it is ordered that the United States marshal of the northern district of California proceed forthwith to the city of Nome, in the district of Alaska, and that he then and there enforce the orders and provisions of the said writ of supersedeas.

And it is further ordered that he attach the person of the said Alexander McKenzie, and produce him before this court at the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, to answer for his refusal to carry out the orders and process of this court, and for his contempt thereof, on Monday, the 5th day of November, 1900.

ORDER OF JUDGE NOYES STAYING PROCEEDINGS (BUT NOT COMPLYING WITH THE WRIT OF SUPERSEDEAS BY DIRECTING TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO DEFENDANT).

On reading and filing the certified copies of the petition of defendant to the United States circuit court of appeals, in and for the ninth circuit, for an order allowing him to prosecute an appeal to said circuit court of appeals from the interlocutory order, judgment, and decree given and rendered in this action on the 23d day of July, 1900, in this district court, appointing a receiver to take charge of and control and manage the placer mining claim mentioned in the complaint, said interlocutory order embodying therein, as incident thereto, a restraining clause restraining the defendant from interfering with the property in the hands of receiver, and also from the order made and entered herein on the 10th day of August, 1900, in this district court denying the defendant's motion for an order discharging and dismissing the receiver theretofore appointed under the above-mentioned order of the 23d day of July, 1900, and on reading and filing the certified copy of the assignment of errors presented to the said circuit court of appeals by the defendant herein; the order of Hon. William W. Morrow, judge of said circuit court of appeals, dated August 29, 1900, allowing an appeal to said circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit from said interlocutory order, judgment, and decree; the citation issued on August 29, 1900, by the said Hon. William W. Morrow, judge of the circuit court of appeals, directed to the plaintiff, Henry Rogers, citing him to appear before said circuit court of appeals at San Francisco, Cal., on the 28th day of September, 1900, the writ of supersedeas granted herein on the 29th day of August, 1900, by the said United circuit court of appeals, directed to Hon. Arthur H. Noyes, judge of the district court for the district of Alaska, and to Henry Rogers and Alexander McKenzie; and the certified copy of the supersedeas bond, dated the 29th day of August, 1900, it is hereby Ordered, That all further proceedings herein in relation to said interlocutory order of this district court of said 23d day of July, 1900, be, and they are hereby, stayed, pending the said appeal from said interlocutory order to said circuit court of appeals.

By the court.

Judge of the United States District Court, District of Alaska, Second Division.

(Indorsed:) No. 7. United States' district court, district of Alaska, second division. Henry Rogers, plaintiff, v. William A. Kjellman, defendant. Original order staying proceedings. Filed in the United States district court, district of Alaska, second division. September 17, 1900. Geor. V. Borchsenius, clerk. John T. Reed, deputy.

Pages 130, 131, and 132 of the printed record in Kjellman v. Rogers.

AFFIDAVIT OF RECEIVER M'KENZIE IN CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS.

In the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit: William A. Kjellman et el., appellants, vs. Henry Rogers, appellee. In the matter of Alexander McKenzie for contempt.

Now comes Alexander McKenzie, defendant herein, and saving and reserving all objections heretofore made in his plea to the jurisdiction of this court and excepting to the overruling thereof, and answering under protest the order to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt heretofore made herein by this honorable court, respectfully alleges:

That on the 14th day of September, 1900, all of the gold and gold dust received by him as receiver on the properties described in the pleadings herein was deposited in the said vault of the Alaska Banking and Safe Deposit Company in obedience to the orders of the said district court of Alaska, except such portions as had been withdrawn by order of said court.

That on the 15th day of September Arthur H. Noyes, judge of said district court of Alaska, ordered and directed the United States marshal for the district of Alaska, second division, to take possession of the portions of said vault containing the gold and gold dust held by this defendant as receiver, place a guard over it, and not to permit this defendant access to said vault.

That the said C. L. Vawter, marshal, as aforesaid, in obedience to the orders of said Arthur H. Noyes, judge, as aforesaid, immediately took possession of said vault and placed a military guard in charge thereof with instructions to enforce the orders of said district judge and not to permit this defendant to have access to said vault or to the boxes thereof containing the gold dust received by him as such receiver.

That from and after said 15th day of September, 1900, this deponent never was permitted to have access to the boxes in said vault containing the gold and gold dust deposited by him as such receiver, and he was not permitted to exercise any control whatever over the same.

That on said date and thereafter this defendant was without the ability to comply with the order of this court.

Defendant admits that the demand for the immediate delivery of the property described in the pleadings herein and the gold and gold dust, the proceeds thereof, was made on him on the 14th day of September, in the manner and form set forth in the affidavit of Samuel Knight heretofore filed herein.

That said defendant is not learned in the law, and desired to be made acquainted with his rights and duties in the premises on such date by his counsel, and immediately submitted the matters to his counsel, asking for his opinion as to the law applicable in the premises.

That before receiving such advice the Hon. Arthur H. Noyes, judge of the district court of Alaska, had made and issued the order to the United States marshal hereinbefore set forth, and thereafter it was not in the power of this defendant to comply with the order of this court; and the said order to said marshal was made without the knowledge, consent, or solicitation of this defendant; and further, that this defendant was advised that between the 15th and 19th days of September, 1900, applications were made to the Hon. Arthur H. Noyes, judge of the district court of Alaska, and to said district court by the defendants in the above-entitled action, requesting said Arthur H. Noyes, judge as aforesaid, and the said district court to order and direct this defendant to surrender to the defendants herein the gold and gold dust then in his possession, the proceeds of the property described in the pleadings herein, and the said Arthur H. Noyes did, on said dates, fail, refuse, and decline to make such orders so requested by appellants.

That said gold and gold dust, the proceeds of said properties aforesaid, and contained in the vault of the Alaska Banking and Safe Deposit Company, has not been under the possession of or under the control of this defendant since the 14th day of September, 1900.

That no other or further demand was made on him to comply with the writ in this case than as hereinbefore set forth.

That on the said 15th day of September, 1900, said C. L. Vawter, marshal of the district court of Alaska, as aforesaid, in obedience to the orders of said Arthur H. Noyes, judge as aforesaid, immediately took possession of the said vault and placed a military guard in charge thereof, with instructions to enforce the order of the said district judge and not to permit this defendant to have access to such vault or the boxes contained therein.

ALEXANDER McKENZIE.

AFFIDAVIT OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL IN CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, SECOND DIVISION, DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

C. L. Vawter, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the United States marshal for the second division for the district of Alaska, duly appointed and qualified, and acting as such.

That on the 15th day of September, 1900, Judge Arthur H. Noyes, United States district judge for the district of Alaska, second division, ordered this affiant, as such marshal, to repair to the building occupied by the Alaskan Banking and Safe Deposit Company, in which the gold and gold dust held by Alexander McKenzie, as receiver of sundry claims in Alaska, was deposited, and to place a guard over such vaults, and not to permit any persons, especially the said Alexander McKenzie and the parties interested, to have access to the boxes in which the gold and gold dust so held by said receiver was so contained until a further order of the court, and not to permit any person, especially the said Alexander McKenzie and the parties in interest, to open said boxes or to withdraw any portion of the gold or gold dust contained therein until the said order of the said court.

That in pursuance of the aforesaid order he repaired to said bank and placed a guard of United States soldiers over said vault. That such guard continued without interruption, day and night, until the 16th day of October, 1900.

That said guard of soldiers was instructed by him as said marshal not to permit said Alexander McKenzie or any other interested person to enter said safety boxes or to have access thereto.

That he informed said Alexander McKenzie of said order of said Arthur H. Noyes, district judge, as aforesaid, that he would not permit said Alexander McKenzie to enter said vault or have access thereto without first securing an order from said judge.

That on the 13th day of October, 1900, said Alexander McKenzie did request of this affiant that he be permitted to enter said vault to open one of the boxes containing gold and gold dust taken from certain of said claims, for the purpose of withdrawing therefrom a quantity of said gold dust for the purpose of paying claims against such mining property, as provided in a certain stipulation that day accepted by attorneys for plaintiffs and defendants.

That this affiant informed said Alexander McKenzie that he would have to obtain an order from said judge so permitting him to enter said boxes for the purpose of procuring said money.

That in the absence of said order this affiant would not permit him to enter said vault.

That thereafter on same day, after the gold had been withdrawn under the stipulation and order of the court above referred to, this affiant went to said Judge Arthur H. Noyes for further instructions, and said Judge Arthur H. Noyes then and there instructed this affiant to let the previous order continue and not permit Receiver Alexander McKenzie, or any other person or persons, to have access to said gold or withdraw any of same until further order of the court.

C. L. VAWTER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 18th day of October, 1900.

[SEAL.] GEO. A. LEEKLEY,
Notary Public in and for the District of Alaska.

(Indorsed:) No. 636. U. S. circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit. William A. Kjellman v. Henry Rogers. Affidavit of C. L. Vawter. Filed January 16, 1901. F. D. Monckton, clerk.

I, Frank D. Monckton, clerk of the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true, and correct copy of affidavit of C. L. Vawter, filed in the cause entitled William A. Kjellman, Appellant, vs. Henry Rogers, No. 636, as the original thereof remains and appears of record in my office.

Attest my hand and the seal of said circuit court of appeals at San Francisco, California, this 17th day of January, A. D. 1901.

[COURT SEAL.] F. D. MONCKTON, Clerk.
[10-c. I. R. stamp.]

Mr. STEWART. It appears that some of these parties were able to appeal. They applied, as this record shows, to Judge Noyes to allow an appeal. He refused to allow an appeal in the most emphatic terms. It went to the circuit court of appeals at San Francisco. That court allowed the appeal and set aside Judge Noyes's order taking the property from the defendants and ordered it turned back into the possession of the defendants. The receiver, McKenzie, refused to obey this order.

When the Army was ordered to assist the circuit court in executing the order and take the property and give it to the defendants, Judge Noyes then directed the marshal to take possession of it, and a more terrible record never was exhibited than is shown in this opinion of Judge Ross.

Judge Ross is well known. He has been on the district bench of California for the past twenty-five or thirty years. No man stands higher or is more respected. He never was accused of wrongdoing. He is a man of great learning and integrity, and this is his opinion. I think the Senate ought to hear this opinion read. It sets forth the Nome transaction in such a light as would make any honest man blush. I will ask for the reading of this opinion or I will read it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will not the Senator consent to have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. STEWART. Is there objection to reading it?

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the Senator from Nevada if that is not the opinion which was published in the Post a few mornings ago.

Mr. STEWART. It was published in part in the Post.

Mr. BUTLER. I read it with interest. Is it not sufficient to put it in the RECORD? It was published in the Post and I read it.

Mr. STEWART. I will have it printed in the RECORD, but I will call attention to one or two points.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask whether or not the offenses charged against Judge Noyes are of such a character as to warrant his impeachment?

Mr. STEWART. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LINDSAY. Then, ought we to be trying him before he is impeached?

Mr. STEWART. We are not trying him.

Mr. LINDSAY. I think we are.

Mr. STEWART. Just let me read a few lines and I will show you what is the condition of affairs going on at Cape Nome.

Mr. LINDSAY. I know it. I have read it all.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I will give you a moment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I want to make one suggestion. The Senator must know that it is utterly impossible for this matter to be disposed of and considered by the Senate now. There are but three or four days of this session remaining, and there are a number of appropriation bills that are matters of great public importance. So I hope Senators will allow the appropriation bills to go on and the public business to proceed.

Mr. STEWART. That is all very well, but I shall get through in a few minutes. It is important that the Senate and the country should know of the conditions at Cape Nome and know what is the situation there. There are thirty or forty mining claims which have been enjoined and put into the hands of receivers, and many of the miners are unable to appeal owing to the great distance from the appellate court, and some of those people have no money to appeal.

But suppose that they should go to trial before Judge Noyes, who has been fixing it all up; if they should get judgment, they would have no redress, for the mines would be all worked out. I say again if Senators would go into that mining district and see the methods which are being used by the judge in enjoining mining claims and putting them in the hands of his associate, his receiver, without notice to anybody, and confiscating the property of men in that far-off country, not one of them would tolerate or apologize for such a condition of things.

A receiver should never be appointed in mining cases except where it is necessary to protect the property, and placer mines should not be put in the hands of a receiver at all. There is no precedent for so doing. If there is any doubt about a particular title, an injunction is a complete and proper remedy. But here is a case where a whole district has been gone over in this way, where nearly all the mining property has been put into the hands of one man as a receiver, and we are told that there is no corruption about that. The decision of the court of appeals at San Francisco, rendered by Judge Ross, stigmatized this proceeding as shocking and "to have no parallel in the jurisprudence of this country."

I say that taking possession of a whole mining district by means of injunctions and a receiver, without a hearing, is a more high-handed outrage than has ever been perpetrated under Spanish rule in any country. The more you know about this Nome scandal the more you will be shocked at it. It is now sought to whitewash this man Noyes. Think of the defense made by himself, that bullying defense, in the letter read by the Senator from North Dakota. It is in keeping with all his conduct.

Mr. SHOUP. Is the Senator through?

Mr. STEWART. I will ask that the decision of the circuit court of appeals be printed in the RECORD, and also the statement of Mr. Dunham, one of the victims. Let that also go into the RECORD.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall object to the printing of the statement in the RECORD. The Senator will have to read it himself if it is to go into the RECORD. There has been perjury enough already in this matter.

Mr. STEWART. A lot of affidavits have already been put in the RECORD by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not object to the opinion of the court being printed in the RECORD, but I do object to your machine-made affidavits.

Mr. STEWART. Then I will put the opinion of the court in the RECORD, and I will read part of the statement made by Mr. Dunham.

The opinion of the court is as follows:

In the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit. John I. Tornanses, appellant, vs. L. F. Melsing et al., respondents. William A. Kjellman, appellant, vs. Henry Rogers, respondent. Filed February 11, 1901.

OPINION AND JUDGMENT.

Page, McCutchen, Harding, and Knight for appellants.
Thomas J. Geary and A. C. Severance, for respondent Alexander McKenzie.
Before Gilbert, Ross, and Morrow, circuit judges.
Ross, circuit judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The proceedings now before the court in the above-entitled cases grow out of the alleged disobedience by one Alexander McKenzie of certain writs of supersedeas issued out of this court upon the order of Hon. William W. Morrow, one of its judges. They have been argued and submitted together, and will be so considered. Each case originated in the United States district court for the second division of the district of Alaska, of which Arthur H. Noyes is the judge, George V. Borchsenius the clerk, and C. E. Dickey a deputy clerk. Placer mining claim known as No. 10 Above Discovery, on Anvil Creek, a tributary to Snake River, was the subject of controversy in the action of Melsing et al. vs. Tornanses, and placer mining claim No. 2 Below Discovery, on the same creek, was the subject of contention in the action of Rogers vs. Kjellman.

Both claims are situated within the Cape Nome mining district of Alaska. The act of Congress under which Judge Noyes was appointed was approved June 6, 1900 (31 Stat., L, 321). In its fourth section it is provided that: "The judge designated to preside over division No. 2 (within which division is the Cape Nome mining district) shall reside at St. Michaels during his term of office, and shall hold at least one term of court each year at St. Michaels, in the district, beginning the third Monday in June."

It is further provided in the fourth section that each of the three judges provided for by the act "is authorized and directed to hold such special terms of court as may be necessary for the public welfare or for the dispatch of the business of the court, at such times and places in the district as they or any of them, respectively, may deem expedient, or as the Attorney-General may direct;" and that "at least thirty days' notice shall be given by the judge or the clerk of the time and place of holding special terms of the court."

It is not pretended that Judge Noyes held any term of the court at St. Michaels in June, or that any notice was given by him or the clerk of the court of the holding of a special term thereof at Nome, or elsewhere, prior to the acts out of which the present proceedings arise. On the contrary, it appears from the records and proofs on file in this court that the steamer on which Judge Noyes went from the city of Seattle, Wash., to Alaska did not reach the roadstead of Nome until July 19, 1900, and that he did not go ashore until Saturday, July 21.

Two days thereafter, to wit, Monday, July 23, he signed orders appointing Alexander McKenzie receiver of said placer mining claims, with directions to take immediate possession thereof and to manage, mine, and work the same; to preserve the gold, gold dust, and proceeds resulting from the working and mining of the claims, and to dispose of the same subject to the further orders of the court; and further ordering the persons then in possession of the claims to deliver to the receiver their immediate possession, control, and management, and expressly enjoining them from in any manner interfering with the mining or working of the claims by the receiver, or with his control or management thereof.

The amount of the bond required by the judge of the receiver was $5,000 in each case. These orders were signed at the same time, and the circumstances under which they were made appear in the proceedings of the court of August 3, 1900, on the motion of counsel for the parties against whom they were directed, made for their annulment on July 24. We extract from the record in the case of Melsing et al. vs. Tornanses, precisely similar proceedings appearing also in the case of Rogers vs. Kjellman:

Upon the hearing of the applications to set aside appointments of receiver in the Anvil Creek cases Mr. Knight, of counsel for defendant, after reading affidavits in support of his application, continued as follows:

In addition, if the Court please, to these affidavits we desire to introduce the records of the court in this case, and if Mr. Dickey is here, I desire to call him as a witness.

The COURT. I believe Mr. Dickey is inside.

Mr. KNIGHT. I desire to call Mr. Dickey with reference to the filing of these papers.

(It is ascertained that Mr. Dickey is not in.)

The COURT. The records are here; can you use them instead?

Mr. KNIGHT. I desire to prove, if the court please, that the papers were not filed in this case until after an order had been made appointing a receiver; and further, that no process was issued at that time, or summons, and that so far as I know it has not been issued at the present time.

Mr. HUME. So far as the plaintiff is concerned, the papers were delivered to the clerk to be filed, all at the same time.

Mr. KNIGHT. The summons has not been served on any of our people.

Mr. HUME. So far as I know, the summons has not been served in any of these cases. Preparation was made to serve the summons, but the defendants came into court the next morning, and the question of the propriety of their appearance here before answer coming up, personal service has been delayed until the court should pass upon that matter. We have been getting the papers ready to serve each and every person interested with a copy of the complaint.

Mr. KNIGHT. I wish simply to make the point that the papers were not filed before the order was issued.

The COURT. All the papers were before the court; they were left here.

Mr. KNIGHT. But my point is that they were not filed until after the order appointing the receiver was made, and that the order was made before process issued. I think your honor will agree as to the fact that the bill of complaint was presented to your honor on the afternoon of the 23d day of July, 1900, and that your honor thereafter made an order appointing a receiver, and the papers were subsequently that evening handed to the deputy clerk of the court for filing, but that no process was issued in the cases in which I now appear—that is, in the cases involving No. 2 below, Nos. 10 and 11 above, and No. 1 Nakkela. Mr. Hume, is that correct?

Mr. HUME. Well, of course, as to the time they were filed, we can agree to this fact—that all the papers, the affidavits, and bills of complaint and summons, were all presented here to the court. They were not presented to the clerk. We couldn't find the clerk at that time; he had no office. They were presented to the court and left with the court. All the papers were left with the court, and the clerk was to file them, but he, being out some place, we were unable to find him, and he having no special office, we presumed they were not filed until later. Everything was in confusion then, and we simply left the papers with the court; that is all we could do.

The COURT. I remember this, that the papers were here on the table, and I called Mr. Dickey's attention to them.

Mr. KNIGHT. After the order had been made?

The COURT. Oh, yes.

Mr. KNIGHT. It is agreed further, then, that no process has yet issued in this case?

Mr. HUME. I think the summons has been issued. I know it was made out.

Mr. KNIGHT. But no process has been placed in the hands of an officer for service?

Mr. HUME. No; I think not. I think not placed in the hands of an officer.

The COURT. I think you will find as a matter of record that the summons has been issued.

Mr. KNIGHT. As far as the issuance of process is concerned, the records will speak for themselves.

It thus appears that the injunctions and orders appointing a receiver of the claims in question were made before the organization of the court, without notice of any character, and before any paper of any kind had been placed on the files of the court—assuming the court to have been organized and in condition for the transaction of business.

Not only so, but the injunction granted and the appointment of the receiver in the case of Rogers vs. Kjellman was based upon a pleading which is without a single allegation of an equitable nature. That pleading alleges only the citizenship of the plaintiff Rogers and the alienage of the defendant Kjellman; the competency of the plaintiff to make locations under the mining laws of the United States; his discovery of gold on, and his location of claim No. 2 Below Discovery, on Anvil Creek, on the 6th day of June, 1899; his marking of its boundaries in accordance with the statutes of the United States and with the local rules of the mining district within which it is situated, and the recordation of notice of the location in the office of the recorder of the district; the possession of the claim by the plaintiff until his dispossession by the defendant on or about July 1, 1899; the withholding thereof by the defendant ever since, and the extraction therefrom by the defendant and others under him of $100,000 in gold and gold dust, to the damage of the plaintiff in that sum and the right of the plaintiff to a restitution of the possession of the claim. The prayer is only for such restitution of possession of the property and for $100,000 damages and for costs.

In other words, the complaint in the case of Rogers v. Kjellman, upon which the judge granted an injunction and appointed a receiver, was an ordinary complaint in ejectment, without a single allegation of even an equitable nature. It is true there was presented to the judge at the same time the affidavit of the plaintiff, Rogers, and the affidavit of one Charles Cooper, in which they swore, in substance, that the defendant Kjellman was not a citizen of the United States and had never declared his intention to become such; had never located or marked the claim in question in accordance with law, but had extracted therefrom during the mining season of 1899 gold to the amount of $100,000 and removed the same beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and that his servants and assigns were then in the possession of and working the claim, whose only value consisted of the gold it contained, and, if allowed, would continue to work the claim and extract therefrom $5,000 a day and appropriate the same to their own use in fraud of the plaintiff's rights.

In the case of Melsing et al. v. Tornanses, the order granting the injunction and appointing the receiver was based upon an unverified bill praying for an injunction and an order appointing a receiver, supported by the affidavits of one T. H. Downing and one E. W. Bacon. L. F. Melsing, H. L. Blake, D. B. Libby, W. T. Hume, and O. P. Hubbard are the complainants in that bill and John I. Tornanses is the sole defendant thereto, although it appears in more than one place in its body that the complainants contemplated naming other parties also as defendants.

In the bill it is, among other things, alleged "that the complainant L. F. Melsing has begun an action at law against the defendant herein to recover the possession of the premises herein described, a copy of which complaint is attached to this bill and made a part hereof; that in order to preserve the rights of the complainant in said action at law and in said placer-mining claim pending the termination of said action at law, to prevent the extraction of gold from said claim and the appropriation thereof by defendants his lessees, agents, servants, employees, and grantees, and preserve the said property and the gold extracted therefrom, it is necessary, proper, and convenient that a receiver should be appointed by this honorable court to take possession of, charge of, and care for said claim, and to hold, operate, and mine and control the same, under the orders of this honorable court, until the termination of said action at law; that the complainants H. L. Blake, D. B. Libby, O. P. Hubbard, and W. T. Hume are grantees, for a valuable consideration, of the said complainant L. F. Melsing of an undivided interest each in said placer-mining claim, and are the owners of a substantial and undivided interest in the land and premises hereinbefore described, alleged, and designated as said Placer Mining Claim No. 10 above Discovery, on Anvil Creek."

The record shows that the complaint in the action at law thus spoken of was verified by Melsing on the 25th day of August, 1899, and is entitled in the district court of the United States for the district of Alaska, which court was abolished by the act of Congress of June 6, 1900. (31 Stat. L., 321.) That complaint, however, appears from the record to have been filed in the district court for the district of Alaska, second division, created by the last-mentioned act of Congress, at the time the bill in the case of Melsing et al. v. Tornanses was filed therein, together with an affidavit of Melsing, made by him on the 25th day of August, 1899, evidently to be used in some way in connection with the action at law entitled in the abolished court.

The bill in the case of Melsing et al. vs. Tornanses further alleges that on the 11th day of March, 1899, Melsing discovered gold in the ground known as said placer-mining claim No. 10 Above Discovery, and, being at the time competent to do so, located the ground under the mining laws of the United States, marking the boundaries thereof in accordance with law and recording the notice of the location in the office of the recorder of the district in which the claim is situated, and took peaceable possession thereof; that thereafter, and on or about May 1, 1899, the defendant Tornanses wrongfully and forcibly, by himself and others under him, ejected Melsing from the premises and took possession of the claim, and has ever since withheld its possession from him; that during the mining season of 1899 the defendant worked the said claim and extracted therefrom gold of the value of at least $150,000, and at the opening of the season of 1900 commenced and still continues the working of the claim, thereby extracting therefrom each day gold and gold dust of the value of at least $5,000, all of which the defendant Tornanses, his lessees and grantees, have appropriated to their own use and benefit to the injury of the complainants and in fraud of their rights; that the ground is valuable only for the gold it contains, and that the defendant Tornanses, his agents, lessees, and grantees, are insolvent, and that the defendant Tornanses is an alien and has never declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States. This bill, as has been said, was never verified.

The affidavits of Downing and Bacon, presented in support of the bill, are only to the effect that in July, 1900 (that of Bacon fixing the date as the 19th of that month), they saw working upon claim No. 10 Above Discovery a large number of men, under, as they were informed and believe, the defendant or his assigns or grantees, and that the claim was being unskillfully worked, with the object of taking only the richest pay dirt without regard to the manner in which the claim would be left thereafter, and that the continuation of such work in that manner would destroy the value of the claim.

The affidavit of Bacon further states that he was informed by the men at work that they were getting gold therefrom at the rate of a dollar a shovel, and that in addition to the work by hand the persons working the ground had a steam plant in operation thereon for the purpose of expediting the extraction of the gold contained therein, and that the pay dirt was then so exposed as to be easily sluiced and worked when there should be sufficient water in Anvil Creek, and that when there should be more water in the creek the parties then working the ground "could take thousands of dollars out of said claim, and virtually destroy the same for sale or proper operation unless restrained by order of the court."

It was upon the showing here stated and under the circumstances above detailed that Judge Noyes, on the 23d day of July, 1900, signed the orders granting the injunctions and appointing the receiver of the mining claims in question, who at once took possession of them. On the 24th day of July, 1900, in the case of Melsing et al. vs. Tornanses, and on the 30th day of July, 1900, in the case of Rogers vs. Kjellman, the parties claiming under Tornanses and Kjellman moved the court to vacate these orders, supporting the motions by the notices of location of the respective claims by Tornanses and Kjellman, by their respective deeds of conveyance, and by numerous affidavits.

The notice of location by Kjellman of claim No. 2 Below Discovery described the claim, set forth the discovery of gold thereon on the 22d day of September, 1898, and its location on that day, and appears to have been witnessed by John Brynteson and Erik O. Lindblom, and was filed for record at 12 o'clock noon on October 12, 1898, with A. N. Kittelsen, recorder of the mining district. The notice of location by Tornanses of claim No. 10 Above Discovery was similar and purported to have been witnessed by G. W. Price and A. N. Kittilsen, M. D., and filed for record at 12 o'clock noon on October 18, 1898.

The deeds thus presented to the court were conveyances from those original locators, for a valuable consideration, to Charles D. Lane of their interests in the claims. The affidavits presented in support of the motions to vacate the orders referred to set forth, among other things, that Tornanses was the first locator of the aforesaid claim No. 10 Above Discovery, and that Kjellman was the first locator of the aforesaid claim No. 2 Below Discovery; that prior to the respective locations gold was discovered by the locator in the ground located, and that in making each of said locations the boundaries thereof were so marked upon the ground that they could be readily traced, and that from the time of their location each of the claims was in the possession of the locator and his successors in interest, and during each working season thereafter was mined for gold in a proper, miner-like way; that the conveyance of those claims to Lane was made to him for and on behalf of the Wild Goose Mining and Trading Company, a corporation—that of the aforesaid claim No. 2 Below Discovery on the 9th day of September, 1899, and that of the aforesaid claim No. 10 Above Discovery on the 18th day of September, 1899, since which time neither Kjellman nor Tornanses have never had possession of or control over either of said claims, but that both of them thereupon departed from the United States, and neither has ever returned, and that the property has since been held and worked by Lane and those holding under him, and was so worked and held at the time of the initiation of these cases. The affidavits on behalf of the moving parties also deny the alleged insolvency of Lane and those holding under him, and, on the contrary, aver that both Lane and the Wild Goose Mining and Trading Company are amply able to respond in any damages that may be recovered against them.

In each case the district court, on the 10th day of August, 1900, made and entered an order denying the motion so made to vacate the order granting the injunction and appointing the receiver, and on the 14th day of August, 1900, counsel for the defendants in each case petitioned the court for an order allowing an appeal from the order granting the injunction and appointing the receiver, at the time presenting to the court a proper bond on appeal, together with an assignment of errors and a proposed bill of exceptions for settlement and allowance, in response to which the judge, on the 15th day of August, 1900, made an order in each case "that said proposed bill of exceptions is in each and every part thereof disallowed as a bill of exceptions herein, and the settlement thereof, or of any proposed bill of exceptions herein, is hereby refused; that said petition for an order allowing said appeal is hereby denied, and said judge declines to accept or fix the amount of any bond for costs thereof, or allow a supersedeas bond to be given, or fix the amount thereof.

Dated NOME, ALASKA, August 15, 1900.

"ARTHUR H. NOYES, Judge."

On the same day, to wit, August 15, 1900, the judge made and entered the following order in each case:

"Now, at this time, comes the plaintiff by his attorneys, Hubbard, Beeman & Hume, and Dudley Du Bose, and moves the court for an additional and further order in the matter of the appointment of Alexander McKenzie as receiver in the above-entitled suit, and the court being fully advised in the premises:

It is further ordered that in addition to the powers and authorities already granted the receiver appointed, the said receiver is hereby ordered to take possession of the placer claim mentioned in the complaint herein, and all sluice boxes, dams, excavations, machinery, pipe, boarding houses, tents, buildings, safes, scales, and all other personal property fixed or movable on the said placer claim; also all gold, gold dust, precious metals, money, books of account, and each and all personal property upon the said claim connected therewith, and in any way appertaining thereto, in possession of and under the control of the defendant, his lessees, grantees, assigns, employees; and all and every person in possession of the said claim or claiming any right, title, or interest in and to the said placer claim or any gold dust therein or any personal property thereon of any nature whatsoever, are hereby ordered to deliver the same to the said receiver, and are hereby restrained from interfering with the said receiver in quiet and peaceable possession of the same, or any agent that the said receiver may designate to take possession thereof.

It is further ordered that this order shall revoke all and any order in conflict herewith, and does hereby revoke the same; and

It is further ordered that this order shall remain in full force and effect until further order of this court.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order shall be served upon any person in possession of or claiming possession of the property described.

Done in chambers this 15th day of August, 1900.

ARTHUR H. NOYES, Judge.

For this sweeping order against any and every person, whether a party to the suit or not, and this express requirement of the receiver to take possession, among other things, of all sluice boxes, machinery, pipe, boarding houses, tents, safes, scales, money, books of account, and all other personal property upon the claims, of whatsoever kind or nature, no basis of any kind appears from the records which have been brought here upon certiorari to have been presented to the court below, although the order recites upon its face that the court was "fully advised in the premises."

Nor does it appear that the slightest attention was paid to an express provision of the very statute under which the court was created and existed, in terms prohibiting the appointment of a receiver in any action for the recovery of specific personal property (Alaska Code, sec. 753), nor to sections 301 or 475 of the same code, which provide as follows:

"SEC. 301. Any person who has a legal estate in real property, and a present right to the possession thereof, may recover such possession, with damages for withholding the same, by an action. Such action shall be commenced against the person in the actual possession of the property at the time, or, if the property be not in the actual possession of anyone, then against the person acting as the owner thereof."

"SEC. 475. Any person in possession, by himself or his tenant, of real property, may maintain an action of an equitable nature against another who claims an estate or interest therein adverse to him for the purpose of determining such claim, estate, or interest."

It will be observed from these provisions that by the code governing Alaska an action of ejectment is required to be brought "against the person in the actual possession of the property at the time, or if the property be not in the actual possession of anyone, then against the person acting as the owner thereof;" and that the right to maintain an equitable action for the purpose of determining an adverse claim is only given to one in possession by himself or his tenant.

The successors in interest of the defendants to the suits having thus been denied an appeal from the orders granting the injunctions and appointing a receiver, not only of the mining claims in question, but of their personal property as well, with directions to the receiver to extract from the claims the gold which constituted their sole value, the defendants applied, with all speed possible, to a judge of this court for the allowance of the appeals which had been denied them in Alaska.

The judge of this court, to whom the applications were made, and upon a showing embracing much of this shocking record, at once granted the appeals, requiring and approving a supersedeas bond in each case in the sum of $20,000, and thereupon ordered a writ of supersedeas to issue out of this court under its seal, in each case; and, in writing, approved the form thereof, staying all proceedings under the orders granting the injunctions and appointing the receiver, and further ordering the receiver to at once restore to the defendants from whom he had taken them the said mining claims, together with the gold, gold dust, and other personal property received by him under the orders appealed from.

Certified copies of the order allowing the appeal in each case, together with certified copies of the assignment of errors and of the bond, were, with the original writ of supersedeas and the original citation in each case, filed in the lower court on the 14th day of September, 1900, and copies thereof at once served upon the Receiver McKenzie and a demand made upon him for the restitution of the property in accordance with the writs.

The evidence taken upon the hearing of these proceedings is to the effect, and we so find the fact to be, that the respondent McKenzie thereupon refused and continued to refuse to restore, in accordance with the requirements of the writs of supersedeas, the gold, gold dust, and other personal property received by him under the orders of the trial court, and that fact being made to appear to this court by affidavits on the 1st day of October, 1900, and it further being then made to appear to this court that the last steamer for the season would leave the city of Seattle for Nome within a few days, and that no further communication could be had with that section of the country until the spring or early summer of 1901, this court thereupon made an order directing its marshal to proceed to Nome, enforce its writs of supersedeas, arrest the offending receiver and produce him at the bar of this court. The evidence taken upon the hearing of these proceedings is also to the effect, and we so find the fact to be, that the respondent McKenzie at all times had it within his power to comply with the requirements of the writs of supersedeas issued out of this court; that he contumaceously refused to restore the gold, gold dust, and other personal property to the defendants, as required by those writs, and has continued such refusal ever since.

It is said by counsel for the respondent McKenzie that the action of Judge Noyes in refusing to allow the appeals petitioned for and in refusing to settle any bill of exceptions was based upon the opinion that no appeal is allowed by law from the orders made by him, and it is here so contended.

Provision is made by section 504 of the Alaska Code for the taking and prosecution of an appeal from the final judgment of the district court for the district of Alaska, or any division thereof, direct to the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases within which the present cases do not come, and it is then provided "that in all other cases, where the amount involved or the value of the subject-matter exceeds the sum of $5,000, the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit shall have jurisdiction to review upon writ of error or appeal the final judgment (and) orders of the district court."

And section 507 of the same code declares that "an appeal may be taken to the circuit court of appeals from any interlocutory order granting or dissolving an injunction, refusing to grant or dissolve an injunction, made or rendered in any cause pending before the district court within sixty days after the entry of such interlocutory order. The proceedings in other respects in the district court in the cause in which such interlocutory order was made shall not be stayed during the pendency of such appeal, unless otherwise ordered by the district court."

Leaving out of consideration the last-quoted section, which in express terms authorizes an appeal from an order granting an injunction and without considering the right of the defendants to the suits in question to thus have reviewed the orders enjoining them from working the mining claims involved in them, and as a necessary incident the right of the court to appoint a receiver of the property claimed by them, we think we may safely rest the jurisdiction of this court to review those orders upon section 504 of the Alaska code, above referred to.

And it is for this court, subject to review of its action by the Supreme Court, to determine whether it may entertain jurisdiction of the cause removed and to dispose of controversies in respect to the form of its writs, the parties, the citation, and their service, without interference from any other court. (In re Chetworth, 165 U. S., 443.) Courts take judicial notice of the general physical and climatic condition of the country within their jurisdiction. We therefore know judicially, as well as from the record in these cases, that the sole value of the mining claims in question consisted in the mineral contained in them.

The extraction of that is, therefore, the taking of the very substance of the estate, and when all of it is removed nothing of value will remain in the claims. In the case of a vein or lode mine, with tunnels, drifts, and shafts in which there are timbers to be placed, replaced, or repaired, or water to be controlled, it sometimes happens that the appointment of a receiver becomes necessary to take possession of and operate the mine pending the litigation, in order to preserve the property; but even in that class of cases the necessity for a receiver is not of frequent occurrence.

This is well shown in the case of Bigbee vs. Summerour (101 Ga., 201, 228; S. E. Rep., 642). So, too, in the case of placer-mining claims, valuable only for the oil contained in them, where it becomes necessary for the proper preservation of the claim that the ground be worked to prevent its substance from being drawn off by the operation of wells on adjoining ground, or where it is shown that a receiver is necessary in order that the annual work required by law may be performed for the benefit of the party who may ultimately be adjudged entitled to the ground.

But nothing of that sort is shown to have existed with respect to the claims here involved. Here the gold in the claim would have remained as safe as it was during all the ages it had been there, and an injunction (assuming a proper showing for one to have been made) staying the working of the claims pending the litigation would have perfectly preserved the property for whomsoever might be ultimately adjudged to be entitled to it. The value of mining property of every character, like the value of any other kind of property, largely depends upon the manner in which it is operated. Many good mines prove unprofitable because of loose management or extravagant methods of working them.

The successors in interest of the defendant to the suits in which this receiver was appointed were in possession of the claims under a claim of right, and were engaged in mining the ground on a large scale and had been so engaged during the working season of the year 1899, as well as that of the then current season of 1900. They may, therefore, be properly presumed to have been, at least, somewhat familiar with the proper working of placer claims. But there is no evidence that the respondent ever saw a placer or any other kind of mining claim before he was appointed receiver of these and, at least, two other similar claims on the 23d day of July, 1900.

It is in evidence in at least one of the contempt proceedings now pending before us against McKenzie that, shortly before going to Alaska, he caused to be organized a corporation called the Alaska Gold Mining Company, with a capital stock of $15,000,000, a majority of which he held, and that, having placed a portion of the remainder where he thought it would stand him in good stead, he proceeded with Judge Noyes to Nome, arriving there on Saturday, July 21, 1900, and on Monday, July 23, before the court was organized and before the filing of any paper of any character with the clerk of the court, was appointed by Judge Noyes receiver of at least four of the richest claims in the district of Nome, upon complaints made by persons the interest therein of at least one of whom had theretofore been acquired by the receiver's corporation, the Alaska Gold Mining Company.

It has been already seen that the orders under which this was done in the present cases directed the receiver to take possession of and mine the claims in question, and enjoined the parties then in possession from in any manner interfering with the claims or with the acts of the receiver. It has been seen also that in the case of Rogers vs. Kjellman this was done upon a complaint which did not even ask for the appointment of a receiver or for such injunction, and in the case of Melsing et al. vs. Tornanses that the only relief that was asked was the granting of an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, all of which was granted by the court by the orders made by it on July 23, 1900.

We have no hesitation in holding that an order by which a placer mining claim, whose proper preservation in no respect requires it, is taken from one who is in the actual possession thereof and turned over to a receiver, with instructions to extract from it its only value, is in effect a final decree and appealable as such, for its entire value may be thus destroyed by improper working or extravagant management or by the extraction of all its mineral, while he from whom it is taken and who asserts a right to it may prefer to work the claim to a limited extent only, or in a particular manner, or not at all. He may prefer to hold it for sale or other disposition; yet, under such orders as are here involved, the operations of the receiver of necessity constantly exhausts the very substance of the property and may speedily render it absolutely worthless.

Surely the authority, by whatever name called, under which such a result may be wrought is, in effect, a final judgment. As was said by the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit in Potter v. Beal (50 Fed. Rep., 63), the determination of the question as to what is or is not a final decree "is to be governed by the essence of what is done and not by the appellation given to it." In the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company case (129 U. S., 206) it was held that an order allowing a receiver of a mortgaged railroad to issue certificates which should be preferred to the mortgage was a final decree in effect and appealable.

In the case of Sharon v. Sharon (67 Cal., 215) the supreme court of California held that an order made pendente lite, directing the payment of alimony in a divorce suit, is in the nature of a final decree and appealable as such. (See also the Tampa Railway Company case, 168 U. S., 583, 588, and Iron Co. v. Meeker, 109 U. S., 180.) A mine is, as was held in Bigbee v. Summerour, supra, destroyed as such, as fast as the mineral is taken out; so that the necessary effect of the orders in question was to gradually, and perhaps rapidly, destroy the mining claims, and, as a matter of course, the personal property embraced by the orders would necessarily perish by use.

The remaining points urged on behalf of the respondent may be briefly disposed of. It is contended that in order to give effect to the orders made by Judge Morrow allowing the appeals it was essential to file the original orders in the lower court. Only certified copies of those orders were so filed; but the original citation and the original writ of supersedeas were filed in the lower court in these cases, together with certified copies of the assignment of errors and of the supersedeas bond. All of these papers were filed in the district court September 14, 1900. That that was sufficient to give effect to the appeal has been expressly decided by the Supreme Court in two cases—Brown vs. McConnell (124 U. S., 489) and Stewart vs. Masterson, (Id., 493).

Section 1007 of the Revised Statutes declares:

"In any case where a writ of error may be a supersedeas, the defendant may obtain such supersedeas by serving the writ of error, by lodging a copy thereof for the adverse party in the clerk's office where the record remains, within sixty days, Sundays exclusive, after the rendering of the judgment complained of, and giving the security required by law on the issuing of the citation. But if he desires to stay process on the judgment, he may, having served his writ of error as aforesaid, give the security required by law within sixty days after the rendition of such judgment, or afterwards, with the permission of a justice or a judge of the appellate court. And in such cases where a writ of error may be a supersedeas, execution shall not issue until the expiration of (the said term of sixty) (ten) days."

It is contended that the supersedeas thus provided for by statute does not require the restoration to the defendants, pending the appeal, of any property taken by the receiver. Let that be admitted, and the fact remains that, in each of these cases, Judge Morrow ordered a writ of supersedeas to be issued out of this court, under its seal, and, in writing, approved the form of the writs, each of which required the receiver, among other things, to restore to the possession of the defendants the personal property he had taken from them, together with the gold and gold dust extracted by him as such receiver from the claims. It is said that a single judge of this court can not grant a writ of supersedeas. Sections 1000 and 1007 of the Revised Statutes, the case In re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200, rule 36 of the Supreme Court, and section 11 of the act, approved March 3, 1891, creating this court, conclusively answer this objection.

By section 11 of the circuit court of appeals act it is, among other things, provided that "any judge of the circuit court of appeals, in respect of cases brought or to be brought to that court, shall have the same powers and duties as to the allowance of appeals or writs of error and the conditions of such allowance as now by law belong to the justices or judges in respect of the existing courts of the United States respectively."

In the case In re Claasen, supra, the Supreme Court held that a justice of the Supreme Court was authorized to grant a supersedeas, saying, "By section 1000 of the Revised Statutes it is provided that every justice or judge signing a citation on any writ of error shall take security for the prosecution of the writ, and for costs, where the writ is not to be a supersedeas and stay of execution, and for damages and costs where it is to be. In a criminal case there are no damages, and in such a case, the United States being a party, it is provided by subdivision 4 of rule 24 of this court that in cases where the United States are a party no costs shall be allowed in this court for or against the United States.

Section 1007 of the Revised Statutes provides for the manner in which a supersedeas may be obtained on a writ of error. It is by serving the writ of error, by lodging a copy thereof for the adverse party in the clerk's office where the record remains within sixty days, Sundays exclusive, after the rendering of the judgment complained of, and giving the security required by law on the issuing of the citation. But as there is no security required in a criminal case, the supersedeas may be obtained by merely serving the writ within the time prescribed, without giving any security, provided the justice who signs the citation directs that the writ shall operate as a supersedeas, which he may do when no security is required or taken.

We hold, therefore, that the allowance of the supersedeas in the present case was proper, and we deny the motion to set it aside.

To remove all doubt on the subject, however, in future cases we have adopted a general rule, which is promulgated as rule 36 of this court (see 139 U. S., 706), and which embraces, also, the power to admit the defendant to bail after the citation is served.

The rule thus referred to and adopted by the Supreme Court will be found in 139 United States, 706, and is as follows:

"1. An appeal or a writ of error from a circuit court or a district court direct to this court, in the cases provided for in sections 5 and 6 of the act entitled 'An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, may be allowed, in term time or in vacation, by any justice of this court, or by any circuit judge within his circuit, or by any district judge within his district, and the proper security be taken and the citation signed by him, and he may also grant a supersedeas and stay of execution or of proceedings pending such a writ of error or appeal."

It is further contended that the scope of the writs was too broad, in that, in the first place, they went beyond the orders of Judge Morrow, and, in the second place, that it was beyond the power of the court to require the receiver to restore the property taken by him. It is true that the orders first made by Judge Morrow did not in terms direct the receiver so to restore the property, but in each case that judge subsequently, and on the same day, made an order expressly approving the form of the writs requiring such restoration.

If it be conceded that the scope of the writs was too broad, it was not for the receiver to ignore their requirements and himself be the judge of that question, but his only proper remedy was a motion to modify the writs. While refusing to obey them he should not be heard to object to their scope. In 2 High on Injunctions, section 1416, it is said that "If defendant is in doubt as to the scope or extent of the injunction, he should not be left to disregard or violate it, with a view of testing such questions, but should apply to the court for a modification or construction of its order."

The same rule is applicable to a receiver. (See, also, Wells, Fargo & Co. vs. Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, 19 Fed. Rep., 20; Ullman vs. Ritter, 72 Fed. Rep., 1000, 1003; Maginnis vs. Parkhurst, 4 N. J. Eq. Rep., 433, 436.) But the point itself is, we think, untenable. In the leading case upon the subject, that of The State vs. Johnson, 13 Florida, 33, 48, it is said: "The allowance of a supersedeas does not, nor does the order in this case, 'undo' or reverse the order of the circuit judge. The order, following the intent and effect of the law, in terms directs a stay of all proceedings under the several orders appealed from, and suspends their operation.

"The power of the circuit court was suspended, and thereby the power of all the officers in that court, under its orders in question, became inoperative. They no longer had any duties to perform under such orders. The authority of the receiver to continue to act as such was made nugatory by the operation of the law. He had entered upon an office and commenced to act, when the office was suspended. The supersedeas as understood by us, and as seems to be understood by the courts, does of necessity retroact by suspending the life of the order appealed from; reaches back to that order and forbids action under it.

"It does not make unlawful an act done in pursuance of the order before the appeal was taken, but it forbids the court and its officers further to act. No new rights having been created, and the duties of the receiver being superseded, the bond standing in the place of the property in his hands, and he having been notified thereof by proper process, it was his duty to restore that which had come to his hands to the parties from whom it had been taken and withheld; for his authority to take, being inoperative by the suspension, his authority to hold was equally so, both being derived from the same order."

The case of State vs. Johnson has been several times approved. (Buckley vs Georgia, 71 Miss., 580; Farmers' Nat. Bank vs. Backus, 63 Minn., 115. See also Everett vs. State, 28 Md., 190; Freeman on Ex., 2 ed., sec. 271a, p. 876; High on Receivers, 3d ed., sec. 190, p. 164; 20 Am. and Eng. Ency. L., 110.)

In the last edition (Anderson's) of Beach on Receivers, page 129, section 117, it is said that "from the authorities and reason there may be legally deduced the following principles, which should govern questions concerning the subject of this section:

* * * * * * *

"2. If a receiver be appointed and takes possession of the property prior to the appeal and supersedeas, the consummation of the appeal with bond and supersedeas gives to the defendant the right to demand and have the property returned to him."

Finally, it is urged that the refusal of the receiver to obey the writs of supersedeas issued out of this court was based on the advice of his counsel that the writs were void. Such advice is never a justification of a contempt, but in proper cases may be considered in mitigation of the offense. (1 Beach on Injunctions, sec. 250; High on Injunctions, sec. 1427; Rogers vs. Pitt, 89 Fed. Rep., 424, and cases there cited.)

The circumstances attending the appointment of the receiver in these cases, however, and his conduct after as well as before the appointment, as shown by the record and evidence, so far from impressing us with the sincerity of the pretension that his refusal to obey the writs issued out of this court was based upon the advice of his counsel that they were void, satisfy us that it was intentional and deliberate, and in furtherance of the highhanded and grossly illegal proceedings initiated almost as soon as Judge Noyes and McKenzie had set foot on Alaskan territory at Nome, and which may be safely and fortunately said to have no parallel in the jurisprudence of this country.

And it speaks well for the good, sober sense of the people gathered on that remote and barren shore that they depended solely upon the courts for the correction of the wrongs thus perpetrated among and against them, which always may be depended upon to right, sooner or later, wrongs properly brought before them. And it is well, in these days of the rapid extension of our national domain, for all persons, whether residing in remote regions or nearer home, to remember that courts which respect themselves and have a due regard for the administration of justice and the maintenance of law and order, will never tolerate any disobedience of their lawful orders, writs, or judgments, wherever committed within their jurisdiction.

"It is inherent in the nature of judicial authority," said the supreme court of Florida in the case of State vs. Johnson, supra, "that every court may protect and maintain its jurisdiction under the law, and that it shall protect itself against all attempts to resist, or thwart, or overthrow its authority. Without the power to judge of its jurisdiction, it is practically without jurisdiction. Without the power to enforce its judgments, it has no judicial authority.

"That it be made the plaything of whomsoever may choose to deride its judgments or its process, and ignore its existence and its acts, because the opinions of the judges and the judgments of the court may not meet the approval of counsel upon the one side or the other of a controversy, or may not be in accordance with the opinions or the wishes of subordinate officers, can not be allowed without surrendering the judicial character and confessing the impotency of this department of the Government.

"Courts commit errors, and parties may suffer from the improvidence or corruption of their judges, yet the remedy for these is not in individual resistance or in a resort to private judgment. Every court will hear the appeals of those who conceive themselves to be wronged or threatened with injustice by the execution of its decrees. If its errors be made apparent, it will do justice to itself by dealing justice to parties without fear and without hesitation. There is no excuse for resistance of the orders of the courts in this country, where their doors are wide open and where every human being may be heard in the presence of the whole people."

In the refusal of the respondent, Alexander McKenzie, to obey the writs of supersedeas issued out of this court, as hereinbefore found and stated, it is now here considered and adjudged that he did commit contempts of this court, and for the said contempt so committed in the case entitled Tornanses vs. Melsing et al. it is now here ordered and adjudged that he, the said Alexander McKenzie, be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Alameda, Cal., for a period of six months, and for the said contempt so committed in the case entitled Kjellman vs. Rogers that he be imprisoned in the jail of the said county for a like period of six months, making one year in all—the sentence imposed in the said last-mentioned case to commence immediately upon the completion of the term of imprisonment under the first sentence herein.

The marshal will execute this judgment forthwith.

United States circuit court of appeals for the Ninth circuit. John I. Tornanses, appellant, vs. L. F. Melsing et al., respondents; William A. Kjellman, appellant, vs. Henry Rogers, respondent. Filed February 12, 1901.

MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT.

Based upon our understanding of the statement of counsel in two of the companion cases against the respondent McKenzie for alleged contempt of the process of this court that all of the pending cases against him had been, in so far as the parties thereto are concerned, settled, and that the respondent had restored to the parties from whom it had been taken the whole of the property in controversy, we so stated in the opinion delivered herein February 11.

The court is now informed that this is a mistake of fact in respect to the present cases, and that in these cases there has been no settlement as respects the parties, and there is no showing of the restoration by the receiver of the property in the above-entitled cases as required by the writs of supersedeas issued out of this court. The paragraph of the opinion of this court rendered February 11 in which the erroneous statement of fact was made will therefore be corrected, and the judgment entered in these cases at the same time will be, and hereby is, so modified as to direct that the respondent pay all the costs of the contempt proceedings herein, to be taxed by the court.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Nevada to give some heed to the appeal which has been made to him by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], that the public business may be proceeded with and that these extraneous private matters be not injected.

Mr. STEWART. That kind of an appeal does not weigh with me under the circumstances at all. Is it not a matter of public business that a whole country is tied up and robbed? That is public business. The miners who have gone up there have been robbed, and their property has been put into the hands of a receiver connected with the judge, and has been taken possession of and is being looted.

Mr. SHOUP. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. STEWART. Regular order, yes. This is regular order.

The more you hear about this matter the more you will want the regular order.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator must be aware that this matter can not be decided here, and that no public good can come from its discussion.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator must be aware that there is not going to be any whitewashing here, if I can prevent it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not attempting any whitewashing. I appeal to the Senator in the interest of public business.

Mr. STEWART. Why did you not appeal to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], who started this discussion?

Mr. ALDRICH. I would appeal to both Senators.

Mr. STEWART. Save your appeal for the other man.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would make an appeal to any Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator want to appeal to me to conceal the infamy at Nome? Does he want to indorse that? Does he want to indorse the taking possession of a whole mining district?

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, if this controversy does not cease, we shall not be able to get through with the public business at this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. SHOUP. I wish——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada refuses to yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. STEWART. I will not be taken off my feet. I would have finished long ere this if I had not been interfered with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada refuses to yield.

Mr. STEWART. I read from the statement of a gentleman who was sent up to Alaska as census supervisor, and who is a man of reputation and character. He knows the situation well, having been one of the victims of the court at Nome. His name is Samuel C. Dunham:

On January 15, 1900, Dunham and three companions, C. Y. Malmquist and William and Nicolay Hunter, located four beach claims at the mouth of Daniels Creek, which empties into Bering Sea at Topkuk, about 60 miles east of Nome. They found 80 cents to the pan on the surface. In locating across the mouth of Daniels Creek they discovered that a creek claim had been located there on the 12th day of December preceding, and to avoid any conflict as to the overlapping of the claims at the mouth of the creek they purchased the creek claim from George Ryan, the original locator. Dunham and his associates immediately organized a company under the name of the Black Chief Mining Company, and proceeded to develop the property. In April news of the strike reached Nome and a large number of men stampeded to Topkuk and "jumped" the beach in front of the company's property. It is estimated by the banks at Nome that $600,000 was rocked out of the beach by the "jumpers" in sixty days, and it is undoubtedly the richest piece of beach ever discovered. This led to litigation, and the case was under consideration in the United States commissioner's court at the time of the arrival of Judge Noyes in Nome. Dunham's statement is addressed to Congress, and, in part, is as follows:

On July 6, 1900, P. C. and John J. O'Donnell "jumped" the Ryan claim, which had been purchased in April by the original locators of the beach at the mouth of Daniels Creek. In the latter part of July the O'Donnells, at the instigation of lawyers intimately associated with certain court officials, brought suit against the Black Chief Mining Company for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver. The application was supported by an affidavit from George Ryan that when he located No. 1 Daniels Creek on December 12, 1899, he did not make a discovery of gold thereon nor properly stake the claim. The O'Donnells made affidavit that when they located on July 6 the ground was unoccupied, although it was a matter of common notoriety that the Black Chief Mining Company was in possession at that date and had been for five months.

Upon the hearing of the motion for the appointment of a receiver the Black Chief Mining Company interposed vigorous opposition, on what seemed to be well-established grounds of law and equity, to the appointment of a receiver. It contended that no court had the power to compel the development of a placer mining claim; that the sole province of a receiver being the preservation of property, or its rents and profits, the court was precluded on the showing made from appointing a receiver in this case.

A receiver was appointed, however, on August 13. One William B. Cameron, of North Dakota, a personal friend of Alexander McKenzie, was selected by Mr. McKenzie as receiver, and was invested by the court with possession and control of the property, with instructions to work the same and retain possession of the gold which he extracted. His bond was fixed at $10,000. He at once proceeded to the claims of the company with an enormous amount of machinery and supplies, marked "Alexander McKenzie, Nome, via Seattle."

He also took with him 38 so-called miners, 2 cooks, a number of horses, and a complete equipment for extensive operations on an extravagant scale. He refused to use the machinery belonging to the company, which had been placed upon the ground at a cost of $6,000 and was lying idle pending the action of the court, would not employ any of the five or six men who were working for the company, and refused to permit a representative of the company to be present at the first 5 clean-ups. The court subsequently issued an order permitting a representative of the company to be present at clean-ups. A charge of $29,000 was made against the property for the machinery sold to the receiver by McKenzie. A man by the name of McCormack, who was the general manager of the Alaska Gold Mining Company, of which McKenzie was president, was selected as foreman, and proceeded to work the property.

Affidavits were presented to the court by the company alleging that the receiver was working the property in a most extravagant and unskillful manner, and a motion was made for his discharge. The hearing upon this motion was delayed two weeks by dilatory motions submitted by plaintiff's counsel. At the hearing the company offered, if the court would reinvest it with possession and control of its property, to give a bond in double the amount that had been required of the receiver, or in any other amount the court might require, up to $200,000, and agreed to work the mines in an economical and minerlike manner and report to the court as might be required.

It furthermore offered to mine the property and turn into the court all the gold that it might extract therefrom, and, in case plaintiffs should win the case, turn all the gold which had been taken from the mine over to the plaintiffs and make no claim for the expense of extracting it. It was confidently believed that no objection could be made to that proposition. As a matter of fact, the plaintiffs vehemently resisted and denounced the proposition as "an exhibition of cheek and unmitigated gall," and the court, in ruling against the motion, remarked that he considered the proposition "impertinent, being a reflection on an officer of the court and having no foundation in law or precedent."

In September last the receiver appeared in Nome and applied to the court for an order to permit him to convert the gold taken from the claim into currency to enable him to pay current expenses. The name of A. K. Wheeler appears as the attorney of record in this matter. Mr. Wheeler was at that time and for some months afterwards the private secretary of the judge of the district court at Nome. He has recently been appointed deputy United States district attorney for Nome.

At an early stage of the controversy over the possession of the Topkuk claims Mr. Wheeler assured two members of the Black Chief Mining Company that the matter could be settled within twenty-four hours to the entire satisfaction of the company for a half interest in its properties. The "fee" was considered excessive and the proposition received unfavorable consideration. Mr. Wheeler then withdrew from the room for a few minutes, and on his return asked whether the members of the company considered a three-tenths interest an exorbitant fee. The members of the company replied that inasmuch as the company owned the property, they considered the fee excessive. The negotiations then closed.

The net results of the first season's operation of the Black Chief Mining Company's claims at Topkuk are about as follows: The four claims at the mouth of Daniels Creek, located by Malmquist, the Hunters, and Dunham, have produced approximately $800,000. Of this vast sum the rockermen secured about $600,000 and the receiver extracted the balance, while the Black Chief Mining Company has paid $35,000 for expenses and cost of litigation to date, without receiving a dollar as a company from the proceeds of the claims.

Three individual members of the company were "permitted" to work on the beach by the "jumpers," and washed out about $15,000. The writer of this statement paid his assessment for expenses, partly in cash and partly in notes of hand, which are approaching maturity with appalling rapidity. The only substantial return he has ever received for his hard, cold, pioneer work of last winter is the 80 cents washed from that first pan at Topkuk. Under the present administration of the mining laws at Nome the worst calamity that can befall a man is to discover a rich claim, and the richer the claim the greater the calamity.

After the injunction was granted several hundred thousand dollars were taken out.

Mr. LINDSAY. But we can not dissolve an injunction.

Mr. STEWART. No; but you can dissolve the judge. I shall not speak further on this subject at present, and yield to the Senator having the Army bill in charge.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. SHOUP. I want to appeal to Senators on the other side of the Chamber to ascertain if they are prepared to agree upon an hour when general debate shall terminate and when we can commence voting on the pending amendments and amendments to be introduced. I should be very glad indeed to fix any hour, if it be agreeable to Senators.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Idaho knows that can not be done to-night, and it is not worth while to waste time in making such an appeal.

Mr. SHOUP. Is the Senator willing to agree upon an hour when the voting may begin?

Mr. TELLER. No, I am not now; and the Senator knew that we were not willing to do so when he made that request.

Mr. SHOUP. Is this discussion to go on interminably?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will be in order I think if he takes his seat.

Mr. SHOUP. We certainly have some rights that ought to be observed; and we have been discussing this bill for a number of days. It does seem to me that the other side of the Chamber should make some concession to us and agree upon some time when we can have a vote on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator that he call up the Army bill, and let us proceed to discuss that. We have wasted two hours of precious time here to-night.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. SHOUP. I have done my best and have been trying to facilitate the progress of the bill all evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] has been recognized.

Mr. SHOUP. I have been trying for the entire evening to proceed with the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. You can take it up by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I believe I have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] had concluded his remarks, and the Chair recognized the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If the Senator from South Dakota has not yielded the floor, the Chair will, of course, recognize him.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask the Senators to agree upon some time to-morrow for a vote on the bill.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator knows that is just wasting time. He knows that nobody, to-night, is going to agree to fix a time for voting on this bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. SHOUP. Does the Senator from South Dakota want to speak on the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes.

Mr. SHOUP. Very well. If the Senator rises to speak, I will yield the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I deeply regret that the controversy with regard to Judge Noyes has been brought into this Chamber.

Mr. SHOUP. And on an appropriation bill, at that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Under the pretext of an amendment to furnish a judiciary for the Philippine Islands the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has brought this controversy into this Chamber. It does not belong here; and yet I feel I should not be doing my duty if I allowed the statement as made to go unchallenged.

I have known Judge Noyes for more than twenty years. In the early days of the Territory of Dakota Judge Noyes was a resident of that Territory. He was a graduate of the law school of the State University of Wisconsin. He was known in Dakota as a capable and an honest man. He went from Dakota to Minneapolis, where he built up an excellent practice and stood well among his fellow-lawyers and his fellow-citizens. He was appointed to the position of judge for Alaska on the recommendation of the late Senator Davis, and I believe he is the peer of any man who sits upon the bench in any State or Territory in the Union.

There was a controversy about mining claims at Nome. There were disputes as to titles. Some speculators from San Francisco had gone there and got possession, and their possession was disputed by the miners, who claimed that they also owned those mining claims. They were placer claims, and the speculators—men of enormous wealth—were taking out gold. Judge Noyes appointed Alexander McKenzie as receiver. Mr. McKenzie was also a resident of North Dakota, and he has been a resident of Dakota for the last twenty-five years. He is a man of character, ability, and wealth. He is abundantly able to respond in damages to any judgment that can be gotten against him. As receiver he took possession of these claims and took out $225,000 in gold, and deposited it, under the order of the judge, in a safety-deposit vault at Nome.

These wealthy claimants went to San Francisco, and, on ex parte affidavits, made by men who I believe committed perjury, procured an order for McKenzie to turn over the property to a man named by the court in San Francisco. The bond that was required, as I am informed, was $35,000. The order, as I understand it, did not require the delivery of the gold dust. The inadequacy of the bond, $35,000, to receive $225,000 of gold dust is apparent to anybody.

McKenzie refused to deliver the gold dust, but he did deliver the mines. Thereupon the court at San Francisco issued an order for his arrest for contempt, and they took McKenzie to San Francisco and convicted him of contempt, and sentenced him to imprisonment for one year, a proceeding unheard-of, it seems to me, in the history of jurisprudence of any civilized country on the face of the earth, and without a trial, without a jury, he to-day is in jail in San Francisco for contempt, sentenced to one year's imprisonment. It is a proceeding, I say, that ought to bring the court in San Francisco into contempt on the part of every honest man everywhere. It is a proceeding that ought to receive the attention of the judicial authorities in this country. The case on habeas corpus has come to the Supreme Court of the United States, and is to be argued there in a few days.

I say, under these circumstances, this case should not have been brought in here. Mr. McKenzie has not replied. The papers have been filled with the perjured affidavits of the men who have been trying to buy Judge Noyes. This gang of highwaymen from San Francisco, who have filled the newspapers, have tried this case in public everywhere and apparently at enormous expense to them, while the other parties have not been heard. Now it is brought into this presence, and a further effort is made to blacken the character of these men.

I tell you, Mr. President, the characters of Alexander McKenzie and Judge Noyes, among the people who personally know them, can not be destroyed by any such proceeding as this, no matter what a court may say which sends a man to jail for a year for contempt.

Further than that, in this very opinion of the court there is a clause which condemns the court, in my opinion. The court say:

> And it speaks well for the good, sober sense of the people gathered on that remote and barren shore that they depended solely upon the courts for the correction of the wrongs thus perpetrated amongst and against them, which always may be depended upon to right, sooner or later, wrongs properly brought before them.

What kind of a court is it that intimates that if they were there they would have resorted to violence, that they would have used the rope or shot the judge? I, too, entertain a strong feeling of contempt myself for a court pretending to be a judicial tribunal that will put in their opinion such language as that. It destroys the opinion, so far as I am concerned.

I care to say nothing more about this matter now. I am sorry it has been brought in here. It should not have got in; but I do not propose to have these men's characters blackened in my presence without stating my opinion with regard to the matter and facts which I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, now that we have concluded the impeachment of Judge Noyes, I will address myself briefly to the amendment to the Army appropriation bill offered by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEVERIDGE in the chair). The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 15, it is proposed to add the following:

> Until a permanent government shall have been established in said archipelago full reports shall be made to Congress, on or before the first day of each regular session, of all legislative acts and proceedings of the temporary government instituted under the provisions hereof, and full reports of the acts and doings of said government and as to the condition of the archipelago and its people shall be made to the President, including all information which may be useful to the Congress in providing for a more permanent government.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I do not know that I can add anything of value to what has already been said with so much eloquence and force by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and other Senators who have preceded me in this discussion, but I regard the question presented by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] as the gravest question of power and policy that has ever been presented to Congress; and I have felt that the matter ought not to proceed to a vote without being discussed from every point of view which may possibly affect the views of Senators.

I do not believe, and shall not assume, that Senators on either side of the Chamber are so blinded by political feelings that they can not calmly and dispassionately consider a great question of this kind, involving the very structure of the Government itself, even though they have it presented in the shape of a proposal which has behind it the authority of the political party to which they belong. Therefore, in what I say to-night I want to address myself without partisan bias or feeling to the questions growing out of this proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin, with a view of seeing whether it is or is not a proposition which the Congress of the United States, as the lawmaking power and as one of the custodians of the Constitution, can afford to put upon the statute books of the nation. Being so grave and presenting such momentous questions, I want to say that I think it is unfortunate that the proposition is brought into the Senate at this stage of its session.

We are now, I believe, within six days of the termination of the session, and the more important of the appropriation bills are still pending, unconsidered and undetermined. Many Senators are deeply interested in having those appropriation bills passed, and many Senators, I believe, who would like to have discussed this question, not from a partisan standpoint, but from a patriotic standpoint, have been induced to refrain from doing so by the fear that the usual and ordinary discussion which such a measure as this at other times would provoke might defeat some one or other of those appropriation bills.

For myself, if I thought that I could add any light to the discussion, I should not feel justified in permitting a consideration of that kind to hold me chained in my seat; and in view of the extraordinary attitude of the majority in presenting this measure at this late hour to the Senate I do not hesitate to say if I had the physical ability and the mental fertility to discuss this proposition at such length that the majority would be compelled to let it go, in order that the ordinary business of the country might be transacted, I should discuss it at that length. But I have not either the physical or the mental power to do so; and my only purpose in rising here to-night is to present as succinctly and compactly as I can the reasons which seem to me to make it inadvisable that the measure proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin should be enacted into law.

Mr. President, as I have said, this measure presents both a question of power and a question of policy; and the question of power which it presents is whether or not the Congress of the United States, having been delegated with the power to legislate for the government of the Territories, may itself delegate that power to the President of the United States. That this proposed amendment has that effect seems to me to be too plain and clear almost to need to be sustained by argument, because a reading of the amendment itself will at once carry the conviction to any ordinary mind that that is the effect which it has. It reads:

> All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct.

"All military, civil, and judicial powers." "Judicial power" logically is included under the term "civil," because, as used by the lexicographers, both legal and otherwise, the term "civil," as applied to government, is opposed to military or to ecclesiastical. It embraces the whole domain of power exercised in the functions of civil government in civilized communities. So when it is proposed in a law that all civil power shall be exercised by certain persons the proposition logically is that all legislative, executive, and judicial power shall be lodged in those functionaries. As if to make this proposition plain beyond any question, the unscientific arrangement is here employed of adding, ex industria, the term "judicial" to the term "civil power." So that we have here a proposition to repose in such functionaries as the President may appoint every vestige of power which may be employed in civil government. It expressly designated that all military, civil, and judicial powers shall be vested in the functionaries who shall be designated by the President, to be exercised in such manner as the President shall direct.

Mr. President, the power to legislate for the Territories has been most generally, I believe, predicated on the second clause of section 3, Article IV, of the Constitution, which reads:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

I am aware that the power has been implied from other clauses of the Constitution, but the Supreme Court in most of the cases have predicated the power of Congress to legislate for the government of the Territories upon the clause of the Constitution to which I have referred.

Mr. President, upon the question as to the extent to which Congress may legislate for the Territories and the limitations upon its power of legislation, I believe the true doctrine to be that Congress is limited by all the clauses of the Constitution in favor of individual rights and personal liberty, but that it may legislate as generally as it pleases concerning the political institutions of the Territories of the United States. It may make those political institutions as general as it pleases or it may enter into as many details as it pleases. It may found those institutions upon the suffrage of the people of the Territories or may vest in the President of the United States or in some other competent authority the right to appoint all the functionaries necessary to carry on the institutions which it shall provide. But it can not delegate to anybody the power to decide and determine what those institutions shall be, because the power to determine that is reposed in it itself by the Constitution of the United States, and it has no right to shirk the execution of that power by saying that some other functionary or department of the Government of the United States shall exercise it.

Every Senator, of course, knows that there are three separate, coordinate departments of the Government; that no one of them can trench upon the powers of the other, and it is a corollary of that proposition that no one of them can decline to exercise the power which of right belongs to it and to devolve that power on some other department of the Government. This has been declared, I believe, by every court of last resort in the United States, by the supreme courts of all the States of the Union, and by the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. I will refer, in this connection, to what the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States have said upon the subject, not with a view of informing the members of the Senate, because I am aware that they are acquainted with these cases, but for the purpose of exhibiting the manner in which the great men who have graced the Supreme Bench of the United States have considered questions of this kind when presented to them, in the hope that their examples may influence Senators to consider this grave proposition in the way and the manner in which it ought to be considered, and to determine it in the way and in the manner in which it ought to be determined. It is too grave and important a matter to be determined from partisan considerations.

Mr. President, very early in the history of the Government Congress, in providing pensions for the survivors of the Revolutionary war, undertook to devolve upon the courts of the United States the duty of passing upon certain contested pension cases, and after their determination had been made, undertook to permit the matter to be brought before the Secretary of War, and to leave to him the determination whether or not to carry out the findings of the judges. The law came before the several courts of the United States for enforcement, and I believe that all of those courts, each one of them with one or more of the judges of the Supreme Court sitting, declined to administer the law on the ground that it was a plain invasion of the judicial functions. The holding was that the Government was composed of three separate and distinct coordinate departments, and that as no department could abdicate the performance of duties devolved upon it, neither could it devolve upon another a duty not appropriate to the functions of the officers of that particular department. The determination of the judges is found in 2 Dallas, as a note to the Hayburn case, reported on page 8 of 2 Dallas. The matter came up before the circuit court for the district of New York, with Jay, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; Cushing, justice of the Supreme Court, and Duane, district judge, sitting upon the bench; and those judges unanimously reached this conclusion:

> That by the Constitution of the United States the Government thereof is divided into three distinct and independent branches, and that it is the duty of each to abstain from and to oppose encroachments on either.
> That neither the legislative nor the executive branches can, constitutionally, assign to the judicial any duties but such as are properly judicial and to be performed in a judicial manner.
> That the duties assigned to the circuit courts by this act are not of that description, and that the act itself does not appear to contemplate them as such, inasmuch as it subjects the decisions of these courts, made pursuant to those duties, first to the consideration and suspension of the Secretary at War and then to the revision of the Legislature, whereas by the Constitution neither the Secretary at War nor any other executive officer, nor even the Legislature, are authorized to sit as a court of errors on the judicial acts or opinions of this court.

The matter next came before the circuit court for the district of Pennsylvania, with Wilson and Blair, justices of the supreme court, on the bench, along with Peters, district judge; and those eminent judges, in a letter to the President of the United States declining to exercise the power attempted to be conferred upon them, reached this conclusion:

> To you it officially belongs to "take care that the laws" of the United States "be faithfully executed." Before you, therefore, we think it our duty to lay the sentiments which, on a late painful occasion, governed us with regard to an act passed by the Legislature of the Union.
> The people of the United States have vested in Congress all legislative powers "granted in the Constitution."
> They have vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress shall establish, "the judicial power of the United States."
> It is worthy of remark that in Congress the whole legislative power of the United States is not vested. An important part of that power was exercised by the people themselves when they "ordained and established the Constitution."
>
> This Constitution is "the supreme law of the land." This supreme law "all judicial officers of the United States are bound, by oath or affirmation, to support."
>
> It is a principle important to freedom that in government the judicial should be distinct from and independent of the legislative department. To this important principle the people of the United States, in forming their Constitution, have manifested the highest regard.
>
> They have placed their judicial power not in Congress, but in "courts." They have ordained that the "judges of those courts shall hold their offices during good behavior;" and that "during their continuance in office their salaries shall not be diminished."
>
> Congress have lately passed an act to regulate, among other things, "the claims to invalid pensions."
> Upon due consideration we have been unanimously of opinion that under this act the circuit court held for the Pennsylvania district could not proceed—
> First. Because the business directed by this act is not of a judicial nature. It forms no part of the power invested by the Constitution in the courts of the United States. The circuit court must consequently have proceeded without constitutional authority.
> Second. Because if upon that business the court had proceeded, its judgments—for its opinions are its judgments—might, under the same act, have been revised and controlled by the legislature and by an officer in the executive department. Such revision and control we deemed radically inconsistent with the independence of that judicial power which is vested in the courts, and consequently with that important principle which is so strictly observed by the Constitution of the United States.

And finally the matter came before the circuit court of the district of North Carolina, Iredell, justice of the supreme court, sitting upon the bench along with Sitgreaves, district judge. The power attempted to be conferred was again declined, and the judges, in a letter to the President, set forth their reasons, as follows:

> We, the judges now attending at the circuit court of the United States for the district of North Carolina, conceive it our duty to lay before you some important observations which have occurred to us in the consideration of an act of Congress lately passed, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of widows and orphans barred by the limitations heretofore established, and to regulate the claims to invalid pensions."
> We beg leave to premise, that it is as much inclination as it is our duty to receive with all possible respect every act of the Legislature, and that we never can find ourselves in a more painful situation than to be obliged to object to the execution of any, more especially to the execution of one founded on the purest principles of humanity and justice, which the act in question undoubtedly is. But however lamentable a difference in opinion really may be, or with whatever difficulty we may have formed an opinion, we are under the indispensable necessity of acting according to the best dictates of our own judgment, after duly weighing every consideration that can occur to us; which we have done on the present occasion.
> The extreme importance of the case, and our desire of being explicit beyond the danger of being misunderstood, will, we hope, justify us in stating our observations in a systematic manner. We therefore, sir, submit to you the following:
> 1. That the legislative, executive, and judicial departments are each formed in a separate and independent manner, and that the ultimate basis of each is the Constitution only, within the limits of which each department can alone justify any act of authority.
> 2. That the Legislature, among other important powers, unquestionably possess that of establishing courts in such a manner as, to their wisdom, shall appear best limited by the terms of the Constitution only, and to whatever extent that power may be exercised, or however severe the duty they may think proper to require, the judges, when appointed in virtue of any such establishment, owe implicit and unreserved obedience to it.
> 3. That at the same time such courts can not be warranted, as we conceive, by virtue of that part of the Constitution delegating judicial power, for the exercise of which any act of the legislature is provided in exercising, ever under the authority of another act, any power not in its nature judicial, or if judicial, not provided for upon the terms the Constitution requires.

So that the great judges of this early day, in virtue of the principle to which I appeal here against the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, that each Department of the Government is separate and distinct and that their powers can not be confused or mingled, declined to exercise a power which they held was not strictly judicial, putting it upon the ground in their solemn letters to the President of the United States that to do so would be a breach of the Constitution itself and an endangering of that great instrument upon the maintenance of which the rights and the liberties of the people of this country are dependent.

Mr. President, this identical matter came before the court again as related by Judge Taney in a note in the Ferreira case, reported in 13 Howard, at page 52. For the purpose of exhibiting in consecutive form what the Supreme Court have thought and said upon the subject, I will call the attention of the Senate to this note by Judge Taney. The question was incidentally called in question in the Ferreira case, but the court avoided it in that case by holding that the duty conferred upon them by the act of Congress was not in their capacity as judges but was one that they might execute, if they chose to do so as commissioners, and it was by way of explanation of the grounds of that decision and of the prior decision in the Hayburn case, that Judge Taney appended his note. Judge Taney says in that note:

> Since the foregoing opinion was delivered the attention of the court has been drawn to the case of the United States vs. Yale Todd, which arose under the act of 1792 and was decided in the Supreme Court February 17, 1794. There was no official reporter at that time, and this case has not been printed. It shows the opinion of the court upon a question which was left in doubt by the opinions of the different judges, stated in the note to Hayburn's case; and as the subject is one of much interest, and concerns the nature and extent of judicial power, the substance of the decision in Yale Todd's case is inserted here in order that it may not be overlooked if similar questions should hereafter arise.

Without reading in full what Judge Taney here says concerning the Yale Todd case, I will read the conclusions which he arrived at as the state of the law, as follows:

> The result of the opinions expressed by the judges of the Supreme Court of that day in the note to Hayburn's case and in the case of the United States vs. Todd is this:
> 1. That the power proposed to be conferred on the circuit courts of the United States by the act of 1792 was not judicial power within the meaning of the Constitution, and was, therefore, unconstitutional, and could not lawfully be exercised by the courts.
> 2. That as the act of Congress intended to confer the power on the courts as a judicial function, it could not be construed as an authority to the judges composing the court to exercise the power out of court in the character of commissioners.
> 3. That money paid under a certificate from persons not authorized by law to give it might be recovered back by the United States.
> The case of Todd was docketed by consent in the Supreme Court, and the court appears to have been of opinion that the act of Congress of 1793, directing the Secretary of War and Attorney-General to take their opinion upon the question, gave them original jurisdiction. In the early days of the Government the right of Congress to give original jurisdiction to the Supreme Court in cases not enumerated in the Constitution was maintained by many jurists and seems to have been entertained by the learned judges who decided Todd's case. But discussion and more mature examination has settled the question otherwise, and it has long been the established doctrine, and we believe now assented to by all who have examined the subject, that the original jurisdiction of this court is confined to the cases specified in the Constitution and that Congress can not enlarge it. In all other cases its power must be appellate.

This note of Judge Taney, I may say in passing, is apropos in connection with the discussion which occurred here this evening concerning the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], vesting in the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction to hear and determine questions certified up to it by a commission. If the power there sought to be conferred were appellate power, then the question must come from a court for the Supreme Court to have any jurisdiction. If it be original power, then they have it only in the cases specified by Judge Taney. But to pass on.

I believe that the principles laid down by those eminent judges in these cases to which I have called the attention of the Senate have always been respected by the Congress of the United States, because in all the litigation before the Supreme Court of the United States I have been able to find only one case in which any question concerning the delegation of legislative power or the vesting in one department of Government of a power not belonging to it came before that great court for consideration, and that was in the Chapman contempt case, decided, I believe, in the 164th United States, in which the court held that the conferring upon the courts by Congress of power to punish for contempt committed against Congress was not a delegation of the power belonging to Congress to itself punish for contempt, but was the creation of a separate and additional offense which might be punished as an offense against the laws of the country, Congress still retaining the power itself to punish for contempt.

Now, the law being thus and thus plainly established and determined, so plainly, as I stated before, that it was not necessary to read these cases to the Senate for its information, but rather as examples, which I hoped might induce Senators to emulate the action of the courts, let us look at the proposed amendment to which I am addressing my remarks and see if it does not logically have the effect of devolving upon the President of the United States power which should be exercised by Congress alone. The Constitution vests in Congress the right and the power and the duty, in the language of section 3 of Article IV—

> To dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

Does this amendment propose any rule respecting the government of the territory included in the Philippine Islands, which are now a part of the territories of the United States? Does it provide any rule of action by which any citizen living in that far-off territory desiring to found rights either of person or property on it could turn and there find an exposition of his rights? Manifestly not. It does not undertake to do anything of that kind, but in a cowardly manner undertakes to shirk that duty and to cast it upon the shoulders of the President of the United States, and to compel the citizens or inhabitants of those islands, when their rights may be called in question, not to turn to an act of Congress to see what those rights are, but to turn to the decrees, the rules, and the regulations which may be established by the President of the United States or by the officers appointed by him for that purpose.

Since all civil power as applied to government involves all power of every character and description which is not military or ecclesiastical, and since we have no ecclesiastical power under our system, civil power involves all power that is not military. The persons who may be appointed by the President of the United States are to be vested with all civil power, and, as stated before, that involves legislative, executive, and judicial powers. There is no difficulty in devolving each one of those powers upon appropriate officers by the enactments of Congress. That is not the delegation of legislative power within the sense of the Constitution. To erect a government there composed of executive officers and judicial officers and legislative officers, however the personality of those officers may be arrived at, however their personality may be determined, is not a delegation of such power. It is not a delegation of legislative power to create officers for the government of a Territory and to devolve upon them the right to execute either legislative or executive or judicial powers; but it is a delegation of power when, instead of determining for ourselves what those officers shall be and what their powers shall be, we say that the President of the United States shall do all that.

Mr. President, under the terms of this amendment the President of the United States is to be called on in the first instance to determine what the form of government shall be. He must determine what form the executive in this territory shall take. He must determine what form the legislative branch of that government, if there be one, shall take, and he must determine what shall be the form of the judicial power in that territory.

This is the power which the Supreme Court of the United States has said over and over again is committed by the Constitution to Congress, and concerning which it acts without any constitutional restraints whatever. In dealing with private rights, in dealing with life, liberty, and property, as I read the decisions of the Supreme Court, Congress and the President and every branch of this Government, either in the States or in the Territories, are bound by the limitations of the Constitution. But in determining the character of the political institutions of Territories the power of Congress is supreme and unlimited, and the first thing Congress always addresses itself to, and that it ought always to address itself to when new territories have been acquired by the Government of the United States, is, What is the form of the political institutions which that Territory shall have and enjoy?

Now, if there is any one thing in the world that is settled in this Government, it is that this power belongs exclusively to Congress, and that it is conferred by the section of the Constitution to which I have referred. Does this amendment undertake to execute that power? Does it define anything? Is not the President at perfect liberty under this amendment to establish any political institutions in those islands that he pleases absolutely without limitation either by the Constitution or by the laws of Congress?

How can the President of the United States, knowing that the duty is devolved upon Congress to determine these matters for itself, under his oath to support the Constitution of the United States, accept such delegated power at the hands of Congress, and how can Senators and Representatives, who are acting under their oaths to support and maintain the Constitution, undertake to shake off from their shoulders and to devolve upon the shoulders of another a power which belongs exclusively to them, and which their duty under their oaths of office requires them to address themselves to?

That is the question of power which is presented in this amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, and it is one upon which I think I have a right to invoke the careful, conscientious, and patriotic consideration of Senators without reference to the particular party to which they may happen to belong. And I may do so all the more hopefully, because if the amendments which have been offered here, and which I understand have been accepted by the committee, shall be adopted, then this power proposed to be conferred upon the President does not go one iota beyond the power which he already exercises as Commander in Chief of the Armies and the Navies of the United States.

The Constitution and the laws are silent in the midst of war—inter arma silent leges. The discretion of the Commander in Chief is the sole and only law in territory which is affected by war. So all power, military and civil—because civil power is still exercised for the protection of persons and property even in a country which is devastated by war—so long as war proceeds in the Philippine Islands, is already now vested in the President of the United States or in such commanders as he may designate to carry on war there on behalf of the United States.

I apprehend that the only object in proposing the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin originally was to meet the recommendation of the commission to the Philippine Islands appointed by the President under his war power, a recommendation that, in order that the resources of those islands might be exploited and utilized for the benefit of the people of the United States, a form of civil government should be established under which rights to the mines and timbers and lands of that country could be acquired, and under which rights, privileges, and franchises might be granted to which a termination would not be put when the war had ceased, the commission thinking and stating that privileges and franchises of a limited character, such as might be granted by military government, would not be sufficient to tempt the ordinary capitalist to that far-off country for the purpose of investing his money.

Those recommendations were referred to on yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and they are in these words. On page 34 of the report of that commission we find this recommendation:

It is thought that a system of laws of public lands can be inaugurated without waiting until the survey is completed. The commission has received a sufficient number of applications for the purchase of public land to know that large amounts of American capital are only awaiting the opportunity to invest in the rich agricultural field which may here be developed. In view of the decision that the military government has no power to part with the public land belonging to the United States, and that the power rests alone in Congress, it becomes very essential, to assist the development of these islands and their prosperity, that Congressional authority be vested in the government of the islands to adopt a proper public-land system, and to sell the land upon proper terms. There should, of course, be restrictions preventing the acquisition of too large quantities by any individual or corporation, but those restrictions should only be imposed after giving due weight to the circumstances that capital can not be secured for the development of the island unless the investment may be sufficiently great to justify the expenditure of large amounts for expensive machinery and equipments. Especially is this true in the cultivation of sugar land.

* * * * * *

Restricted powers of a military government referred to in discussing the public lands are also painfully apparent in respect to mining claims and the organization of railroad, banking, and other corporations, and the granting of franchises generally. It is necessary that there be somebody or officer vested with legislative authority to pass laws which shall afford opportunity to capital to make investment here. This is the true and most lasting method of pacification.

And in a special communication to the Secretary of War the commission make this recommendation:

If you approve, ask transmission to proper Senators and Representatives of following: Passage of Spooner bill at present session greatly needed to secure best result from improving conditions. Until its passage no purely central civil government can be established, no public franchises of any kind granted, and no substantial investment of private capital in internal improvements possible.

And further on:

Sale of public lands and allowance of mining claims impossible until Spooner bill. Hundreds of American miners on ground awaiting law to perfect claims. More coming. Good element in pacification. Urgently recommend amendment Spooner bill so that its operation be not postponed until complete suppression of all insurrection, but only until in President's judgment civil government may be safely established.

I say, Mr. President, it seems apparent that these recommendations of the Philippine commission constitute the sole reason for the presentation here at this time of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. The fact that there was no power in those islands which could dispose of the lands and the mines in that country, or which could grant franchises that would extend beyond the period of the duration of the war, to which attention was called by the commission, and the urgent recommendation of the commission that some authority be created which might dispose of the lands and the mines and grant franchises, are the reasons, and the sole reasons, for the offering of this amendment at this time, because those are the only objects to be accomplished by the passage of this amendment which can not be accomplished now by the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of our Armies.

Now, then, it has seemed so manifestly improper that the wealth of these islands should be exploited by Americans for the benefit of Americans at a time prior to the establishment of a representative government there, under which the people of those islands might acquire, or at least have an opportunity of acquiring, for themselves some of these valuable rights and properties and franchises that it has been found necessary to agree to amendments which will take off from this measure the right to sell the lands or to grant franchises which will extend for more than one year after the establishment of permanent government, in order to secure the united support even of the other side of the Chamber. So, I say, that with the legislation thus limited, the President will have no more power after the passage of this measure than he has at the present time as Commander in Chief of the Armies and Navy of the United States.

In the exercise of this great power, however, as Commander in Chief he is proceeding upon safe and constitutional grounds, and grounds to which no man of any political party can take any valid objection, whereas if we clothe him with the same large power in aid of the establishment of civil government we trench upon the Constitution, for we undertake to devolve upon him a duty which belongs alone and exclusively to ourselves.

Mr. President, we undertake to devolve upon him a duty in the Philippine Islands which is as great if not greater than that devolved upon any civilized ruler in the world. I do not know whether there are any limitations upon the power of the Czar of Russia to ordain by edict institutions, to make laws, to establish courts, to define offenses, to fix the rights of persons and property, to establish codes of civil and criminal procedure, and to determine what acts shall constitute crimes, and what trespasses shall entitle one to redress in the courts. I do not know but that the Czar of Russia has power without limitation in the government of Russia to perform these acts.

But if he has, so will the President of the United States have, if we pass the enactment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. We clothe him here, or attempt to clothe him, and will clothe him, if this act have any validity, with all of the powers supposed to belong to the Czar of Russia, the only ruler of a civilized people on the face of the globe who will possess any power at all comparable to the enormous power which it is here proposed to vest in the President of the United States.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to Webster's definition of the word "civil," as applied to government:

CIVIL.

1. Pertaining to a city or State, or to a citizen in his relations to his fellow-citizens or to the State; within the city or State.

2. Subject to government; reduced to order; civilized; not barbarous; said of the community.

England was very rude and barbarous; for it is but even the other day since England grew civil.—Spenser.

3. Performing the duties of a citizen; obedient to government; said of an individual.

Civil men come nearer the saints of God than others; they come within a step or two of heaven.—Preston.

4. Having the manners of one dwelling in a city, as opposed to those of savages or rustics; polite; courteous; complaisant: affable.

A civil man now is one observant of slight external courtesies in the mutual intercourse between man and man; a civil man once was one who fulfilled all the duties and obligations flowing from his position as a "civis" and his relations to the other members of that "civitas."—Trench.

5. Pertaining to civic life and affairs, in distinction from military, ecclesiastical, or official state.

6. Relating to rights and remedies sought by action or suit distinct from criminal proceedings.

In the sense in which the word "civil" is used in this amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, it pertains to the State and to the relations of the citizens of the State, toward the Government, and toward their fellow-citizens. I find in the law dictionaries this definition of the word "civil:"

Pertaining to a city or State, or to a citizen in his relations to his fellow-citizens or to the State, as civil rights, civil government. Pertaining to an organized community; reduced to order; subject to government, as civil society.

Abbott defines the word thus:

The word has a variety of applications; but in almost all one may readily trace the idea of the character, privileges, or peculiarities of the ancient citizen. Thus it is now used in opposition to what is military: again, in contrast with barbarous, uncivilized, or rustic; and in turn as the opposite of that which is ecclesiastical or priestly; and it may designate that which is for the individual in distinction from the government. But in all these uses it presents the citizen as the standard with which the other is compared.

Mr. President, the terms employed in this amendment are sufficiently broad to embrace all power. The term "civil power," used without limitation or qualification, means all power, every power, legislative, executive, and judicial.

Can there be any doubt, then, that the officers to be appointed by the President are to have conferred upon them by virtue of this proposed enactment every power pertaining to government, every power that the three coordinate departments of the Government acting conjointly could exercise within the limits of the States of the United States of America? Can there be any doubt that the President in the first instance is to determine what officers shall be there, upon whom shall be devolved the legislative power, upon whom shall be devolved the executive power, upon whom shall be devolved the judicial power? Can there be any doubt that these officers, acting under the direction of the President, can determine and establish every other matter which the Congress of the United States, in its discretion, might determine and establish for the government of those territories; that they can fix personal and individual and property rights, establish codes of civil and criminal procedure, prescribe forms of judgment and process, define offenses—in short, do everything from the function of legislation, which might be and ought to be exercised by Congress, down to that of judgment and execution, which can only be exercised by officers established by Congress?

Mr. President, I do not know how any Senator is going to reach the conclusion that he is performing the duty devolved upon him by the Constitution of the United States when he consents to legislation which devolves upon the President of the United States and the appointees of the President of the United States this power which so clearly and conclusively belongs to Congress and which it can not shift upon the shoulders of anybody else. I am aware that this amendment is copied from the act providing for the taking over of the Louisiana territory and establishing the rights and the authority of the United States in that territory, and that it is supposed to be identical with that act, but it is essentially different from that act.

This act provides that all powers shall reside in and be executed by such officers as the President of the United States shall appoint. The Louisiana act provided that the power then exercised by the officers of the Louisiana territory should be executed by such officers as the President of the United States might direct and in such manner as he might direct. There is a very plain and radical and marked distinction between the two enactments. We derived the Louisiana territory after government had been established there, after laws had been established there, which laws were being executed by executive and judicial officers in that territory. The offices themselves were already established, the laws were already established, and the act merely provided in effect that the duties of those offices should be performed by the persons who should be appointed by the President of the United States.

Now, let us see if that is not the true reading of that act, and if that act is not as wide asunder as the poles from this legislation which it is proposed to adopt and to apply to the people of the Philippine Islands. I read section 2 of the act of October 31, 1803:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner, as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

"All the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government," the existing officers and the existing powers. There was no delegation of legislative power here; no general power conferred upon the President of the United States to establish such institutions as he pleased, to appoint such officers as he pleased, to devolve upon them such powers as he pleased, but simply a power to appoint officers there who were to exercise the certain and defined military, civil, and judicial powers then exercised by the officers of the Louisiana territory.

Mr. HEITFELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator withdraw that motion long enough to allow me to ask for an order of the Senate?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. SHOUP called for the yeas and nays, and they were so ordered.

Mr. CARTER. I hope the Senator from Idaho will withdraw the motion.

Mr. HEITFELD. The Senator from Washington prefers to go on to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MALLORY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not see him present and I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEITFELD (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Allen,	Culberson,	Pettus,	Turley.
Bate,	Harris,

NAYS—47.

Aldrich,	Beveridge,	Clark,	Dillingham,
Allison,	Butler,	Cockrell,	Dolliver,
Bard,	Carter,	Cullom,	Fairbanks,
Berry,	Chandler,	Deboe,	Foraker,
Foster,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,	Taliaferro,
Gallinger,	Lodge,	Platt, Conn.	Teller,
Hale,	McComas,	Quarles,	Thurston,
Hanna,	McMillan,	Rawlins,	Tillman,
Hansbrough,	Martin,	Sewell,	Warren,
Hawley,	Mason,	Shoup,	Wetmore,
Jones, Ark.	Nelson,	Spooner,	Wolcott.
Kean,	Penrose,	Stewart,

NOT VOTING—35.

Bacon,	Elkins,	McCumber,	Proctor,
Baker,	Frye,	McEnery,	Quay,
Burrows,	Heitfeld,	McLaurin,	Scott,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Mallory,	Simon,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Money,	Sullivan,
Clapp,	Kearns,	Morgan,	Turner,
Clay,	Kenney,	Perkins,	Vest,
Daniel,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.	Wellington.
Depew,	McBride,	Pritchard,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. ALDRICH. That the session to-night may not be unduly prolonged, and that the public business may proceed, in view of the very few remaining hours of this session, I appeal to the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to allow a time to be fixed for a vote upon this bill and on all pending amendments to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I know of two or three Senators on this side who desire to make speeches. I think they are not willing that a definite hour shall be fixed for voting. My own opinion is that there will be no doubt about getting a vote at a reasonable hour to-morrow if we go on with business, keep this bill before the Senate, and not undertake on both sides of the Chamber to bring in outside matters and get up wrangles here that have no connection whatever with the Army appropriation bill.

I doubt if Senators on this side would be quite willing now to fix an hour to vote—in fact, I know that they would not, because some of them have so expressed themselves—but I believe we can get a vote at a reasonable hour.

Mr. HALE. I believe that the statement of the Senator from Arkansas is not made with any assurance——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, it is not.

Mr. HALE. But I think the statement of the Senator ought to be entirely satisfactory, and that we may adjourn to-night with the idea that we shall have a vote some time to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. I myself think that the statement of the Senator from Arkansas is reasonable. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will call it up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. CHANDLER. And we shall adjourn to-night after the Senator from Washington concludes his speech.

Mr. TELLER. If I can get the floor——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. TELLER. When the Army bill was before the Senate we fixed a time to vote. I was anxious to make some remarks on that bill. I had not spent any time in discussing it. I found that Senators, particularly those who favored the proposition of the bill, had gone to the desk and put down their names to speak, and I and others who desired to speak on it were crowded out during the day. I said then that I would not agree to fix another hour for a vote. I did change my opinion on that on another occasion, and I presume I may do so now, but I think we are entitled to have time to discuss this proposition fairly. I myself should like to take about thirty minutes. I think I can get through in that time, but I do not like to be shut out again on this bill as I was shut out on the other.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to give a notice.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask a brief executive session, to take, perhaps, not more than five or six minutes. There is quite a lot of business on the desk and on the Calendar which should be attended to.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say one other word. If the Senate is willing to hear me, I am willing to make my speech at any time between this and daylight.

Several SENATORS. No! No!

Mr. SHOUP. There is no desire on the part of Senators on this side of the Chamber that any Senator should be put to any hardship in making a speech. I wish to give reasonable time to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] or to any other Senator on the other side of this proposition who may desire to make remarks on the pending bill. I believe that the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], that some time to-morrow we shall reach a vote on this bill and all pending amendment is entirely satisfactory. I do not wish to press the Senator from Colorado or any other Senator to-night into making any long speech, nor to do any injustice in any way. Hence I accede to the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think there is no disposition, so far as we are concerned on this side of the Chamber, to prolong this session so as to compel the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to speak to-night, and whenever the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] concludes his remarks, I think the Senate will adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me to present a report?

Several SENATORS. No, no! Regular order!

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order, on which the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] has the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is before the Senate, and the Senator from Washington is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is now ten minutes past 11 o'clock, and it seems to me it would be but reasonable for the Senator in charge of this bill to consent to an adjournment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator from Washington unwilling to go on to-night?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand the Senator from Washington prefers to go on with his remarks to-morrow.

Mr. SHOUP. If the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has no objection to that arrangement, I shall not object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not understand that there has been any unanimous consent asked for or given that the vote on this bill shall be taken to-morrow and that we shall not be allowed an opportunity to debate this proposed legislation. I think we ought to debate it for the next week. I do not believe that the minority in this body ought to consent to granting the President of the United States imperial power without a debate which extends over far more time than there is in this session of Congress.

This matter has only been perfected to-day. I do not feel physically able to continue the debate alone, neither do I think it would be proper for me to do so; but I do think this question ought to be debated, and debated thoroughly, no matter what the consequences may be in regard to an extra session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 11 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 27, 1901, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

SUITS BROUGHT BY STATES RELATIVE TO SCHOOL LANDS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following privileged matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5978) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appear in suits brought by States relative to school lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That in any suit heretofore or hereafter instituted in the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the right of a State to what are commonly known as school lands within any Indian reservation or any Indian cession where an Indian tribe claims any right to or interest in the lands in controversy, or in the disposition thereof by the United States, the right of such State may be fully tested and determined without making the Indian tribe, or any portion thereof, a party to the suit if the Secretary of the Interior is made a party thereto; and the duty of representing and defending the right or interest of the Indian tribe, or any portion thereof, in the matter shall devolve upon such Secretary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill similar to that, being House bill 14191, will lie on the table.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses are authorized to include in their report such alterations, changes, and recommendations as they may deem proper with reference to so much of the text of said bill as relates to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that this is acceptable.

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

RUSSIAN SUGARS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I report back from the Committee on Ways and Means the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred House resolution 422, having duly considered the same, report the same back to the House adversely and with the recommendation that the said resolution lie on the table.

The resolution was read, as follows:

House resolution No. 422.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, requested to furnish the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with public policy, with copies of all letters to him from persons, firms, companies, or corporations, and all letters from him to them or any of them, together with all reports, decisions, and examinations, with his reasons for same, and all other data, facts, and information in any way relating to the imposition of a tax or countervailing duty on Russian sugars imported to this country, and what action Russia has taken in regard thereto by way of retaliation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution and report do lie on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I believe the gentleman did not submit any report——

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes; the report was read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (continuing). Except a mere recommendation made by the committee.

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I desire to ask if this resolution introduced by me is not debatable?

The SPEAKER. A motion to lie on the table is not debatable.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he will give me a moment? I introduced the resolution, and should have five minutes to explain it. I ask for a little time.

Mr. PAYNE. I certainly object, and call for the regular order.

Mr. SULZER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the report of the Committee on Ways and Means on this resolution introduced by me is not debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because this report—and the motion is that it lay on the table. A motion to lie on the table is not debatable.

Mr. SULZER. I appeal to my friend from New York to yield three minutes to me. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 73, noes 63.

Mr. SULZER. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. [After counting.] Fourteen gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are denied, and the motion to lie on the table is agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and read the statement only.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, accompanying it with a request that the reading of the report be omitted and the statement only be read. Without objection, this will be done.

There was no objection.

[The conference report will be found on page 2897 of the RECORD.]

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The conference report now presented is identical with that presented on the 19th instant and which was printed in full in the RECORD of that day, save that as to amendment No. 50, upon which the House receded with an amendment, and amendment No. 23, on which the House receded with an amendment, the Senate now recedes, and as to amendments 69 and 71, upon which the House receded with an amendment, the Senate now recedes. This last amendment increases by $250 the amount appropriated for water supply at the Flandreau School, and amendments 23 and 50 eliminate from the bill all provision with reference to the lease of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, and amendment 50 eliminates from the bill all provision with reference to the fire wardens and changing the law as to the sale of the timber lands in the Chippewa Reservation in Minnesota.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
J. S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the report be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House instruct the conferees to further insist on the disagreement to House amendment No. 51.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House recede and concur in amendment 51.

The SPEAKER. The amendment numbered 51 will be withheld until the motion of the gentleman from New York is disposed of.

Mr. LITTLE. Also, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House recede and concur in amendment 52.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish a separate vote on amendments 51 and 52?

Mr. LITTLE. I do.

The SPEAKER. On all the other amendments the gentleman from New York moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire a separate vote on each, or a vote on both amendments 51 and 52 at the same time?

Mr. LITTLE. A vote on each separately.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment 51.

The Clerk read as follows:

(51) For completing the necessary preliminary investigations and plans and estimates of cost in detail for the construction of a dam across the Gila River near San Carlos, Ariz., for storing the flood waters of the Gila River, the waters so stored to be used, first, for the benefit of the Pima, Papago, and Maricopa Indians for irrigating the lands of the Gila River Reservation, the stored water in excess of the needs of the Indians to be used for reclaiming and irrigating vacant public lands; and also for acquiring and preparing the dam site and for continuing the measurement of the daily flow of water in the Gila River, and for surveying and locating and preparing plans and estimates of cost of construction, with Indian labor, of the necessary canals for carrying the water from said reservoir to the lands to be irrigated on the said Indian reservation, and investigating the amount of water necessary to be reserved for the use of the said Indians, and for examining, surveying, and designating the vacant public lands which could be irrigated with the stored water from said reservoir in excess of the needs of the Indians, and in preparing the plans and estimates for the construction of said reservoirs and canals, with detailed reasons therefor, and giving as accurate an estimate as possible of the total amount which could be received from the sale of the land irrigated to actual settlers, with the facts and circumstances upon which such estimate is based, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Provided, That for all unskilled labor required Indians shall be employed so far as practicable. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to reserve from entry and settlement all unappropriated lands within townships 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 south, ranges 8, 9, and 10 east, of Gila and Salt River meridian, until the examination, survey, and designation of irrigable lands hereinbefore provided for shall have been completed, and upon the approval of such survey and designation by the Secretary of the Interior the lands not designated as irrigable, shall be restored to entry and settlement.

And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, out of the appropriation immediately preceding, to cause to be made by competent engineers an investigation and report as to whether an adequate water supply for the Indians upon said reservation can be obtained by the method recommended by Indian Inspector Walker H. Graves in his report, dated Pima Indian Reservation, Ariz., September 12, 1900, and if so, at what cost: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as in any way committing the United States to the construction of said dam at San Carlos.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Prior to that, Mr. Speaker, I moved that the House nonconcur, but I do not care, only I do not want to lose the floor. I would like, if it is possible, to make some arrangement as to the time for debate.

Mr. LITTLE. After some conference with the gentleman from New York, I suggest that as little time as we can get along with on this side is an hour; that is an hour on each side.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that debate on this proposition be concluded in two hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Arkansas and one-half by myself, and at the conclusion of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. This does not refer to the other amendment?

Mr. LITTLE. No, sir.

Mr. LACEY. In regard to amendment 52, I would like to know what arrangement is made about debate on that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the two hours cover both, one-half of the time on each.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not think it is possible to dispose of the matter intelligently in that length of time. Let the other rest on its merits until we dispose of this, and then we will make some other arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will restate his request. The Chair is not advised whether the debate applies to both amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I made the request it refers to but one amendment—that there be one hour's debate on a side, and at the conclusion of the two hours' debate the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the debate on the amendment now under motion be continued for two hours, one hour on a side, at the end of which time the previous question is to be considered as ordered on this amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York or the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] such time as he may desire to discuss the amendment, and I respectfully ask that the House give attention to the gentleman, because he has been sick for the last two or three days, and it is difficult for him to speak anyway.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] will be voted down. I say this, too, as a friend of irrigation, and I want to say to the gentlemen on the other side that if they would present to this House any reasonable measure intended to redeem the arid lands in this country I would vote for it. But nothing can be accomplished by this amendment. Already the Government has expended in investigations on the Gila River $31,500; $8,000 twelve years ago to try irrigation by ditches, which proved to be a failure; $3,500 in 1895, to devise some means whereby the arid lands in that neighborhood could be irrigated, and $30,000 in 1898 and 1899 for the same purpose.

The reports are all on file, and they show conclusively that it would be too expensive to try to irrigate or reclaim the arid lands along the Gila River. The experts who examined this proposition submitted several plans. The first was a dam at the Buttes, which would cost $2,643,000, and would irrigate 87,000 acres of land. The first cost would be $30 an acre for the lands. Then it would cost $15,000 a year to maintain that dam.

The next was a dam at Riverside, which would cost $1,889,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What was the first dam?

Mr. CURTIS. At the Buttes. This (Riverside) would irrigate 110,000 acres of land and cost the Government at first cost $20 per acre. The last, and the one that is submitted in this case, would cost, they say in the report, $1,038,000, and the experts since that time have admitted that it would cost $2,000,000. If it only cost a million dollars it would cost us $8.60 an acre for every acre of land that would be irrigated. It would only irrigate 120,000 acres of land.

Another thing: The experts say this dam would fill up in twenty-eight years. If it would fill up in twenty-eight years it would cost this Government $40,000 a year in addition to the first cost. Another thing in regard to building this dam: You must remember that the San Carlos Indian Reservation must be removed. The fort at that place must be moved. Eight miles of railroad and two railroad bridges will be destroyed, and I say to you the cost as submitted by the experts will not nearly cover the expense that this Government will be to if it undertakes this scheme; and, by the way, the proposed dam at San Carlos is 80 miles above the Pima Indian Reservation. We have on this reservation only 7,500 Indians. They now, in their own meager way, irrigate about 1,500 acres of land, and last year Congress appropriated $30,000 to help support those Indians. But I am glad to say to this House that of the $30,000 appropriated but $7,000 was used.

Now, the scheme proposed by this amendment is to spend, to say the least, a million and a half dollars to reclaim enough land to support 7,500 Indians upon that reservation. Gentlemen, it is a little expensive.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not this provision also contemplate that water shall be sold to the settlers upon the land that can be irrigated from the canal?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, yes; they say that it will irrigate 120,000 acres of land, and that 100,000 acres of the land, when irrigated, can be sold for $50 an acre—that the Government will derive this price from it. Yet the expert, in his report, says that if we redeem this land it will bring only $10 an acre.

Again the gentleman in his report states that we shall have to pay only $35 an acre for 586 acres of land which we take from the Indians and which will be destroyed by this measure. And he further says in his report that it will cost us only $20 an acre for the 1,880 acres now under irrigation and owned by the settlers.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Who was the expert who said that that land with the water right could not be sold for more than $10 an acre?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Davis.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, he does not know anything about the matter. There is not an acre of land in the West that is not worth more than that.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman who says the land can be sold for $50 an acre says in the same report that the damages we would have to pay would amount to $20 an acre for 1,800 acres.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That would be a very small item, anyhow.

Mr. CURTIS. If the estimate is that only 1,800 acres would be forced upon the market at $20 an acre, is it possible that $50 an acre could be realized for 100,000 acres?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The lands owned by the settlers are not under irrigation and not worth as much as land that is irrigated.

Mr. CURTIS. Eighteen hundred acres, it is stated, is under irrigation and would be destroyed by the building of this dam; and there are now improved——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand the gentleman to say that the expert to whom he refers is Mr. Davis?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And I understand from the Delegate from Arizona that Mr. Davis never saw the land; yet the gentleman from Kansas refers to him as if he were the only expert. Officers of the Geological Survey and numerous other persons of high authority certify that the scheme is a practicable one and that the land will be made much more valuable.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Davis was sent out by the Geological Survey, and every report made on this subject since that time has been based on his report and without further investigation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand this proposition from the gentleman's remarks, one horn of it is to irrigate land at an expense of a million and a half of dollars at the lowest calculation——

Mr. SHAFROTH. One million and thirty-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. I am asking this question of the gentleman from Kansas. But let the amount be $1,038,000 or a million and a half of dollars. Let that be as it may. This is done in the name of taking care of the Indians——

Mr. CURTIS. Seventy-five hundred of them.

Mr. CANNON. But I understand that all the balance of the "animal" is to irrigate 100,000 acres of land to be sold to the white men.

Mr. CURTIS. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. So that in the name of caring for the Indians we are to be committed by this proposition here and now to the reclamation of the arid lands for the benefit of the whites. Am I right about that?

Mr. CURTIS. You are correct.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it seems to me that that is a great question.

Mr. CURTIS. With regard to the cost of this undertaking the expert does say it will cost $1,038,000. He gives us his figures; and I submit that if you will go over them you will find that he has not made the estimate large enough. I talked the other day to an expert who is here agitating this matter, and he said it would cost at least $2,000,000. If it does, then it will make that land cost us at first price over $16 per acre.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What expert said that?

Mr. CURTIS. The chief of the irrigation bureau at Chicago I do not know whether he is an expert or not; but he is here in the interest of this project, and he estimated the cost at $2,000,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suppose the gentleman means the chairman of the irrigation commission.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He is not an expert in regard to the matter of cost.

Mr. CANNON. He is expert enough in working up letters to members of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question for information. If this land should be irrigated for the benefit of these Indians, is it probable that they would avail themselves of the land—that it would be used for their benefit?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, yes; for the benefit of those Indians. They are now irrigating about 1,500 acres. They have been self-supporting for four hundred years. But look at the expense. We had better move those Indians down into some other State and buy lands for them there that will not cost us five to eight dollars an acre every year hereafter to keep it in condition for raising crops.

But if you put in this dam that is proposed by this amendment, you must remove a military post that now contains twenty barracks with officers' quarters and a pumping plant. It is estimated that this will cost only $40,000. But, gentlemen, did you ever hear of a measure going through this body to build a fort with barracks, officers' quarters, and all things of that kind at an expense of $40,000? You all know that $40,000 would not begin the work.

Again, you must remove the agency. There is an agency building there; there is a schoolhouse, as well as a blacksmith shop, a mill, and other buildings which must be removed. Can this be done for ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars? No.

Then there are 5 miles of railroad which would be destroyed at a cost, they say, of $40,000, and two bridges at a cost of $10,000. I submit that when you destroy railroads in countries of that kind, the expense of rebuilding them would be much more than these gentlemen estimate.

Another thing: Suppose the Indians would be benefited. Can this Government afford to build a dam that the very expert upon whom you rely admits will fill up in twenty-eight years? How does he get around this difficulty? He says we are fortunate in having another site, if this should fill up in twenty-eight years: that we may build at the Butte, at a cost of $2,643,000; and then when the Butte fills up, in about twenty years, we can build another at the Riverside at a cost of $1,922,000.

It seems to me that the facts which can be gathered from the reports are sufficient to defeat this amendment, and that this House ought to instruct its conferees to further insist upon its disagreement. We ought never to give in to this sort of a proposition. I do not see how these gentlemen, who claim to be the friends of irrigation, can come in here and support a proposition of this kind.

There is another thing to be considered. Nearly every dam that has been built in that country has been destroyed and is now a failure. They say there is not another stream like the Gila River in all this country—none so destructive, with its great washouts and floods. It would fill up a reservoir, as a gentleman says who lives in that neighborhood, in even less time than I have mentioned—less than twenty-eight years.

One other remark. There is now pending in court a case to decide whether or not the Florence Dam Company has the right to build a dam and take the water away from the Indians.

That question has not yet been settled. The Florence Dam Company, in order to secure a permit to build its dam, agreed to supply the Indians. The case is now in the courts, but how it will be decided we do not know. We people in Kansas are very much interested in that question, because the constituents of the gentleman from Colorado have been depriving the citizens of Kansas of the water of the Arkansas River, and we would like to have this question settled in the court. We do not think the people have the right to divert the water from its natural channels.

I hope the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas will not prevail.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, the discussion that has just gone on, the argument that has just been made in opposition to this appropriation, which is to be given to construct a dam, ostensibly for the Pima Indians on the San Carlos Reservation, and take them off the expense list of the Government, has proceeded upon a line of supposed facts that do not exist. The gentleman has made statements—of course, they must be hearsay, because they are not, as a matter of fact, true—and my purpose shall be to try to controvert some of them. Now, the merit of the proposition is plain when the facts are known. First, it is plain, because it will be humane for the Indians themselves, and, secondly, it will be a piece of business economy on the part of the Government. This question has been before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands for nearly two years. Hearings upon top of hearings have been had by that committee, with a view of obtaining complete knowledge of the facts back of the proposition that the dam should be built. After exhausting the testimony on that subject and an investigation of all the facts, the committee has reached the conclusion which is formulated in the report, which I will read as a part of my argument.

Your committee find that the Indians known as the Pima Indians are located on the Sacaton Indian Reservation, on the Gila River, in the Territory of Arizona, some 20 miles below Florence, in Pinal County. They and other Indians with them, mainly dependent upon the products of the soil coming from that reservation, are in number about 8,000. These Indians from time immemorial have occupied this particular section, now known as the Sacaton Reservation, which contains about 50,000 acres of land, 30,000 of which is the most productive soil of the valley, and have supported themselves by agriculture by utilizing for irrigation the waters of Gila River. They have always been the friends of the American people, and at times, when the savage warrior made it dangerous for the Americans and pioneers in that country to be there at all, because of their cruel warfare, they became the defender of the white man against the fierce Apache, and their reservation was a safe retreat for him; and now their chief boast is that not one of their tribe has ever stained his hands in white man's blood.

Mr. STEELE. I want right there to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Pima Indians have been living on the lands referred to a great many years; that they were at peace with the whites, had irrigated their own lands, and cared for themselves, and these white men that the Indians had befriended had come in and stole their water rights?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I do not understand that to be the fact.

Mr. STEELE. Well, I do.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. You have not studied the facts as the committee have that has passed on this matter.

Mr. STEELE. Because the gentleman states it is not the fact does not make it any the less true.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I make the statement as the committee found.

As civilization progressed and that country became settled, the lands of the Gila River have been taken up by the white settlers above this reservation, who bought them from the Government, which lands carried water rights, etc., and they have appropriated the waters of the river as they flow naturally down the stream, until now these Indians have not sufficient water to irrigate exceeding from one to two thousand acres of their land in the dry seasons. With sufficient water, which they crave so much to irrigate the lands which they desire to put into cultivation and to till, these Indians would be able to cultivate and raise products of the soil sufficient to pay all of the expenses to which the Government has been put on their account, and to create a sinking fund in the Treasury besides. In other words, it would take them off the expense list entirely, and that is great.

And if the Government has the right to convey these lands to the white settlers, who take them up and make them homes for the people, it has the right also as guardian of these Indians to make the lands sufficiently productive to take the Indians off the expense list of the Government, which now costs about $71,000 a year.

Mr. CURTIS. What does the gentleman say it costs—$71,000?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Last Congress appropriated $30,000.

Mr. CURTIS. And only $7,000 was used.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Do you not know that they cost twice that, with other contingent expenses?

Mr. CURTIS. They have an agency on the reservation, which cost six or eight thousand dollars, and they have a school; but the Indians only cost us $7,000.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I am told by those who have control of the Indians that their total expense to this Government, direct and contingent, amounted to nearly $71,000. Of course I do not know.

Mr. CURTIS. I suppose you took into consideration the fort, with probably one troop of cavalry?

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. There is not one fort nearer than 100 miles.

Mr. CURTIS. There is a military post at San Carlos; and it is said it will be destroyed if you build this dam.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. On this point I desire to say this——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Finish reading your report.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I suppose I had better do that.

The Government of the United States now has appropriated through Congress $30,000 for their maintenance, simply to feed them, while the other expenses which the Government must bear on their account amounts to about $39,000 a year, making the expense about $70,000 every year that the Government must bear on account of these Indians, all of which would be avoided if this dam should be erected and the reservoir constructed as provided in the bill.

That it is practical and would be profitable to the Government to build this dam seems to have been established by the Government's experts who have investigated the facts concerning it. The preliminary report published in Senate Doc. No. 27, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, and also in Water-Supply and Irrigation Paper No. 33, lately published by the Geological Survey, show plainly and conclusively that it is practical and that it would be profitable to build this dam, and that it should be built and this reservoir constructed.

Your committee also find it to be an established fact that the dam when built to the height of 150 feet, which it may be, will hold when full 247,000 acre-feet, or water enough to cover that number of acres a foot deep. If raised 70 feet higher, which it may be, it would contain 550,000 acre-feet.

Mr. CURTIS. You know it takes 2 acre-feet to irrigate 1 acre of land.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. In some cases. You may waste 4 feet; you may get along with 2, or you can get along in an economical way with less.

This outlay will cost a little less than $1,000,000 or not exceed that amount, the amount carried in this bill. When completed there will be water enough saved for distribution, on an economic basis, in the dry season when water is needed, that could not be obtained from the stream, to irrigate the 30,000 acres of easy irrigable lands.

That it is practical and would be profitable to the Government to build this dam seems to have been established by the Government's experts who have investigated the facts concerning it. When completed there will be water enough saved for distribution, on an economic basis, in the dry season when water is needed, that could not be obtained from the stream, to irrigate the 30,000 acres of easy irrigable land of the Indians to the effect heretofore stated, and have a surplus of water sufficient to irrigate at least 140,000 acres besides.

This surplus would be at hand were the dam raised but 150 feet; and when raised 70 feet higher that surplus would be nearly enough to irrigate a half million acres. There would be sufficient water in this surplus, at a fair price, far below what white settlers now pay for water rights, to place all of their lands already purchased in a high state of cultivation, and to reach and reclaim much of the now Government land undisposed of, which might be disposed of to the white settlers at a reasonable price per acre with the water rights attached. These, all taken together, would reimburse the Government for its outlay in less than ten years. This being done would take the Indians off of the expense list of the Government—they would be made self-sustaining. Hundreds of thousands of acres of now idle land would be reclaimed and hundreds of homes made for the white settlers, and great wealth thereby added to the already existing wealth of the country.

These facts seem to be well established—indeed, uncontroverted.

To this 140,000 acres——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD, covering the whole subject, as I have not time to do it in debate.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. These findings certainly establish the merit of this proposition, placed on the basis of a policy toward the Indians alone.

But, on the general topic I maintain the Government should reclaim its arid lands, and on this I say that money expended for the reclamation of arid lands will result in a still greater growth and a still greater development, greater production of wealth than any other single enterprise in which the Government may embark. I have the data here, the figures showing what has heretofore been expended on other enterprises less important than this one.

Therefore, by your consent, and having your undivided attention, appearing for that brave people in my portion of the West who braved the dangers of the West, then inhabited by savage tribes, living under the burning sun, where the bird was without song, and who put their hands on the savage mane and led him from bloody plains of savage warfare to safe fields of industry and homes of civilized quiet peace, I proceed to the detailed statement of facts and give them as reasons why the Government should undertake to reclaim these arid lands. I submit also that these facts, grouped as argument, are more cogent and strong than any facts and arguments that were ever offered at the beginning of the governmental action in building internal canals for internal commerce.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as before stated, I apprehend that anyone who has not given particular attention to this question has no idea of the amount of land to be disposed of by the General Government. The Land Department, up to a few years ago, had not the slightest conception of it itself. Only about twenty-five years ago we heard from the Secretary of the Interior that there were perhaps 10,000,000 acres of public lands for sale; and yet since that time there have been over 150,000,000 acres sold, more than twice the area of the Republic of France; and since the investigation has been carried to its limit it has been found that there are more than 567,000,000 acres of Government lands subject to its disposition to-day.

Of that 567,000,000 acres of public lands subject to the disposition of the Government there are 541,265,248 acres of it in the arid West, in the fifteen States and Territories in the Union known as the arid region. An equal distribution of these lands among the several States, situated as they are, side by side, makes it a matter of inquiry as to whether or not it is not policy for the nation to take charge of them and place them in condition for sale to possible home seekers of the Union, in which over 76,000,000 of our people live and to whom the lands belong.

Now, I believe in equal distribution; and perhaps it is difficult to understand how the public land can be distributed in order that we may advance the theory that the distribution and reclamation of so vast a territory should be a national affair.

The reclamation of the arid lands should be by the Government.

First. Because of the immensity of the amount to be reclaimed and of its even distribution over the arid States and Territories, and because it must be reclaimed almost entirely by means of irrigation, if reclaimed at all—all in view of the fact that it is now the property of the General Government. Public opinion can hardly realize that there is now, or was at the end of the fiscal year 1899, a little more than 567,000,000 acres of public land undisposed of by the Government, yet it is true, and 541,265,248 acres of this amount is situated in the arid States and Territories and is distributed as follows:

	Acres.		Acres.
Arizona	54,608,531	New Mexico	54,720,863
California	50,132,241	Oregon	38 435,873
Colorado	41,988,377	North Dakota	19,500,555
Idaho	34,225,149	South Dakota	13,006,396
Kansas	734,080	Utah	35,231,466
Montana	74,558,143	Washington	19,098,420
Nebraska	10,799,332	Wyoming	52,055,248
Nevada	42,385,735

This list shows something of an even distribution of these lands over the arid States and Territories, and in view of this fact it becomes important to know something of how much of it is subject to reclamation, and how. As to this, the most authentic means at our command is the report of the special Senate committee of the United States Senate on the reclamation of arid lands and irrigation, made to the Senate in 1890. In that they reported that there was from 100,000,000 to 150,000,000 acres of this land that could be made productive, and that only by means of irrigation—more than five times the quantity of reclaimed land in British India, from which 110,000,000 people are maintained. Some maintain that these lands should be ceded to the States and Territories. All history shows that this would be a failure. Especially is it so here.

By the acts of Congress, March 2, 1849, to the act of March 12, 1860, nearly 60,000,000 acres of land of the General Government, lying in 15 States of the Union, known as swamp lands, were ceded to the various States in which they lay. They are as follows:

	Acres.		Acres.
Alabama	414,310	Michigan	5,729,843
Arkansas	7,668,987	Minnesota	3,109,142
California	1,773,857	Mississippi	3,325,437
Florida	16,631,302	Missouri	4,495,816
Illinois	1,493,718	Ohio	25,660
Indiana	1,265,107	Oregon	315,164
Iowa	933,949	Wisconsin	3,349,132
Louisiana	8,968,880

These are the beneficiary States of the swamp land grants; and they are all, with a single exception, better able, so far as monetary expenditure may be concerned, to reclaim these lands granted to them by means of the levee system (and which is but the counterpart of the reservoir and canal system necessary to reclaim the arid lands, and far less expensive) than any of the arid States and Territories are to reclaim the arid lands in their boundaries. This will not be denied by those who oppose this theory I apprehend, because through the whole space of nearly fifty years not a single one of these States has ever made a single record of success by the reclamation of any of these lands that had to be reclaimed. They mostly went into the hands of alien speculators and land sharks for naught. On the other hand, the history of other countries that have taken the matter of reclaiming their arid lands in hand as a national enterprise for their people have made a prime success of it in every instance.

1. From time immemorial Egypt has maintained her entire population on lands that Egypt reclaimed as a national enterprise, and by it, in ages past, gained the name and title "The granary of the world."

This is no failure, and is an argument in our favor. Not only so, but in British India, where famine and starvation in former days prevailed because of the shortage in the production of the soil, since the reclamation of about 26,000,000 of acres of land by the Government as a national project famine has been prevented, death from starvation has ceased, and 110,000,000 of its people are maintained from the production of the reclaimed land by the hand of the Government. This is the success recorded in history for that enterprise.

The Governments of France, Spain, Algeria, Australia, Argentine, and Peru all bear the same testimony without a break on the same point. Therefore we see that in every instance when the work was taken in hand as a national enterprise it was a success, while on the other hand, when turned into the charge of the State, in every single instance it has proved a failure, and hence we fear the dangerous course wherein this all-important matter of reclaiming the public domain has so often heretofore fallen and foundered, and cling to that which has so often carried its followers into the haven of success.

Another reason is that, in the event the States and Territories were or should be financially able to reclaim the lands, insuperable physical barriers would be so prominently in the way that it could not be made practically effectual there.

This would be due to the fact that all of the streams of any great magnitude in the West, and from which the greatest irrigation schemes would necessarily flow for the reclamation of the greatest bodies of these arid lands, have their source in Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico. If these States should have the sovereign control of these lands in their boundaries, they would necessarily have the water as well, and would, as a matter of sovereign right, have the control of it, and would therefore be able to defy the law of prior appropriation as applied between individuals, and by diverting the head waters of those streams would have those States and Territories lying below them at their mercy. At least it would be so in a measure. To state these physical advantages in favor of those three sovereign communities is to argue the case on this point, in so far as I now have the time to advert to it on that point.

Again, to ask this reclamation to be made by the General Government for the people of the West would be asking only fair and impartial treatment as between them and the people of the South and East and North. It would be asking no more for the benefit of agriculture in the West than the Government has done for the benefit of inland commerce in those sections just named.

For the benefit of inland commerce in those sections the Government has appropriated from time to time as original expenditure, to say nothing of the cost of keeping up the various canals, etc., in which it had an interest, no less than $230,850,567.60, and, as before stated, none will deny that this was wisely expended, for it was.

These expenditures have been somewhat of a local nature too, rather than national, or for the national benefit. They were as follows—that is, there has been expended for inland commerce in the boundaries of the following States the following:

Alabama	$2,764,191.19	New Hampshire	$434,930.36
Arkansas	784,910.28	Mississippi	2,323,856.10
California	4,181,251.78	New Jersey	2,068,087.26
Connecticut	2,096,545.19	New York	17,495,321.60
Delaware	3,223,118.44	North Carolina	4,046,935.07
District of Columbia	240,000.00	Ohio	5,741,812.37
Florida	2,511,509.05	Oregon	5,264,863.66
Georgia	3,382,538.91	Pennsylvania	2,451,202.25
Idaho	15,000.00	Rhode Island	1,538,214.00
Illinois	4,948,784.11	South Carolina	2,912,679.90
Indiana	1,869,753.03	Tennessee	679,089.85

Kentucky	1,705,531.99	Virginia	3,837,643.23
Louisiana	9,609,451.85	Washington	534,232.28
Maine	2,483,686.66	Wisconsin	7,705,301.32
Maryland	3,790,876.83	Miscellaneous expenditure	188,405,189.96
Massachusetts	4,943,767.10
Michigan	3,805,167.81
Minnesota	1,771,810.46	Total	230,850,567.60

Not only so, but in at least twenty States in the Union the Government has exercised the functions of a canal builder, not unwisely either, as before stated, and not in a single instance has it been done in any part of the vast arid West; and it has also all been done in the direct interest of commerce and not of agriculture. As evidence of this we submit the following statistics bearing on this subject:

IN GENERAL.

In the last fifty-three years Congress has expended in cleaning and improving harbors, building dams, canals, and the like work generally $392,606,596.28.

In 1896 alone for the same purpose $71,158,956.88 was expended.

This was all for the benefit of commerce in the East.

For canals and dams alone, for the benefits of commerce mainly, if not alone, the Government has made the following appropriations in the following-named States:

Alabama.—Grant of 5 per cent net proceeds of public lands after 1819; sale of same for canal on Tennessee River, $10,000.

Florida.—For the Peninsula Canal, $50,000.

Illinois.—Lake Michigan and Mississippi River Canal, $200,000; Hennepin Canal, $50,000.

Indiana.—Wabash River Dam and Canal, $65,000; Lake Erie and Wabash River Canal, $15,000; Ohio vs. land grant of 2½ sections on each side of all canals.

Iowa.—Canal from Red River to Mississippi, $1,500; Des Moines Rapids Canal, $733,750; Sault Ste. Marie Canal, $65,000.

Kentucky.—Louisville and Portland Canal, purchase of 1,000 shares of stock of the private corporation organized to build it. Value, $100,000. Subsequent purchase and maintenance of the same, $825,000.

Ohio.—Ohio River Falls Canal, $90,000; Cumberland River Canal, $10,000; Rough River Canal, $25,000; Zanesville and Taylorville Canal, $102,000.

Louisiana.—New Orleans Outlet Canal and Clarenton Canal, $150,000.

Mississippi.—Carondelet Canal, $25,000; canal from Mississippi to Gulf of Mexico, $75,000; also 6 per cent net proceeds of all public-land sales for canal purposes.

Michigan.—Grant of 300,000 acres of land to build canal between Lake Superior and Lac La Belle; St. Clair Canal, $1,090,250; Secretary of War authorized to draw for annual expenses for maintaining the canal; St. Mary's Canal, $850,000; Secretary of War authorized to draw for annual expenses in maintaining the canal.

New Jersey.—Ship canal across Bergen Neck, $150,000.

Oregon.—Cascade Canal, $1,728,000.

Pennsylvania.—Surveys for ship canal from Allegheny to the sea, $200,000; purchase of Monongahela Canal and improvements of the same, $358,733.

South Carolina.—Purchase of 800 shares of Dismal Swamp Canal Company's stock; Santee Canal, $39,000.

Tennessee.—Tennessee River Canal, $250,000.

Texas.—Galveston and Brazos River Canal, $25,000.

Virginia.—Purchase of 750 shares of Chesapeake Canal Stock Company's stock; purchase of 10,000 shares of Chesapeake and Ohio Company's stock; Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, $20,000; survey canal Chesapeake Bay to Charleston, $10,000.

Washington.—Survey canal Lake Union to Puget Sound, $10,000.

Survey canal Bakers Bay and Shoalwater Bay, $10,500.

Wisconsin.—Fox River and Wisconsin River Canal, 1½ sections of land on each side of Fox River, $25,000; Milwaukee and Rock River Canal, 5 per cent of net proceeds of public lands sales, $146,000; Wisconsin River Canal, $10,000; Green Bay and Lake Michigan Canal, grant of 200,000 acres. Purchase of portage of Lake Michigan and Lake Superior Canal, $350,000; improving same, $20,000.

To this much we refer to show what the Government has done for the benefit of inland commerce in the sections of country before named, and that the Government has wisely done it as a national work we are here to assert. But while we do, we further assert that, as a work of the General Government, between the construction of a reservoir for the encouragement of inland commerce and the construction of one for agriculture, there is practically no difference; and if there is, then the argument is in favor of the latter.

To ask for this reclamation of the arid lands of the West by the General Government for the benefit of agriculture in this great western country is only to ask that fair play and even-handed justice be done between the different sections of this great country. It is but an appeal to the magnanimity of the General Government.

From May, 1875, to June 30, 1896, the Government received from sale of public lands, chiefly from the West, $336,532,129.20, which was expended in Eastern improvements. Scarcely a dollar was ever returned for any Eastern improvement or benefit.

This great Government can not afford to stain its great name with partiality so great as to refuse to add its aid to that great section in the West for the benefit of agriculture when it has done so much for commercial classes and commercial sections in other parts of the country. Indeed, my people do not expect it. They believe that this great country, whose bosom but a short time ago was trodden by the hoof of war, that passed from under it and through the greatest war known to civilization, and did it successfully, and did it without the confiscation of a single estate or the execution of a single political offender, can never be so unfair. So do I. I appeal for the speedy report and adoption of this amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the amendment under discussion proposes an examination of certain reservoir sites, the survey of certain lands, and a report as to the feasibility of constructing reservoirs and irrigating lands along the Gila River in Arizona. Three hundred and sixty-five years ago the first white man visited what is now the reservation of the Pima Indians on the Gila River. At that time the ancestors of the Indians now residing there had their homes along the banks of that stream, carried on agriculture by means of irrigation, and had attained to a considerable degree of civilization.

From that time until the present these Indians have continued to occupy these lands, cultivate their little farms, and support themselves. As time passed the white man, who settled upon lands in the vicinity of the Indian reservation, diverted the waters of the Gila River above the Indian canals and took the waters which the Indians had been using for the purpose of irrigating their lands from time immemorial and used it for the purpose of irrigating the white man's land.

Appeals were made by the Indian agent to the Department of Justice at the time the Florence Canal was first proposed, asking the Department to protect these Indians in their right to use the waters flowing through the channel of the Gila, from which they had obtained the means of cultivating their farms for hundreds of years, since the white men first knew them, and for probably even a greater length of time prior to that date. The Department of Justice failed to take any action in the matter. The result was that the Indians were deprived of the opportunity to carry on their agricultural industry.

In this condition of things they planted only to see their crops destroyed by drought, hoping against hope, as they seeded and planted their little farms each year, that the white men would allow a sufficiency of water to reach their ditches to mature their crops, until they lost heart and became indolent and improvident and are now wards of the Government, requiring regular support and aid.

It is now proposed that the Government do these Indians tardy justice, by impounding the waters of the Gila River, so that their lands can be irrigated; and experts have informed us that it would be economical in conserving the waters for the use of the Indians to conserve a larger amount than they require and use the surplus waters for the irrigation of adjacent public lands. I personally have no knowledge of the feasibility of this scheme on the Gila River. The only information I have is that which I have received from the reports made by Government experts on the subject; but I will say that the gentleman from Kansas has very adroitly grouped all the objections that have been made to any of the proposed dam sites. He has raised all the possible objections that can be imagined in regard to all of them, and so skillfully stated his case that I imagine the House has taken it for granted that his objections apply to any one of the schemes proposed. The appropriation made by the amendment does not commit the Government to the irrigation of the land or the carrying out of this project; but it would give us a thorough examination and a full report, which would enable the House, possibly at the next session of Congress, to pass upon the subject intelligently.

Many gentlemen on the floor of this House, when approached and asked to give their aid in the settlement of the great question of irrigating and developing the arid West, have said that they oppose a general scheme, but would be glad to give their aid and support to some specific project. They would be glad to see work actually begun on some proposition that looked to the irrigation of the public lands.

Gentlemen, the opportunity is now presented to the members of the House to vote upon a specific project; to vote to do tardy justice to these Indians; to vote to make an experiment, or, at least, to begin investigation with the idea of making an experiment as to the wisdom and feasibility of the Government aiding in the development of the great arid West, and I hope that the House will support the amendment of the Senate. I now yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I have given this matter some little thought, but I have not so thoroughly investigated it as to be able to make up my mind decidedly as to whether I would be willing to vote for this proposition or not as it stands and as it came from the Senate. I have been an economist, opposed to all appropriations that I thought were unnecessary and extravagant, as gentlemen will have seen by my position upon the various pension appropriations. I am opposed to all extravagant pension appropriations; I am opposed to pensioning deserters, coffee coolers, and bounty jumpers, and all others who do not deserve it; but whenever I see a poor soldier who has stood by the flag faithfully and met death upon the battlefield, or the widow of such a soldier, I am man enough to say that I am willing to vote for his or her pension [applause], but I am just as firmly opposed to pensioning that class of persons above mentioned.

Some of my friends on the Democratic side have twitted me on going back on my record in the manner in which a few bills were passed on last Friday. Gentlemen, not so.

My position on Friday only emphasizes the position I have taken, that I am opposed to fraudulent pensions and extravagant pensions, because on that day these bills were specially selected by the chairman of the Pensions Committee out of the whole list of them, and only deserving ones were presented. They were good bills, and they went through the Committee of the Whole and we discussed them. Every one was regularly passed by the Committee of the Whole before being brought to the House. I was instrumental in reducing the pension of the widow of General Lawton from $100 to $50, because I thought it was too much. I thought it was an injustice to the private soldier and his widow, whose pensions were so much smaller than hers. Another thing, it is a fact that among the bills passed on that day were a number for Mexican soldiers and their widows.

Now, then, let us look at this proposition. Here are these lands that are useless. Somebody has said give them away; they are of no account. But of course that will not be done. This question comes up. If we do not do something with them so that the Indians can make a living, will not the Government have to support them?

I say I want some light on this question. As I look at it and read the Senate amendment it seems to me that it does not commit the Government at all to the continuation of this project any more than the appropriation in the Fifty-third Congress of $20,000 committed the Government to the experiment in the rural free delivery. See how that system has grown from an appropriation of $20,000 to an appropriation in this Congress of three and one-half millions. That system has passed the stage of experimentation and is a practical thing to-day. The theory has been taken from it. Now that system is to be extended to the farmers, the merchants, the mechanics, and everyone who lives in sections remote from means of communication. I have always advocated the system from the start.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the gentleman from South Carolina understand that there has already been expended $31,500 in experimenting on this irrigation of arid lands?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes; but that has been consumed and the parties do not seem to be satisfied, or at least no definite result has been accomplished. Do not misunderstand me. I say I am not committed to vote for this proposition, and I want to throw out these suggestions and ideas if it would not be proper for the Government to spend another small sum in experimenting along this line, as I understand this is all the land the Government has, that the other public lands have been taken up by free settlers, or nearly all of them. Now, would not it be wise to experiment in this direction, as my distinguished friend [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the great watchdog of the Treasury, said the other day along this line, to see if it will not finally prove beneficial not only to the Government but to the people?

As I said, I am not ready to say that I will vote for it, but I want to hear it discussed. I want some light thrown on it by the committee. I do not know whether it would be right to. It is a move in the right direction to utilize these lands, and the only way in the world to do it is to make the appropriation to experiment without committing the Government absolutely with this policy. At any time the Government might see proper it could withdraw its support if it did not prove to be a practicable thing. This is about all I have to say on this question, but hope other gentlemen may discuss it in a way that more light may be thrown upon the subject, so that not only myself but others may better know how to cast their vote upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS].

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I have been interested in this debate, especially in the remarks of the gentlemen discussing the measure who frankly admitted that they know nothing about the project from personal observation or examination. I desire to discuss this question briefly because I have personally been upon the ground, have examined the project at the request of the local people, have seen the Indians gathered there, have observed the soldiers at the post, examined the river, the railroad, and the land surrounding, and conferred with the Indian agent. My examination was accidental, given upon the solicitation of men who desired this dam, who happened to learn of my presence there and sought my examination with the hope that they would obtain my support for this proposition which they hoped to bring before Congress.

After a personal examination, solicited in that manner, I frankly say that this amendment ought not to be adopted. First, because it will not benefit the Indians in the slightest degree. They will not receive any benefit from it. Secondly, it will destroy the Government property, the schoolhouses erected for teaching the Indian children. It will destroy the best part of the farming land which the Indians now have in that valley. They now irrigate on both sides of that river back one-quarter of a mile with the use of little canals that have been built, and this dam will drive the Indians out of that valley and turn it over to the white man and his schemes. It will not benefit the Indians in the slightest degree. Now, when my friend says the white man has irrigated the lands outside of the Indian reservation and got good farming lands, that is true, but the Indians were never there by right—that is, outside the Indian reservation, and the Indians today are being benefited in like manner by the digging of ditches by the Government along that river, which will give them the same advantages that the white man has there outside of the reservation.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman I presume recognizes the fact that in the arid regions the value is in the water, not in the land, and that if the water is diverted at a point above the user and conveyed to other lands, the value of the lands from which the water is diverted is absolutely destroyed.

Mr. CORLISS. The reservoir you propose to build there will accumulate the water, but it will not add to the value of the surrounding property one-fourth of the cost of the dam.

Mr. CURTIS. The proposed dam is 85 miles above the Indian reservation.

Mr. CORLISS. Certainly; and it will not benefit the Indians in the slightest degree; on the contrary it will do them damage.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a matter of judgment.

Mr. CORLISS. This is not the scheme of the Indians; it is a white man's scheme, and it is wrong. This House ought not to appropriate one dollar for this purpose. Any man who will go upon the land and examine it will concur in my judgment. I have no interest whatever in this question. Happening to be there I was requested to examine it by men who desire to enter upon a project of this kind for their own purposes. They are not Indians. They are not working for the benefit of the Indians. They are working for the benefit of the white men who are located in that valley. The scheme is wrong, and the House ought to condemn this amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to visit the dam site which is proposed to be utilized for the storage of water; yet notwithstanding that fact, I have examined so many of the sites, have investigated in so many instances the question of the storage of water, that I feel fully justified in speaking with reference to the proposition. I have examined the report made by the Geological Survey upon this particular site. I have also examined the report which has been made upon this subject by the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Mr. CORLISS. Does the gentleman think that the judgment of the Geological Survey compares in value with the judgment of the Indian agent, who is right on the ground, working the land with the Indians?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. I can not say what kind of an expert he is, whereas I regard the recommendations of the Geological Survey very highly. The lands there may appear to be absolutely void of fertility, yet we know that out West all you have to do in order to make the plains blossom as the rose is simply to put water on them. You farmers in Michigan may raise 25 or 30 bushels of wheat to the acre; but we can take land that looks like sand, and by putting water upon it we can raise double the amount per acre that you do.

Mr. CORLISS. There is no doubt about that; but suppose you have only half a mile between the hills.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The gentleman evidently does not understand the scheme. It is to conduct the water down to the plains——

Mr. CORLISS. I understand.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is authorized by the irrigation laws of various States. You can use the stream as your ditch until you get to a place where you can divert the water onto the plains, and in this way you can reclaim any quantity of land.

Mr. CURTIS. How would you use the stream as a ditch when in a number of places the water is an underflow—not running in the bed of the river?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It comes up again afterwards.

Mr. CURTIS. In how many places on that river is that the case?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have the same thing in the Arkansas River, in the State of Colorado, where we take all the water out of the river and conduct it upon the plains, and 10 miles below we construct a low dam across the river and get another supply of water equal to that which was taken out.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does not the Government have to support those Indians anyhow——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And are you not simply trying to do something to aid them in making them self-supporting?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to be candid with the House. This question involves two propositions. One is to put the Indians in a condition that they can support themselves, and the second proposition is to reclaim public lands by means of irrigation.

Gentlemen have talked about the Government appropriating $1,000,000, as if none of that money was to come back. Why, Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt that by this project these lands will be greatly increased in value. Storage water is the most valuable of all waters, because it can be tapped at the very season that you most need it. You do not need 2-acre feet for the reclamation of the land. Why? Because there is in this stream and in every Western stream plenty of water during three months of the year—April, May, and June. July and August are the months when this water obtained by storage is needed. Consequently you can get along with an additional acre-foot, which will increase the area to be reclaimed to twice the amount of acres indicated by the gentleman from Kansas.

I want to call attention to the facts in this case. I want to see whether gentlemen can not recognize that this is an admirable enterprise to be undertaken; whether they can not see that it is one in which the Government in all probability will not lose a dollar, but will reclaim public lands to the extent of 140,000 acres. The proposition contained in this amendment provides that after the reservoir shall be constructed there will be imposed upon the settlers who may locate on the lands to be irrigated by this reservoir such a proportion of the cost as will return to the Government the amount which it will have expended. Is it possible that this Government is going to be so niggardly in regard to its public lands as not even to put them in such a condition that they can be irrigated, when they will get back the entire cost of the enterprise?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. How much would these lands be increased in value if this project were carried out?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They will be increased a great deal more than appears by the estimate which has been submitted here by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. What is your estimate?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The estimate of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands is that 170,000 acres could be irrigated at an expense of $1,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. One hundred thousand acres.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; here is the language of the committee:

> Your committee also find it to be an established fact that the dam when built to the height of 150 feet, which it may be, will hold when full 247,000 acre-feet, or water enough to cover that number of acres a foot deep. If raised 70 feet higher, which it may be, it would contain 550,000 acre-feet. This outlay will cost a little less than $1,000,000 or not exceed that amount, the amount carried in this bill. When completed there will be water enough saved for distribution, on an economic basis, in the dry season, when water is needed, that could not be obtained from the stream, to irrigate the 30,000 acres of easy irrigable land of the Indians to the effect heretofore stated, and have a surplus of water sufficient to irrigate at least 140,000 acres besides.

Add your 30,000 acres of Indian lands to your 140,000 acres of public lands, and the result is 170,000 acres. Divide that into $1,000,000 and the result is $5.88 per acre.

Mr. CURTIS. How much would be the additional cost? Would it not amount to $1,000,000 for 50,000 acres?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; it would not. Your expert says that this reservoir can be built for $1,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. But the first dam will cost $1,038,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. CURTIS. That is what they say in this report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon. The contemplation is that this dam can be built to the height of 220 feet at a cost of $1,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. One million and thirty-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We are reading from different papers.

Mr. CURTIS. I am reading from Irrigation Paper 33.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am reading from the report of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Mr. CURTIS. Who wrote the report?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. It was presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. What will the land be worth per acre after it is irrigated?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Somewhere between $20 and $30 per acre; and the settlers are perfectly willing to pay their proportion of the total cost of the reservoir to the Government, so that the Government will not lose a single nickel by reason of this expenditure. And in that way you will add 140,000 acres of land that are now not worth 10 cents an acre to the best agricultural land in the world.

The people out there are not asking the Government to give this money for nothing. The proposition is that you construct this dam and that the settlers will give back the cost of construction for the water rights granted by the Government. When you take into consideration that feature of the scheme there can be no objection to it. Both political parties in the platforms of their national conventions indorsed the reclamation of the arid lands. Here is a feasible proposition that comes before gentlemen who have been in both the political conventions, and right here on the first-proposed feasible scheme that is presented you gentlemen fight it and say you will not give it your support.

Mr. CURTIS. What do you say about that part of the report in which they say that it will fill up in twenty-eight years?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to answer that question, but my time has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. I want to devote my time to that part of the Indian reservations that are on the arid domain. I have in my district 1,000 Ute Indians. A few years ago this House and the Senate started a commission to make a treaty with the Ute Indians in the reservations in Colorado and in New Mexico. That commission went on the Mancos and Dolores River and selected for a thousand Indians a piece of ground 15 miles wide by 40 miles long, as good as there is in the West. It had not one drop of water on it suitable for irrigation, with the exception of Ute Springs, that furnishes no water for irrigation beyond some little truck patches. It had water in the great canyons in the Mancos and waters in the Dolores River. These commissioners told these Indians that the Government would reservoir the spring waters or the spring flows that they might irrigate these lands and become self-supporting. Now, four or five years have passed. These Indians can not grow a single article of food. One of them appeared here last spring and said to me that he and his family had 640 acres of ground and could not cultivate one single acre.

Mr. CURTIS. Have not we for several years been appropriating money, putting it in the hands of commissioners, to get your irrigation company to furnish water to these Indians?

Mr. BELL. No, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. In this bill there is an appropriation, and we have been doing it for the last three years.

Mr. BELL. That is for the purpose of irrigating certain land the Utes have taken in severalty. The Government has never been brought down to watering a reservation that has been taken by the Indians as a tribe, though the agents have investigated from time to time. Now, I know how different these questions seem to you from the appearance they make to one on the ground.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. These settlers that you now speak of went upon these lands when they knew they were arid, did they not?

Mr. BELL. The Government put these Indians on. I am talking about Indians.

Mr. HEPBURN. I thought you were talking about settlers?

Mr. BELL. I have not mentioned anybody but Indians. We have Indian tribes scattered all over the arid West. We have failed to provide them with water for irrigation, loaded them down with land, and they are not progressing to any perceptible degree. As I said a while ago, an Indian by the name of Frost, who talks good English, came to Congress for the purpose of trying to prevail on Congress to allow him to sell some of his ground that he might buy a horse, buy a plow, buy tools and implements that he is in need of.

He said that he and his children and wife owned 640 acres of ground, and the white men were using it just as they had before it was taken in severalty. The Government had loaded them down with land and made it impossible for them to fence it and cultivate it, and, therefore, the whites still had possession of this ground. Now, I imagine this same condition upon this Gila River Indian Reservation. You put such environment around the American Indian on the arid domain that he can not become self-sustaining, and never can until these lands are watered.

Mr. GILBERT. If the gentleman will permit me, the difficulty that presents itself to my mind, not knowing anything practical about the subject, is whether these reservoirs will not fill up in a few years.

Mr. BELL. Those that have been built have not filled up. At places they do fill up, but can not they be dredged the same as our waterways in the country, and the same as we dredge our ditches?

Mr. CURTIS. The expert says that at the place where it is proposed to put this reservation that it will fill up in twenty-eight and five-tenths years, and there is no means possible whereby it can be cleaned out.

Mr. BELL. I would dislike to take the word of a mere Indian inspector.

Mr. CURTIS. This was an expert from the Geological Survey.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Lippincott and others of the survey out there insist that they have not sufficient information upon which to base a reliable opinion. They are now demanding such information. The difficulty is that the Indian Department and those interested in the Indians and know something about the conditions upon the ground are continually hampered by our Representatives in Congress, who do not know the conditions on the ground.

Mr. GILBERT. What are the facts in those countries—from Egypt, India, Italy, and other countries where irrigation has been practiced for years—about the duration of reservoirs, and what are the processes by which they are kept clean?

Mr. BELL. I have never heard of a reservoir that has ever filled up to any great extent since the world began. I have known ditches and canals where the dredging machine had to go into them occasionally and had some matter, the loose soil, pumped out. That can be done over and over again. A partner of mine had control of pretty nearly every ditch in Colorado and he ran the dredging machines through but one, to my knowledge, out of many, and this was because of the small grade given to the canal. He went right along; it is not a very expensive operation. But here is the point on this special reservation: You must reservoir this water or you must move these Indians and give them land at some other place. The idea of putting a wild Indian in a position where he can not make a living is a crime. But some one says why not make the white man let the water come down? Now, if you had lived at the tail end of a lateral as long as I have you would know something about this subject.

We had a deputy water commissioner with a legal decree for priority, one who lived at the lower end of the canal, and he could not get the water down to himself. You can not do it. The man upstream will have the water, and it would take an army of men to secure it for these people. This water is decreed to users as priority one, two, three, etc., according to the time of appropriation. The first in time is the first in right. A neighbor of mine came into town during the low flow and someone asked him what priority number he had. He said he had No. 28 during the day and No. 1 during the night. That expresses the whole situation.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. On the question of the complaint about the filling up of the reservoirs, is it not a matter of history that from the time British India as a natural enterprise made it possible to irrigate the lands there, was there any complaint of the filling up of the reservoir?

Mr. BELL. Never. If the reservoir or ditch should fill with dirt or sand it could be dredged out just like you would do with navigable streams, but settling grounds can be chosen and avoid such possible filling.

Some of them may fill up, but this is a mere bugaboo. This information is asked for, this little appropriation for experts; and this Government to-day has got the best expert, probably, alive in charge of irrigation of Indian lands, Prof. Walter Graves, who was the chief advising engineer of the West on hydraulic plants before he became an employee of the Government. He now represents all the canals for irrigation of the Indian arid lands of the United States, and is the highest authority on such matters.

[Mr. RIDGELY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13575) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6146. An act for the relief of the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased, and of Lebbeus H. Rogers;

H. R. 6204. An act for the relief of Oliva M. Clifford; and

H. Res. 74. Joint resolution authorizing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the San Antonio International Fair and at the Texas State Fair and Dallas Exposition, to be held in the cities of San Antonio, Tex., and Dallas, Tex., to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following resolutions:

House concurrent resolution 86.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That during the remainder of the present session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand.

House concurrent resolution 79.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the report of the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, of which 8,000 shall be for the House of Representatives, 4,500 for the Senate, 600 for the office of Secretary of War, 500 for the Chickamauga Park Commission, and 25 copies for each of the speakers at the dedication.

House concurrent resolution 59.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies of the report proper, 500 copies of the report of the assistant inspector-general on the State Homes, and 150 copies of the record of members for the use of the Home.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 109.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives 2,200 copies of the military laws of the United States, to include all legislation in respect to military affairs of the Fifty-sixth Congress, of which 650 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,350 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 200 for the use of the War Department.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH].

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have any particular information touching this precise amendment, but I want to say something upon the subject generally of irrigation. In the first place I desire to say that the just laws are general laws, and that I am opposed to special legislation in every respect. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] said that we did not seem to understand the scheme, but the scheme seems to be that this Government shall make land worth 10 cents an acre by an expenditure of money worth $20 an acre. I believe that these schemes should be local schemes, and should be taken care of by the States. I do not believe it is fair to tax the people in my district, who own farming land worth from $75 to $125 an acre, to make these lands which are practically useless worth $20 an acre and to bring them into competition with the lands in the part of the country like our district which have been purchased and which are now owned by the farmers.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Republican platform reads as follows——

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, I know how the Republican platform reads, and I will answer the question before it is asked. I want to say that if my party or any other party is wrong, it ought to get right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. So the gentleman proposes to repudiate his party platform?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I am not in a position to repudiate anything. I am not speaking for my party. I am speaking for myself. I think it is mighty commendable, as I read the history of the Indians, that they are now desirous of having water. [Laughter.] It is the first time I ever heard of an Indian clamoring for water.

Mr. TALBERT. They have found out how good it is.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The gentleman says the Indians have found out how good it is, but it is simply a scheme, and the idea of helping the poor Indian is all in the air. The poor Indian gets nothing out of it. It is the landowners, the great corporations and trusts that own these large fields of arid lands that are going to get the water and get the benefit of it, and the poor Indian will get nothing.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understand the gentleman alleges as a reason why he opposes this amendment that it will bring additional lands in competition with the lands now under cultivation.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. That is one reason, and I oppose it on the ground that I am opposed to special legislation for special classes and special privileges; and I want to say further that in proof of what I said that this is not for the benefit of the Indians you people off in that country take out these committees from Congress at a large expense to view your domain and to view your enterprises. The Indians do not take them out there, but landowners take them out there.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now for the question: Do you favor a proposition to aid in the construction of additional merchant ships which would come into competition with those we now have?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will determine that when I get to it, my friend. [Laughter.] That is not before the House at present. I want to say in a general way, though, that I am opposed to subsidies, and I am opposed to the present bill now before the Senate. I am frank to say that. If it was here to-day I would not vote for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-one minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. How much time has this side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will not the gentleman from New York yield to me five minutes besides?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think I can. If the gentleman from Arkansas has only reserved four minutes, I think it would be fair to yield to him.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, let us ascertain first the proposition with reference to which we are called upon to vote. The Senate amendment under consideration involves work of investigation regarding the proposed reservoir at San Carlos, on the the Gila River, which it is estimated when constructed will cost eleven hundred thousand dollars, and appropriates $100,000 for that purpose, for examining the proposed foundation of the dam, making borings, making surveys, ascertaining the area of public land that can be brought under reclamation, so that Congress may be informed whether or not this project is feasible—this project which has been recommended by the scientific bureau of the Government, the Geological Survey. The amendment expressly states that the Government of the United States is not committed beyond the appropriation and that the appropriation is simply for investigation. It provides not only for an investigation of the dam site, but of the underflow, the contention on the part of one Senator being that there was sufficient underflow which if availed of would satisfy all requirements.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the gentleman know that to tap the underflow would cost $30 an acre, according to this report?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not know. I have not gone into the details of this report. Here it is, a long public document elaborately prepared by a learned and scientific and practical man, Mr. Lippincot, the hydraulic engineer of the West, whose fame in that region is unsurpassed. When these gentlemen say that the scheme is practical and feasible, and the Senate of the United States has appropriated $100,000 for the investigation, I insist we ought to allow it.

Now, what is this scheme? Why, the Indians have their reservation below this proposed reservoir 100 miles or so. They number about 8,000; they have been farmers for centuries. The fact is that in Arizona indubitable evidence exists of prehistoric irrigation. These Indians are tillers of the soil, as they always have been. They are the Indians with whom the whites of that region have taken refuge when wars were being waged with the fierce and cruel Apaches. They have been deprived of their water—how? Why, sir, settlers upon the lands of the United States, taking advantage of the opportunity presented by our laws, have entered lands above them and have diverted the water, thus depriving the Indians of the water supply to which they had been accustomed. And with what are we confronted now? Why, sir, we must either allow these Indians to starve, or we must feed them, or we must remove them, or we must permit them to remain upon their lands, the Government storing the flood waters of this river so that they may be available for irrigation. And the evidence is that 93 per cent of the flow of that river goes to waste—93 per cent!

Now, what is the expense involved? The gentleman from Kansas says that an expert has admitted to him that the cost would be $2,000,000. When I asked him who the expert was, he said he was Mr. Maxwell, the chairman of the Irrigation Association. Now, I admit that Mr. Maxwell is a very capable man—probably better informed on this subject than any man outside of the special profession of hydraulics and irrigation engineering—but he is not an engineer, and his statement to me was not that this undertaking would cost $2,000,000, but that it would pay even if it cost $2,000,000. I did not understand him to say that it would cost $2,000,000. The statement of the hydraulic engineer, Mr. Lippincott, is that it will cost a little over a million dollars. The expense account of these Indians is likely to increase from day to day. Unless they become tramps and wanderers over the face of the earth, it will amount to thirty or forty or fifty thousand dollars a year. More than that, this is an interest charge on at least $1,000,000. We shall have to keep it up, and so this expense capitalized would mean $1,000,000. What is the compensation of the scheme?

Why, sir, there are 100,000 acres of land, the richest land in the country, subject to this reservoir, the waters of which can easily reclaim it. What will be the value of that land so reclaimed? Such land in Arizona to-day is worth from forty to fifty dollars an acre; for recollect that this land is in the citrus belt; it is in the area of intensive cultivation, and it is no extraordinary thing to find in southern California land in that belt worth from $1,000 to $1,500 an acre. In that region 10 acres of land under this intensified cultivation will support a family. Is it, then, unreasonable to suppose that these hundred thousand acres of land will sell for at least $20 an acre? And under this amendment this land is reserved from general entry—is reserved as a part of the entire project from which the Government may recoup itself by sales. This land to which water is to be supplied is land absolutely valueless without water, but with it is very valuable. Recollect that in that arid region land is worthless; water is invaluable.

Now, in view of these facts presented by scientific men employed by the Government—members of a corps unsurpassed anywhere in scientific and practical work—I ask, Are we warranted in refusing an appropriation of $100,000 for investigation, for preliminary work, in order to ascertain beyond a doubt whether or not the scheme is practicable? I ask whether every consideration of humanity does not demand that we do something for these Indians. And in connection with that we can do the businesslike thing of recouping the cost of the enterprise by placing these public lands, when made valuable by this enterprise, under sale. Is it not a reasonable thing to take at least this initial step, which, as I have already stated, does not commit us finally to the enterprise?

Mr. GILBERT. Is there any doubt about the fertility of the soil there when the water is supplied?

Mr. NEWLANDS. None whatever.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask just one question. This money, as I understand, is not given away, but is to be expended in the interest of the Government, and it will receive its return in the way of rentals of this water power?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, as a rule, the land is sold with the water rights; and that land, when this improvement has been made, will be worth from $40 to $50 an acre.

Mr. TALBERT. Then this is not a gift to anybody?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. As I understand, this preliminary outlay may return a large percentage to the Government.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] whether he will not yield five minutes more, as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] desires to be heard?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield the gentleman from Nevada three minutes of my time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. How much time has this side remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARNER). Four minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield the gentleman from Nevada three minutes of our time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I propose to yield that time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not give the gentleman the time to be yielded to other gentlemen. I thought the gentleman wanted it for himself. I am not giving my time to be farmed out to the opposition. That would not be fair.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the gentleman whether he will not give three minutes to the gentleman from Washington, a member of his own side of the House?

Mr. SHERMAN. I supposed the gentleman was asking the time for himself. I can not give him time to be farmed out to anyone else. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. How much time does he desire?

Mr. CANNON. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that upon such a question as this we should have to address comparatively empty seats. I do not know that I can do more than to put into the RECORD very briefly what possibly I may have stated in substance heretofore.

To me this is an exceedingly important question. We have got to the parting of the ways. I think the gentleman from Nevada recognizes that fact as well as the other gentlemen who have given attention to this proposition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I thought we came to "the parting of the ways" when both parties declared last summer in their platforms in favor of a national scheme of irrigation.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, my friend, that is as you construe their declarations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is no room for misconstruction.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think the Democratic party by any manner of means made any such declaration as the gentleman's remark would imply.

Mr. NEWLANDS. How about the declaration of the Republican party?

Mr. CANNON. As the gentleman seeks to draw attention to this point, I will read the declarations. Here is what the Democratic platform declared:

> We favor an intelligent system of improving the arid lands of the West, storing the waters for purposes of irrigation, and the holding of such lands for actual settlers.

That is what they favored. An "intelligent system." What was that? A general system. The Republican platform is substantially to the same effect.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But I thought the gentleman was against a general system or any system by the Government of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. I am talking about this proposition now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh.

Mr. CANNON. An "intelligent system" for general purposes. There are a dozen ways of working it out. One is by passing the bill reported from the Committee on Irrigation, which proposes a general system and puts aside the proceeds of the public lands for the purpose of irrigation. That is a general system. Another is, under apt and proper guards, to grant the arid lands to the respective States. That is another general system. Another project, not a general system, is to come here and in the name of God and humanity and the "poor Indians" to steal—I will not say steal, but to facilitate the passage of this appropriation, artfully concealing within it a committal of the Government to the reclamation of arid lands. On the one hand the cry is a humanitarian cry; they talk about "the poor Indian," and at the same time they undertake to put in here a provision that commits the Government—to what? To the reclamation, according to the gentleman from Colorado, of 140,000 acres of land, to be sold, as he says, to the white men, while you reclaim 30,000 acres for the use of the Indians.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the gentleman say this proposition commits the Government——

Mr. CANNON. Substantially.

Mr. NEWLANDS. To the irrigation of a hundred thousand acres of land?

Mr. CANNON. Substantially; I have read the proposition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me read it. I certainly do not think the gentleman could have read it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not yield. I must state my proposition in ten minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But you stated it wrong.

Mr. CANNON. I will read what it says:

> Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as in any way committing the United States to the construction of said dam at San Carlos.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, the gentleman says this commits the Government, though the bill says that it does not. I ask the gentleman if he is not quibbling with the question?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Nevada does not lack for ability and ordinarily he does not lack for candor. But now let us see what this is. It appropriates $100,000 to do what?

> And for examining, surveying, and designating the vacant public lands which could be irrigated with the stored water from said reservoir in excess of the needs of the Indians, and in preparing the plans and estimates for the construction of said reservoirs and canals, with detailed reasons therefor, and giving as accurate an estimate as possible of the total amount which could be received from the sale of the land irrigated to actual settlers, with the facts and circumstances.

Why, these lands have been surveyed and surveyed and surveyed, and the whole scheme is described in the public document that the gentleman cited. Now, then, this is a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. CANNON. I do not yield at this time. Later on I may. Now, notice how it spreads out. What is the proposition—that you should estimate how much of this can be for sale to white people, and all that kind of thing. Now, then, the gentleman says the Government is not committed because there is a provision, artfully prescribed, that the Government shall not be committed hereby to construct the dam 185 feet high at San Carlos. Well, in the name of all that is good and lovely, if you do not expect to commit the Government by this, what is the use of the survey?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Not just at this moment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is very apropos at this moment.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to my friend for a suggestion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the gentleman remember when the Nicaragua Canal——

Mr. CANNON. Not on the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not asking about the Nicaragua Canal. Does the gentleman remember after the surveys and estimates were required for the Nicaragua Canal scheme——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I do not yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS (continuing). That an amendment was sought to be put upon the sundry civil bill, and the gentleman opposed it upon the ground that plans and estimates had not been sufficiently made to justify the commencement of the work?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; and here is the proposition made to the Government to-day. Here is a proposition to withdraw the lands from sale, 170,000 acres. Here is the proposition to make another survey for a dam 180 feet high, 80 miles away from the Indian reservation. Here is another proposition to inquire how much can be irrigated for white men of the 170,000 acres, the cost thereof, the price thereof; and it is openly avowed if this appropriation is made, to go ahead and commit the Government to irrigate the lands for profit. Now, then, I am not for it, and I am not for it because it does substantially commit the Government to this work. That is the very object of it, artfully concealed, and it strikes hand with the poor Indian; but while the poor Indian gets 80,000 the poor white man gets 140,000, and all in the name of humanity, the old flag, and an appropriation. [Laughter.] Now, then, this is a large question. The gentleman the other day said there were 600,000 acres of arid lands.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Six hundred millions.

Mr. CANNON. Six hundred million acres of arid land. How much can be irrigated I do not know.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit me to inform him?

Mr. CANNON. I do not yield at this moment, I prefer to occupy my few minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. CANNON. I hope to get through in five minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire to occupy much time. Now, how much of that affords water?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I will inform him.

Mr. CANNON. I prefer to have my five minutes. I will try to get through in four, and then I will yield to my friend.

How much of that water will irrigate, I know not. The canyons that can be dammed and the storm waters that can be stored there within this 600,000,000 acres of land, I know not what it would amount to; I think the gentleman was quite accurate when he said—which he afterwards qualified—it to be over 700,000,000. Now, I undertake to say that, in my judgment, to enter upon the irrigation of the arid lands at the expense of the National Treasury would cost two thousand or twenty-five hundred millions, and we would be passing legislation and appropriations here from Congress to Congress to administer it through our Secretary of the Interior, with the swarms and swarms of agents.

I do not believe it can be economically or honestly done. And I wondered a little bit how my good friend from Nevada, a member of the Democratic party, I believe, now in full membership—I wonder they did not keep him out a little bit longer on probation. The Democratic party in many respects does not meet my approval; the Democratic party in many of its doctrines does meet my approval. I have always, from young manhood up to the present time, believed that at the very foundation of the Government lay the principle of local self-government; and if anything is to come out of this 600,000,000 acres of land in the coming centuries that is good for the people that reside there, and good for the people of the whole country, it must come by intelligent local administration and local government. "Ah, but the money of the Government can make money by irrigating these lands and selling them to the settler!" What nonsense!

The Government in the name of humanity bought the Indians' poor land, almost at an expense of $40,000,000, to throw open for free homes. The Government was going to be reimbursed. I am not abusing the fact that they were thrown open for free homes; but the Government paid threefold what the land was worth. The Government going into this business of reclaiming 600,000,000 acres of land and selling them out at cost or a profit is idle nonsense; and I want to say upon this question of irrigation of arid lands, if there is ever general legislation and special appropriations it must depend upon this House.

Take the position. In the Senate there are 90 members, 26 of them Senators from the arid or semiarid States, and 36 Representatives in the House. Whereas the balance in this House is 330 Representatives as against 36 in round numbers. Here population is represented and there States are represented, and the 40,000 population in the State of Nevada has as many votes in the Senate as the great State of New York, that has as much population as the whole thirteen original States that are represented by the 26 Senators. Now, then, if anything is to be done, let it be done when we are not pressed for time. Let it be done on a general bill. Let it be well guarded and fully discussed. Let it not be a committal in this left-handed way by a partnership with alleged humanity for the benefit of the Indian. I trust that the motion to concur in the Senate amendment will be defeated.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I will only make a brief statement of my position in this matter, as it will be impossible to enter into a detailed discussion of the question. Nothing developed the fact more than the debate in this House that we need definite information upon the proposition submitted.

The question about which we are talking does not commit the Government in any degree to the final adoption of the project. Primarily the investigation is intended to reach the necessities of the Indians on this reservation, because in the near future—and it is practically so now—these 8,000 Indians must be fed by the Government, unless they secure water privileges on their lands.

I believe it is the duty of the Government, as these Indians are located upon the arid lands, to water the lands for them if it is practicable to do so. I believe that it is not only right, but it is wisdom and economy to do so. Otherwise we must go on and feed them as mere ration Indians and destroy any hope of their advancement in the future. The principal objection, it seems, to the proposition is that it is proposed to withdraw something near 200,000 acres of the public lands from sale or entry.

The exact proposition is to cause a thorough investigation to ascertain, if possible, if these Indian lands can be watered from the underflow of this river in a cheaper way than the building of a dam.

I am free to confess I do not see any bugbear about it; that if the Government can, by constructing this dam, reserve the flood waters and water these Indian reservations and reclaim the Government land, or any major portion of it, I can see no reason why it should not be done. If it will reimburse the Government, so much the better, but whether or not it will reimburse the Government, whether it will be ultimately wise for us to pursue the course after we have had a thorough and full investigation, this Congress can determine after this investigation.

We should not forget that a large portion of this country is interested in the general subject of irrigation, and we must not forget, too, that from sixty to ninety million dollars a year of public moneys go to the improvement of rivers and harbors of the country, every project of which is investigated by an engineer before it is adopted. This is only a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to cause this investigation to be made to get an estimate of the cost and determine the practicability of the project.

I believe it ought to be done; I believe it is wise for it to be done. I do not appreciate the action of the watchdogs of the Treasury that after hundreds of millions of dollars have been expended in other matters not so wise as this they even reject the proposition to appropriate $100,000 on a mere matter of investigation. I believe it ought to be done, and I believe the wisdom of this House will cause it to be done. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this amendment in which my honored colleague moves that the House concur does not aim alone to care for the Indian. It does not propose, Mr. Speaker, simply to make it possible for the Indians upon that reservation to have their lands irrigated, so that they may hereafter derive a support. It goes further than that, and I believe its real object is not to benefit poor Lo, not to look out for the poor Indian, but to look out for the rich whites. The proposition is, Mr. Speaker, to provide for irrigation first for the benefit of the Indian, and then for reclaiming the lands on the Gila River not included in the Indian reservation.

I had supposed my honored colleague from Arkansas had taken the same view of this proposition as did I, but I discover that with him—

> While the light holds out to burn
> The hardened sinner may return.

He seems to have deserted. The proposition, if it were simply a proposition to care for the Indian and did not involve a general proposition of irrigation, would not, I believe, be so earnestly advocated on this floor as it is to-day.

If it did not go beyond that, if it did not furnish an opening wedge for this great proposition of national irrigation, a wedge which it has been attempted to insert here in this House by an amendment on the river and habor bill, by an amendment on the sundry civil bill, and, if not successful, by inserting it on this bill, which I trust it will not be, will be attempted to be inserted upon every other great appropriation bill that has not yet been considered. If it did not furnish this opening wedge it would not be so earnestly advocated, and it would go along by unanimous consent in the conference the same as fifty or sixty or ninety other amendments went.

Gentlemen choose to say that the platforms of the two great parties have committed them to the question of national irrigation. Mr. Speaker, the platform of no political party committed it to come in here in violation of the rules of the House to have enacted in the closing minutes of the Congress as an amendment to an Indian appropriation bill a proposition which directly involves the expenditure of more than $5,000,000 on irrigation and which eventually, Mr. Speaker, entails an expenditure of untold millions more.

If this proposition were presented originally in the House, it would have gone out on a simple point of order. Every gentleman knows that. Every gentleman knows that the only way that they could get a consideration of this proposition upon an Indian appropriation bill was to have it inserted and injected as an amendment in the Senate and therefore to prevent us invoking the rule and striking it from the bill where it does not belong.

Gentlemen say that this is a great scheme that will bring back into the Treasury thousands upon thousands of dollars that we have paid out. Brings back into the Treasury, Mr. Speaker! Why, we paid out millions of dollars to buy land, and the argument was presented then time and again that when we were purchasing these lands the United States Treasury would be more than reimbursed from the sale of them, and yet, starting with an amendment to an Indian appropriation bill a few years ago and followed up by a separate bill, this House eventually opened up these lands for free entry, and by that single act, Mr. Speaker, made it impossible to return to the Treasury the millions of dollars that have been paid for their purchase.

We do not desire, we have no right, to enter into any great business enterprise of this kind, even were it possible, even were it probable that the United States Treasury would ever be reimbursed for the outlay. But, Mr. Speaker, every sensible man in this House knows that the United States Treasury would not be reimbursed for the money paid out.

Now, the proposition here, Mr. Speaker, is to continue a survey. The advocates of the irrigation proposition attempt to hide behind that very thin veil their real object, which is to enter upon this great project. If it is a survey alone that is desired, we have already done that. We have already appropriated twenty or thirty thousand dollars, and the surveys have been made completely and fully; and the report, covering more than 100 pages, illustrated, is now in the possession of the House, and that report shows that the construction of the irrigation dam in this valley alone would cost more than $5,000,000.

But, Mr. Speaker, this proposition goes beyond that. This is the opening wedge to the general proposition that the Government shall enter upon the business of national irrigation. My friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says that we are granting tardy justice to the Indians if we adopt this proposition.

Why, Mr. Speaker, that is a statement nobody ought to make on this floor, because it is not borne out by the facts. We have appropriated every year all that the gentlemen most interested have claimed as necessary to succor these very same Indians. And in making appropriations, Mr. Speaker, as we have done, and as we shall continue to do rather than enter upon this irrigation scheme, we are saving to the Treasury of the Government thousands and thousands of dollars.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, if it is a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman consider that it is justice to the Indians to rob them of the opportunity to support themselves—to make beggars of them—and then to dole out a few dollars from the Treasury of the United States to support them in idleness?

Mr. SHERMAN. "The gentleman" does not consider such a policy justice, and he makes a declaration that this Government does not do anything of the kind; that this Government tries to educate the Indians in self-support, and it furnishes schools in which 30,000 Indian children are given an education—not a collegiate education, but an education which trains them as carpenters, cabinetmakers, harness makers, etc., which trains them in all practical trades, by which, if they would follow them, they could support themselves.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman inform the House just which class of the various branches of legislation he has enumerated would enable the Pima Indians to raise crops on desert lands without water?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, the Pima Indians can raise crops upon lands that are not desert lands. Neither the Pima Indians nor the white men are undertaking to raise crops on purely arid lands. The gentleman knows that, and there is no pretense that they can do so.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman deny the truth of my statement that as a matter of fact the Government would be doing only tardy justice to these Indians by supplying them now with the water which it has allowed its citizens to divert from the lands of the Indians?

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that the Congress of the United States has not been tardy in giving justice or succor to these particular Indians or to any other Indians in the United States. The Congress of the United States has been liberal and generous in its treatment of the Indians at all times and under all circumstances and under all conditions.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not distinguish between justice and charity.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Allow me to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] whether he regards it as good policy to turn into paupers a race of people, 8,000 in number, who are engaged in honest industry—to make them dependent simply upon the charity of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I regard it as bad policy to come in here in the closing hours of Congress with an amendment to an appropriation bill which under the rules of this body could find no place here, and which provides not alone for the succor of the Indians, but provides vastly more for the enrichment of the white men.

I regard it as very bad policy to introduce such a proposition upon this bill. And therefore, Mr. Speaker—and with this single word I shall close—I beseech this House to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas to concur in this amendment. I ask the House to send their conferees back to meet the Senate conferees, with a vote in favor of striking this proposition from the bill. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. LITTLE)—ayes 58, noes 97.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] reserved a separate vote on amendment 52.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to that amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. On amendment 52 I desire to move to recede and to concur with an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not send it back to conference rather than waste time upon it here? The gentleman knows that he and I can get together on the proposition in conference.

Mr. LITTLE. All right.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order that this question may be sent back to conference, I move that the House insist on its disagreement and ask a further conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. LITTLE as conferees on the part of the House.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAYTON. I desire to present a second conference report on the naval appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and that the statement of the House conferees be read instead.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to say that at the conclusion of the reading of this report I shall ask a separate vote on amendment 89.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the statement. The demand of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HAWLEY] will come up later.

[For conference report see Senate proceedings.]

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives make the following statement of the resolution of the second conference with the managers on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on Senate amendments to H. R. 13705, making appropriations for the naval establishment:

The Senate receded from its amendment No. 3, providing for an increase of pay of clerks to commandants at certain navy-yards.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate—

No. 8, making $50,000 immediately available in the emergency fund;

No. 10, detailing assistant chiefs to certain bureaus;

No. 65, appropriating $10,000 for the extension of roads, paths, clearings, and improving grounds at Naval Observatory;

No. 84, constructing marine barracks on land attached to the Naval Academy;

No. 85, constructing commandants and junior officers' quarters on the land attached to the Naval Academy; and

No. 86, involving clerical computation—all the aforesaid agreements being agreed to.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate—

No. 7, appropriating $300,000 for the emergency fund, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows:

"In lieu of the sum proposed insert $250,000;" and the Senate agreed to same.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate—

No. 24, providing depots for coal, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows:

"In lieu of the sum proposed, insert $600,000," thereby reducing the appropriation $100,000; and the Senate agreed to the same.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate—

No. 26, providing for the maintenance of colliers, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows:

"In line 5 of said amendment strike out the words 'four hundred' and insert in lieu thereof the following: '$350,000,'" thereby reducing the appropriation $50,000; and the Senate agreed to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree upon the following amendments:

No. 9, providing for an inspector of naval accounts;

No. 25, providing for the acquisition of land for a naval station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii;

No. 39, striking out fire-protection system and extending office building for construction and repair and for fireproof construction at the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H.;

No. 40, providing for office building for steam engineering at Portsmouth, N. H.;

No. 42, involving a clerical computation as to amount to be allowed to Portsmouth, N. H.;

No. 60, making appropriations for naval station at Charleston, S. C.;

No. 61, involving clerical computation;

No. 67, relating to the Board of Visitors to the Naval Observatory and providing that Superintendent thereof shall be a line officer;

No. 79, striking out the House provision for commissioning cadets from Annapolis;

No. 80, for promotion of petty officers to ensign under certain conditions;

No. 8, authorizing the President to appoint three of the acting cadets of the war with Spain as ensigns;

No. 82, authorizing the President to appoint certain additional cadets at Annapolis;

No. 89, authorizing the construction, by contract, of three Holland torpedo boats.

GEO. EDMUND FOSS,
ALSTON G. DAYTON,
AMOS. J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to ask——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield?

Mr. DAYTON. I do.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to make an inquiry with reference to amendment No. 80, which reads as follows:

Whenever, in view of the vacancies in the grade of ensign on July 30 of any year unfilled by graduates of the Naval Academy, the Secretary of the Navy shall so recommend, the President may appoint to that grade, as of July 30, from among the boatswains, gunners, or warrant machinists, not exceeding six in any one calendar year. No person shall be so appointed who is over 35 years of age, who has served less than six years as a warrant officer, who is not recommended by a commanding officer under whom he has served, nor until he shall has passed such competitive examination as may be prescribed by the Navy Department.

Did the House conferees refuse to agree to that amendment?

Mr. DAYTON. They did, and for a reason which I will explain. I do not care to say very much about this; but it will be noticed that amendments 79, 80, 81, and 82 relate to the increase of naval officers—the personnel of the Navy. They are so related to each other that in order to have a comprehensive scheme we have disagreed to all of them, because we think these several amendments ought to be settled or determined together.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, one question in regard to amendment No. 10. Is there an agreement with regard to that?

Mr. DAYTON. There is.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the amendment authorizing the detail of an officer as an assistant to the chief of each of the bureaus of the Navy Department. In that connection I wish to ask how many naval officers are now on duty in the city of Washington?

Mr. DAYTON. I can not undertake to state without referring to the figures.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have been informed there are 101.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The information for which the gentleman from Iowa inquires was sent to the Naval Committee before the holidays, and it ought to be on file.

Mr. DAYTON. It is on file. I can furnish the statement by reference to the papers, but I can not undertake to give the information offhand. Since the Spanish war about 76 per cent of our naval officers have been at sea, and the others on shore duty. I can not undertake to say where they are. I want to say that this amendment carries no appropriation and involves the detail of no new officer to these bureaus.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not all the time more and more to put the power of the great Department of the Navy in the hands of the personnel of the Navy?

Mr. DAYTON. Not at all. If the gentleman will allow me, I will make an explanation so that I think he can understand it. Take, for instance, Admiral George W. Melville, the head of the Bureau of Steam Engineering. There are eight bureau heads. Four of them have had an assistant chief for a number of years by a similar provision to this. Four of them have not. This provision simply means that there may be designated one man in that Bureau to act in the absence, by sickness or other cause, of the head of a bureau, and does not provide for any new officers, or anyone that is not already employed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then these officers apparently, if it costs the Government nothing to have them as assistant chiefs of the bureaus, are supernumeraries and not performing the duty of any other officer.

Mr. DAYTON. It is simply to expedite the management of the public business. In the absence of the chief of the bureau the assistant chief acts in his place. He has already now an officer there.

Mr. HEPBURN. As it is now the chief clerk would act?

Mr. DAYTON. The chief clerk nominally can act, but practically can not act, because he has not the informatian. His clerical duties would prevent him from having the necessary knowledge. For instance, the Chief of Steam Engineering contracts for a large amount of machinery, and business in relation to it has to be considered. If the chief should take sick, or should be sick for two or three weeks, there would be substantially no one who could carry out that contract, and serious delays might grow therefrom.

Mr. HEPBURN. It would be just the same situation as if the division chief or bureau head in any of the other Departments should be sick, would it not? There is some way of carrying on the business if one man happens to be sick.

Mr. DAYTON. We have in all of the auditors' offices a deputy auditor, who acts in his stead.

Mr. HEPBURN. Each of these heads of bureaus is a rear-admiral, is he not?

Mr. DAYTON. He is not.

Mr. HEPBURN. He draws the pay?

Mr. DAYTON. He draws the pay, and his rank is relative while at the bureau head.

Mr. HEPBURN. And the name.

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. While he is a bureau chief he is a rear-admiral. Now, what does that cost the Government of the United States?

Mr. DAYTON. It only costs the pay of the rank.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the pay of a rear-admiral?

Mr. DAYTON. There is no increased pay.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am trying to find out what is the matter of cost of the head of one of these bureaus?

Mr. DAYTON. I do not undertake to say. It depends upon the man's service, the rank that he has now in the Navy.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose the chief has got the pay of a rear-admiral; suppose the assistant has got the pay of a captain. What would the administration of this office, at its head, cost the Government of the United States a year? That is what I want to find out.

Mr. DAYTON. No pay more, because if you read the amendment you will see—

This officer shall be detailed from the same corps from which the chief of the bureau is appointed, and such officer during detail shall receive the highest pay and allowance of said grade.

Not another cent.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am asking the gentleman what is the total cost of the administration of that bureau, so far as the chief and the assistant chief are concerned, to the Government of the United States for each year.

Mr. DAYTON. I say that it is absolutely impossible for me to state that here, because it depends upon what rank the chief occupies and the time of service he has.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the acting pay of a rear-admiral?

Mr. DAYTON. The pay of a rear-admiral varies.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does it?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. DAYTON. There are two grades. The first nine get more than the others.

Mr. HEPBURN. Can not the gentleman give the House the information?

Mr. DAYTON. I can by referring to the Naval Register, which every gentleman has access to, and ought to be able to figure out for himself without having it figured out in the House for him.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to know whether this is going to cost ten or twelve thousand to ornament our bureaus with this distinguished kind of a head and subhead?

Mr. DAYTON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have it here. The first nine rear-admirals get seventy-five hundred sea pay, and on shore sixty-three hundred and seventy-five. The second five get fifty-five hundred and fifty sea pay and forty-six hundred and seventy-five on shore.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, suppose a captain is detailed. What does he get?

Mr. DAYTON. A captain gets $3,500 at sea and $2,975 on shore.

Mr. HEPBURN. So the administration of one of these bureaus, as you have it now, or propose to have it, would be nearly $8,000 for the head.

Mr. DAYTON. That is true; but they receive that now, whether they are in the bureau or anywhere else.

Mr. HEPBURN. Not if he is needed somewhere else.

Mr. DAYTON. But the trouble is, my friend, there is no difficulty about these higher officers at sea. It is the junior officers that are needed for sea duty.

Mr. HEPBURN. We have no places for the higher officers at sea? Is that the admission of the gentleman?

Mr. DAYTON. There is no lack of these higher officers. It is the officers of the lower grades.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman tell us how many gentlemen there are now on the Navy active list drawing the pay of a rear-admiral?

Mr. DAYTON. Eighteen.

Mr. HEPBURN. How many at sea now?

Mr. DAYTON. Five.

Mr. HEPBURN. Or three?

Mr. DAYTON. Five.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have a separate vote on this amendment No. 10.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope the gentlemen will not insist on that.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is all I have to say.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not insist.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman let us have a separate vote on this?

Mr. DAYTON. Why, if it is insisted on; but I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to insist on a separate vote on this amendment No. 10.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DAYTON. I do not desire to yield. I want to make direct motion that the conference report be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Iowa that paragraph 10 is in the conference report; hence he can not get a separate vote on that unless the conference report be voted down.

Mr. HEPBURN. I suppose it can be had by unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that there may be a separate vote.

Mr. DAYTON. I am constrained, because it is a mere matter of detail, to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. RIXEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from West Virginia to decline to yield.

Mr. RIXEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RIXEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from West Virginia some questions in regard to the conference report, on the line upon which he has been interrogated by the gentleman from Iowa. I also——

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RIXEY. The parliamentary inquiry is this: Can there be debate on the question of the adoption of this conference report? We wish to give our reasons against the adoption of that report.

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary question. It depends entirely upon the gentleman from West Virginia, who controls the floor.

Mr. RIXEY. I desire time to oppose it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not determine that. The gentleman from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask for the previous question on my motion to adopt the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks for the previous question on his motion to adopt the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEPBURN) there were 48 ayes, 76 noes.

So the previous question was refused.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the report.

Mr. DAYTON. I believe I have control of the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not. I think the control changes under this last vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized to control the floor.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we ought to adopt this provision of this report. If the gentleman had allowed us a separate vote, he could have avoided all difficulty in regard to this matter. But there is something about the Naval Committee, Mr. Speaker, something about their duties, something about their associations, that unfit them, apparently, for the ordinary courtesies and fill them with the certainty that they are always immaculate in being right. The gentleman who has had charge of the bill has at all times refused to allow anything like discussion, and at all times has resented the slightest suggestion that other opinions than his own might be entertained by other gentlemen.

Mr. DAYTON. I am sure the gentleman from Iowa will certainly not make that statement in the light of the facts. I want to enter a disclaimer against it, kindly, and say that if I have sought to save time it was because there are a large number of items still undisposed of that will necessarily require almost the very last hour of this Congress to dispose of, and it did not seem to me that the gentleman himself would want to insist on a mere matter of detail in the administration of the Department and actually demand a separate vote. I certainly disclaim meaning any discourtesy to him or to the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. With the gentleman's disclaimer, there is a propriety in my withdrawing what I have said. But the gentleman has furnished me with a text in the suggestion that this is a mere matter of detail. I differ with him; that is a mistake. It is not a mere matter of detail when you put that great department of the Navy in the hands of naval officers. It is a part of the civil branch of this Government, and the usurpation, the creeping in from year to year of high officials of the Navy Department, has made the Navy what it is—the aristocracy that the people are complaining of.

You see how they manifest their power. When any legislation is proposed the Navy Department always takes a hand. They always have their lobby here—151 of them, I am told, in this city to-day. This is a civil department of the Government. Ninety-odd of them are on the retired list, residing here. What opportunity is there for fair and considerate legislation with a power like that?

Now it is proposed to give them more and more power in this great Department. In my judgment there ought not to be a naval officer connected with that Department. If the chief, if the head, needs advice he can always have it, and have it in the proper way, without giving to these men the command and control. This, as I have said before, is a civil department. It has become a military department, and here is a proposition to add eight more.

Oh, says the gentleman, this is inexpensive to the Government; it costs nothing to the Government. These 8 men may be captains, drawing nearly, or quite, perhaps, $3,000 a year, a total of $24,000, and they are nonexpensive only upon the hypothesis that now before their assignment they are worthless to the service. Will the gentleman take that horn of the dilemma? Are these men worthless to the service? If they cost nothing through this detail here, then it is the duty of the Navy Department to get rid of them as an incubus, expensive and useless to the Government.

We pay them from year to year because it is supposed that they are useful, that at some station, at some place, in the discharge of some duty, they are giving a quid pro quo for that which they receive. If they are, taking them away from that place makes it necessary to supply that place at the cost of the Government. So that the gentleman is unfortunate when he says that this action on the part of the committee costs nothing.

Here is the chief of one of these bureaus, an admiral, drawing perhaps something in excess of $5,000 a year, and here is, we will say, a captain to be detailed, drawing $3,000 more, a total of $8,000. The compensation of the Secretary of the Department is only $8,000, and it costs as much to administer one of these eight bureaus. Is there wisdom in that? Sixty-four thousand dollars a year to administer eight bureaus of the Government, when you give to the eight Cabinet officers only $64,000 a year.

There ought to be on the part of this great committee some regard for economy, some regard for the proper expenditure of the money of the Government, even if you are to start on this scheme of allowing the Navy to govern itself, for that is what the present system means. If you are going to pursue that, you surely ought to observe some of the economies that are to be found with reference to other Departments.

What would you say to a proposition to pay $8,000 to the head of any one of the bureaus in other Departments? I think you would find opposition to that. Mind you, these additional officers dispense with none that we now have. We do not get rid of a chief clerk, we do not get rid of his assistant; this is additional, and it is an addition except upon the hypothesis, as the gentleman suggests, that the officers are worthless where they are now disposed of.

I reserve the balance of my time, and will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I can not say that I indorse all that the gentleman from Iowa has said, but I do indorse his opposition to giving assistant chiefs to three of these bureaus. The Secretary of the Navy for two years has in his annual reports recommended that three of these bureaus should be consolidated. He has stated that it is in the interest of economy, of business methods, to consolidate the bureaus. There has not been, so far as I am aware, any recommendation from the Navy Department for assistant chiefs to any of these bureaus. I think it would be well here for the Clerk to read what the Secretary of the Navy says in regard to the consolidation of the three bureaus.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSOLIDATION OF BUREAUS.

The recommendation heretofore made that the organization of the Navy Department be simplified by the consolidation of the three bureaus of Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Equipment is renewed. Under the present system, from the inception of its design until completed and placed in commission, the plans and specifications of a naval vessel are in the hands of three bureaus, each with a distinct organization, each having exclusive jurisdiction within certain lines, and all charged with the duty of carrying on work within, but not beyond, their respective provinces, as nearly as may be at the same time.

Such a system is, in practical administration, cumbrous and expensive, and from its very nature tends to develop controversies respecting the scope of each bureau's duties and to occasion friction, delay, and want of harmony in doing whatever approaches border lines of jurisdiction. It is to the credit of the officers in charge of the bureaus concerned that work upon ships now under construction has been carried on without more friction; but the system itself is none the less objectionable, and is a source of inconvenience, delay, largely increased cost, and occasional confusion.

The present divided organization is the outgrowth of conditions which no longer exist. The hull, the propelling machinery, and the articles of equipment of a modern steamship no longer constitute simple, distinct, and separable elements in construction, but, on the contrary, in their multiplicity of details are so interwoven as to render embarrassing their supervision by three sets of independent administrative officials.

The union of these three bureaus, the chief function of which is to deal with the material of the ship, into one bureau, which might appropriately be called the bureau of ships; the consolidation of their several corps of assistants and inspectors, and the conduct of the really integral work of building and equipping vessels, under the management of one responsible chief instead of three chiefs, would promote the efficient and economical administration of this important part of the business of the Navy Department.

A chief of bureau is practically an Assistant Secretary. The proposed consolidation would not only reduce three of these assistants to one, but in like manner reduce the supervising, mechanical, and clerical forces in every navy-yard, and thus save great and unnecessary expense. At present each of these bureaus in question has at each yard its separate shops, inspectors, foremen, and workmen, all often doing the same kind of work. No private business is run on such a wasteful and inharmonious plan. I renew the recommendation in this respect of my last annual report.

Mr. RIXEY. This conference report, instead of following this recommendation, proposes to give to each one of the bureaus, which the Secretary says should be consolidated, an assistant chief. The only evidence before the Naval Committee, so far as I am advised, tending to show that there ought to be an assistant chief is the testimony of Admiral Bradford, who is at the head of one of the bureaus recommended for consolidation; and the reason he gives in favor of this proposition is that he wants someone to preside in his absence. I read from his examination:

Mr. DAYTON. Touching the question of establishing an assistant chief for the bureaus that do not have such assistants at the present time, I desire to ask you, Admiral, if such action is taken by us, whether it would involve any additional expense?

Admiral BRADFORD. None; unless the allowances of the assistant chief are increased by the act.

The CHAIRMAN. What bureaus have assistant chiefs now?

Admiral BRADFORD. The Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, the Bureau of Navigation, the Bureau of Ordnance, and the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. What bureaus have not?

Admiral BRADFORD. The Bureau of Equipment, the Bureau of Steam Engineering, the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and the Bureau of Yards and Docks. There does not appear to have been any method followed in assigning assistant chiefs of bureaus, as some of the bureaus having the largest expenditures are without an assistant. I would like to call attention to the fact that the present law was passed when there was but one officer in a bureau, and of necessity he had to be represented by a clerk during his absence. As I have said in my statement, there is a lack of harmony in my absence, and my chief clerk is a young man without any experience or training in professional matters, while there are in the bureau, among my subordinates, gray-headed officers who have commanded ships.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RIXEY. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. RIXEY. The reason that this officer gives for wanting an assistant chief seems to be that he may preserve harmony in presiding over the Admiral's board in his absence.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when the Secretary of the Navy recommends the consolidation of three bureaus—when the Naval Committee takes no action whatever upon that recommendation—we ought at least to pay respect enough to the recommendation of the head of the Department not to place an assistant chief in each one of these bureaus.

This provision contemplates that the assistant chief shall be an officer of the Navy. At this time the Navy is in urgent need of officers to officer its ships. Under such circumstances is it not wholly improper, when clerks can perform the required duties, to force upon the Department, against its recommendation, assistant chiefs for these bureaus?

The House should insist, as I trust it will, upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment for detailing naval officers to act as assistant chiefs of bureaus.

Mr. DAYTON. I would like now to make a little explanation about this matter.

Mr. HEPBURN. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of very grave import. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] is mistaken in saying that Admiral Bradford is the only man who has recommended this proposition. Heretofore Congress, without question, has passed legislation of this kind from time to time with respect to four out of the eight bureaus.

I say this has been done without question. We have now an assistant chief in the Bureau of Navigation, in the Bureau of Ordnance, in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and in the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. That leaves the Bureaus of Yards and Docks, of Equipment, of Construction and Repair, and of Steam Engineering without any officer of this kind.

The question of the consolidation of the bureaus does not arise here at all, because that is a change that can hereafter be made if Congress in its wisdom should so determine. This is only a question, as I understand, in regard to the proper management of the detail business of the Department. In these other bureaus an officer of this kind has been asked for. The request is now made in behalf of the four bureaus I have named.

The gentleman is wholly wrong in supposing that this will increase expenses. Admiral Bradford says that it is a mistake to suppose that the detail of this officer involves additional expense. This legislation is asked in the strongest language by Admiral Melville, who says:

That I should continue from year to year to make a recommendation for the appointment of an assistant chief of bureau, in spite of as many failures to obtain the requested action, is only explained by the fact that the need for this officer continues to be as great and even greater than before, owing to the increasing work.

I am sure that you fully understand the advantages of having at all times an expert engineer officer at the head of the bureau, and when, by force of circumstances, the chief of the bureau is compelled to be absent, a fully competent and authorized assistant should be ready to fill the desk. At other times the assistant chief of bureau could be fully occupied with a division in the bureau, at the same time not so trammeled with a particular and absorbing detail as to prevent keeping himself in touch with all controlling work, and thus be ready to prevent delay in Bureau business should the chief of bureau be called away.

An appointment of this kind is an obvious necessity for securing the best results, and it is to that end that I continue my request that you urge Congress to provide for such an appointment. Under the present system, when the engineer in chief is absent the chief clerk becomes the acting chief of bureau and has to assume responsibility for work with which he can not be professionally familiar. At the same time his duties as chief clerk continue to demand his attention, and these are extensive and important enough to fully occuy a man of ability and energy, such as, I am pleased to state, the Bureau possesses in the present incumbent.

I make this explanation, hoping that the House will not consider this a matter of such importance as to demand a rejection of the conference report. We heretofore reported a disagreement upon this item. A large majority of the House committee favored this item and placed it upon the appropriation bill as reported to the House, but it was ruled out on a point of order.

The Senate inserted the item. We reported from the conference a disagreement upon it, in order that, if desired, there might be a controversy upon it and a separate vote. There being no separate vote demanded and apparently no controversy, the House conferees have agreed to the amendment. That is the situation; and with that statement I have nothing further to say.

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. Who performs the duty of assistant chief of bureau now?

Mr. DAYTON. The chief clerk, who, however, has his other duties to perform.

Mr. MORRIS. But he does perform the duties of chief now——

Mr. DAYTON. So far as they are performed. Admiral Melville states the matter very aptly when he says that this officer has duties already sufficient to occupy all his time, although he is a man of ability and experience.

Gentlemen of course understand that the supervision of all these plans for the construction of new vessels, with all the details of machinery, etc., is a very exacting duty; and it is also a fact that the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, who principally has charge of this duty, is becoming a man of age. He is a man whom this House ought to be willing to deal with in a kindly spirit, so far as the extending of little courtesies like this that he may desire.

Mr. MORRIS. I understood the gentleman to say a few moments ago that these assistant chiefs were wanted because the chief clerk could not perform the duties.

Mr. DAYTON. Because he had other duties that occupied all his time.

Mr. MORRIS. Because he has not the capacity?

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, no; I do not say that, but because his other duties occupy all his time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] five minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I am such a friend of the American Navy that I am afraid I am considered by some gentlemen on this floor an extremist. Therefore I have no hesitancy in expressing my opinion on this provision. I am opposed to it, and the grounds of my opposition grow out of my friendship for the American Navy. If it had not been for the creation of so many bureaus in the Navy Department we would not have been "turned down" yesterday in our efforts to increase the appropriation for the construction of ships.

Not only has the Secretary of the Navy recommended the consolidation of three bureaus, in which it is now proposed to create these new offices, but the fact is that had this not been a short session of Congress these three bureaus, I undertake to say, would have been consolidated or would have been recommended for consolidation by the Naval Committee of the House; and the fact is that these six, seven, or eight bureaus, every one striving to procure as large an appropriation as possible for that particular bureau, is what has increased the naval bill to such gigantic proportions.

I am opposed to doing anything that will tend to further fix the bureau system upon the Navy Department. The gentleman who has just preceded me [Mr. RIXEY] has called attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Navy has recommended their consolidation, and I believe the House should reject this proposition. If you desire to promote the interest of the American Navy, the sooner you get away from the bureau system the better it will be.

If I had time I could go into the details, and show this House that in every navy-yard of the United States we have within the last three years appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars to construct separate and independent buildings for each bureau in the Department, and all the business could have been transacted in one building.

I know we could have saved enough within the last three naval appropriation bills to construct the four battle ships the House rejected yesterday if we had one bureau, as I am satisfied the majority of the friends of the American Navy prefer. I hope the House will vote down this provision, because it is the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Fifty-seventh Congress, if constituted as now, to ask the House to consolidate these three bureaus, and perhaps others, in obedience to the recommendation of the Secretary. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, no one takes more interest in the Navy of the United States or is prouder of its achievements than the humble member from the Sixth district of Kentucky, who retires with this Congress. I had an opportunity of casting a vote for the Spanish-American war, and I have never regretted it. Growing out of that war there was a controversy which was thoroughly discussed in the press, among the people, and in this House, as to the relative merits of two naval officers whose names were associated with the greatest battle of ironclads that has ever occurred, resulting in the destruction of the Spanish fleet at or near Santiago.

There has been from that day, July 3, 1898, a most persistent effort on the part of the Navy Department to recognize Admiral Sampson, who took no part in the defeat of Cervera's fleet, as the hero of that engagement, when he was miles away from the scene of conflict, and to ignore Admiral Schley, who directed the battle and was at the post of danger from start to finish. I desire now to have read in my time a letter or indorsement written by Admiral Sampson upon the application of a distinguished warrant officer, Charles Morgan, who has rendered valuable service to his country and sought to be promoted from a gunner to a commissioned officer in consideration of duty well and heroically performed.

The Clerk read as follows:

These are Sampson's indorsements respecting the application of Gunner Morgan:

NAVY-YARD, BOSTON, MASS., February 14, 1901.

Indorsement 1. Respectfully forwarded to the Navy Department for its consideration.

2. Mr. Morgan has good professional ability. He also has, which distinguishes him from most other warrant officers, a gentlemanly bearing. If he were to be commissioned as an ensign he would probably compare favorably, both professionally and in personal conduct and bearing, with other officers of that grade, as far as his technical education would permit.

3. It is earnestly to be hoped, however, that the Secretary of the Navy will not find it necessary to take advantage of the authority which I understand is to be granted him to appoint a certain number of warrant officers to the grade of ensigns.

While it is true that these men are selected from a large class of men of very unusual ability, which distinguishes them as perhaps the professional equals of their officers as far as their technical education stands, it is also true that they are recruited from a class of men who have not had the social advantages that are a requisite for a commissioned officer.

It is submitted that in time of peace the Navy's function consists, to a certain extent, of representing the country abroad, and it is important that the Navy's representatives should be men of at least refinement. While there are perhaps a certain few among the warrant officers who could fulfill this requirement, I am of the opinion that the vast majority of them could not.

Once they are commissioned they will have the same social standing as other officers, and no distinction properly could be made in extending general invitations. The consequences that would arise from their acceptance might not redound to the credit of the Navy or the country which the Navy represents.

I do not mean to detract from the sterling worth of the warrant officers of the Navy; I merely mean to suggest to the Department that, unfortunately for them, they have been deprived of certain natural advantages, and in consequence their proper place is that of leading men among the crew, and not as representatives of the country in the wardroom and steerage.

4. I request that this may be brought to the personal attention of the Secretary of the Navy.

W. T. SAMPSON,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy, Commandant.

Mr. BERRY. Now I wish to say that this letter was written by a man of humble origin himself; that he was not born with a silver spoon in his mouth or any specially blue blood in his veins.

Whatever refinement he has must have been derived from his education at the Naval Academy, and his indorsement reflects upon himself more than it does on the gallant gunner, Charles Morgan, who sought his indorsement.

I then ask every American to contrast the sentiment of that letter with the conduct of Admiral Schley in the midst of battle. Cool, calm, and brave, sending a message to the firemen and coal heavers below that the battle is going well, and when it is all over has the magnanimity to say the credit of the engagement is due to the men behind the guns as much as to the officers that stood on the bridge.

The American people have already rendered an opinion favorable to Schley, and no bureau or department will change their conclusion.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I concur entirely in all that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] has said regarding Admiral Sampson and Admiral Schley. In this connection I should like to have the Clerk read an editorial from to-day's New York Journal regarding Admiral Sampson.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHLEY AVENGED AT LAST.

Public men are fond of making fools of themselves in many ways and of showing their true characters. Admiral Sampson, who hereafter must be looked upon as a disgrace to American citizenship and to the American Navy, has expressed his feebleness of spirit pathetically and completely.

Wise legislation, demanded by public opinion, has at last authorized the promotion in the Navy of men from the ranks.

Gunner Morgan, a man, as Sampson admits, of admirable character, good education, temperate habits, and professional ability, applied for promotion.

Admiral Sampson, the unparalleled idiot of public life, vetoes the man's application on the ground, if you please, that he is not "a gentleman."

Admiral Sampson, the most extraordinary sample of a two-legged idiot that the world has ever seen, feels that if men should be promoted from the ranks they would "not know how to behave at social parties on board ship." Read this extract from the letter of Sampson, the amazing micro-cephalic Admiral:

"While it is true that these men are selected from a large class of men of very unusual ability, which distinguishes them as perhaps the professional equals of their officers as far as their technical education stands, it is also true that they are recruited from a class of men who have not had the social advantages that are a requisite for a commissioned officer."

Therefore, according to Admiral Sampson's view, the United States of America is to be deprived of the services and command of any American sailor who happens not to come up to Sampson's idea of dancing-class manners.

The greatest sailor in the history of France was Jean Bart, a common fisherman. All through his career, while he was fighting and winning the battles of France, he lacked absolutely the dancing-class manners which our prize fool, Sampson, considers essential to a sailor's make-up. The King of France in Jean Bart's day sent for him and was glad to receive him at court, although, of course, Sampson would not have thought him fit to appear on the quarter-deck during naval receptions.

Paul Jones was another case of a sailor who, according to Sampson, would have been unfit.

Extended to the Army and other walks of life, Admiral Sampson's idiot view would have kept Andrew Jackson from beating the British. It would have kept Abraham Lincoln out of the White House, and would have made the men in charge of this nation's affairs a class of empty-faced simpletons like Admiral Sampson himself.

There has been talk of promoting Admiral Sampson. That talk should cease. We call upon every genuine American in the Senate to prevent it. There has been talk of Admiral Sampson's bravery in spite of his absence from his post on the only occasion when he had a chance to fight. We don't believe in that bravery. A misguided idiot can not be brave.

It is our opinion that this admiral has insulted every man in the Navy. He has insulted all the men who, by risking their lives behind the guns, must be depended on to win our battles.

Admiral Sampson has deserved dismissal from the Navy.

We have no hope that he will be dismissed, but we predict that he will receive in the Senate and the House of Representatives such a raking over as few men have got in our history.

You must remember that Captain Sigsbee himself recommended Gunner Morgan for promotion. It was Morgan who, in charge of the divers investigating the wreck of the Maine, proved that the ship had been destroyed by an explosion from the outside.

It is Morgan who, according to the insufferable snob, Sampson, is unfit for promotion because he is "recruited from a class of men who have not had the social advantages that are requisite for a commissioned officer."

Below we reprint in full the milk-sop Sampson's letter to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a few words more. That editorial expresses my sentiments. The gentleman who wrote it ought to have his salary increased. It is a masterpiece, and in my judgment reflects the sentiments of every true American.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have but few words to say, and in the time I occupy I want to correct a misstatement inadvertently made by the acting chairman of the Naval Committee. He said that the pay of these detailed officers—at least as I understood him—would be shore pay. I do not so read this amendment:

These officers shall be detailed from the same corps from which the chief of the bureau is appointed. Such officer during such detail shall receive the highest pay and allowances of his grade.

So that while this officer is on shore duty he is especially distinguished by having the sea pay with all the allowances that are possible.

Mr. Speaker, I am not so much objecting to the increase of cost, although I think, notwithstanding the conclusions of the chairman of the committee, that it does add to the cost. The gentleman says it costs nothing. That is only upon the supposition that the officer you are to detail and take from the place that he now fills is worth nothing to his Government in his present place.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, and I want to ask if I am incorrect, that there is now a shortage of a thousand officers for legitimate use in the Navy, aliunde this——

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman can inform you. Whatever information we have upon that subject has been referred to his committee, and he is the repository for the facts of the matter. But whether there is a thousand lacking, we have been compelled, or at least have contemplated, sending the class from Annapolis half baked into the Navy as the result of not having as many officers as are needed. I think the gentleman is familiar with the facts.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the gentleman?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. DAYTON. I would say to the gentleman that there is no demand for officers of the higher grades at sea, but the demand is for the officers of the junior grades.

Mr. HEPBURN. We do know that there have been complaints of a dearth of officers. We do know that there have been recommendations to send the cadets prematurely into the Navy. We do know that there is upon shore now nearly 700 officers. I have been informed that there are 151 now in this city on the active list, and yet the gentleman proposed to add 8 more at the highest price, giving them the fullest pay, with all allowances that are possible in their grade.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this. I am opposed to this though it does not cost a cent. I am opposed to the civil branch of the Government being dominated by the military. It is not right. It is destructive of our ideas. We have attempted to legislate against it in the highest of our laws. Yet here is a proposition to put more military men in civil places.

We are now at war. Over in the Philippines there is a war, and yet we find, as I am informed, that there are 71 officers of the Regular Army snugly ensconced in comfortable positions at the Military Academy. One would suppose that when the tocsin of war is sounded they would want to be with their comrades on the battlefield, that may be a field of glory. That would be the proper aspiration, that they would want to be side by side with them; but in these degenerate days we find, if I have been correctly informed, 71 of these gentlemen have sought the secure asylum of a snug place in the Military Academy.

I do not want any military officer filling any civil position. It is wrong in essence and ought not to be permitted. We ought not to yield to the encroachments of a military class upon the civil function, and I am opposed not only to allowing further details upon our civil service from the military ranks, but if I had the power I would send every man to his regiment and every man to his ship.

If the gentleman does not desire to occupy any more time, I am willing to have a vote; but I ask that we may vote the proposition of approval of this report down, and let it go again to the committee.

Mr. DAYTON. May I ask the gentleman in that connection if he thinks it would be fair to vote down the conference report after he sat here silent on the floor when he had an opportunity to have a separate vote on the last conference report simply because the conferees declined to allow a separate vote?

Mr. HEPBURN. I asked the gentleman to let us have a separate vote on this proposition, and he refused.

Mr. DAYTON. It was impossible to do that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I asked unanimous consent, and the gentleman refused.

Mr. DAYTON. You could not have it by unanimous consent or otherwise.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman suggests that it is very unfair that I, having consented to this by silence, should now oppose it. I want to remind the gentleman that he opposed it; he came in first and asked for a vote of disagreement, and we followed his lead. Now the gentleman has seen new light and he upbraids me because I can not shift my position as rapidly as he can.

Mr. DAYTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is not my statement true? Did not the gentleman ask us to vote a disagreement?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. And now he comes in and upbraids me for not changing my views.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that conferees must agree, as I understand it. There must be an agreement or the bill will fail. Both sides must give away something. I came in with a disagreement in order that if there was any objection to the adoption of this provision it might be expressed by gentlemen. The conferees made that report, and no objection was made on the part of any member of the House, and in the disposition of these matters the Senate insisted on it, and we yielded it because it carries no appropriation and was a matter of Department detail.

Mr. HEPBURN. If that is all, it is still a great deal. The gentleman shifted his position and then upbraids me for not doing it. I am not the same lightning calculator.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman's position is that the House can not get at a vote on this feature of the bill against which the gentleman from Iowa has spoken unless it votes down the conference report.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what I understand.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken; and the report was disagreed to.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House further insist and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. There are several amendments to be disposed of first. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WHEELER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is his intention to ask the House to instruct the conferees?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; let them have a full and free conference.

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, there will be no trouble about the proposition at all; it will go out in a moment. If the gentleman had told me that he was so vigorously opposed to the proposition I would have been glad to have followed it, and there would have been a further disagreement.

I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House further insist on its disagreement upon the amendments not agreed to in the conference report and ask for further conference.

The SPEAKER. Does that apply to all the amendments remaining open?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. All amendments not heretofore agreed to?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask for a separate vote on a paragraph not agreed to in the conference report. It is paragraph 89, and I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I want to understand the parliamentary status. I understood that the gentleman from Texas was to make that request, and I want to know whether the request was barred out by the action of the chairman of the House conferees.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The question is on insisting on the disagreement to the Senate amendments, except amendment 89.

Mr. WATSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WATSON. Is it in order to ask for a separate vote on Senate amendment 80?

The SPEAKER. If it is in relation to one that has not been closed, it is in order.

Mr. WATSON. I desire a separate vote on amendment numbered 80.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, on all open amendments except 80 and 89, that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and asks for a conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on amendment No. 80, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendment at length.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know what motion the gentleman from Indiana makes.

Mr. WATSON. I will withdraw my request for a separate vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DAYTON. I move that the House disagree to all the other amendments and request a further conference.

The SPEAKER. There are but two amendments remaining undisposed of at this time. One is amendment No. 80, upon which the gentleman from Indiana demanded a separate vote, and he now withdraws that demand.

Mr. DAYTON. Then I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to amendment No. 80.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report amendment No. 89.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to contract for three submarine boats of the Holland type, similar in design, dimensions, and other respects to the six Holland boats contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy on August 25, 1900: Provided, That no contract shall be entered into for the submarine boats herein provided for until the first of the six submarine boats contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy on August 25, 1900, shall have been found by the official trials to comply with all of the contract requirements and been accepted by the Secretary of the Navy as working to his satisfaction: Provided further, That the price to be paid for each boat shall not exceed $170,000, the maximum price agreed on between the Secretary of the Navy and the Holland Company, April 11, 1900, said agreement being printed in Senate Document No. 321, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman from Texas desire to make?

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to move to recede and concur in this amendment, and to instruct the conferees.

Mr. DAYTON. I desire to be recognized, Mr. Speaker, in the proper time in opposition to that motion, and I rise now to ask my colleague on the naval committee if we can not have an understanding as to the limit of debate upon that item. I recognize that it is an important matter, and one that the House ought to instruct the conferees upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Connecticut has a motion.

Mr. HILL. I desire to offer an amendment and make a motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The other motion would take precedence, but the gentleman should have the amendment read now.

Mr. HILL. I will have it read now, so that the House may understand it.

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for the House to vote intelligently on the first motion unless it knows what the gentleman's amendment is. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] moves that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 75 (amendment 89) strike out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and insert in place thereof as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for three submarine boats of such character and design as he may approve: Provided,"

Also strike out all of said amendment after the word "dollars" in line 21.

Mr. DAYTON. I believe I have control of the time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not so understand. I understand that the control of the time is a matter of agreement.

Mr. DAYTON. I think the question can be settled amicably.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] having yielded to the gentleman from West Virginia can not any longer control the floor. The motion of the gentleman from Texas will have to be submitted.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HAWLEY] how much time he wants?

Mr. HAWLEY. Before an agreement is reached, I desire to ascertain the parliamentary status of the amendment offered here, and whether it is not appropriate for me——

The SPEAKER. There are two motions made. One is that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment. The other is the motion of the gentleman from Texas, which is simply to recede and concur. That motion will have to be voted upon first. The gentleman from West Virginia is in charge of the bill and controls the time for one hour.

Mr. HAWLEY. The point I desire to make is that if the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut is to be voted on prior to the question of concurring in the amendment of the Senate, I want to reserve any point of order that it may be necessary to reserve against that amendment on the ground that it embraces a question not in dispute in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can reserve his point of order until the proper time. The gentleman from West Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, I would like to have an understanding with the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Connecticut as to how much time each wishes to occupy on this question.

Mr. HILL. I do not care for more than five minutes.

Mr. DAYTON. What time does the gentleman from Texas desire?

Mr. HAWLEY. Three-quarters of an hour, I think, though I may not consume myself any of it.

Mr. DAYTON. Does not the gentleman think he can get along with fifteen minutes, and the gentleman from Connecticut with five?

Mr. HAWLEY. Suppose we agree that the gentleman from West Virginia have half an hour, and I have half an hour?

Mr. DAYTON. I want the gentleman to have all the time he desires. I yield him thirty minutes of the hour I control.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia yields thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not object. The gentleman from West Virginia is yielding his own time.

Mr. DAYTON. In view of the fact that my colleague on the committee [Mr. CUMMINGS] objects, I withdraw my proposition. I want to be absolutely fair to him. I would like to understand how much time he wishes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to have half an hour in my own right.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to three quarters of an hour on each side, the time on one side to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas and on the other by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield thirty minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment simply provides that if the five submarine boats already contracted for shall have been found by the official trials to comply with all of the contract requirements and have been accepted by the Secretary of the Navy as working to his satisfaction he shall be directed to build three more submarine boats of the same type.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are these submarine boats? For twelve years the Navy Department has been considering the question of submarine boats. A dozen competitors have appeared. Holland was among them—without a cent—imploring the assistance of the Government and not receiving it. Not one cent was given to him for perfecting his invention.

He received the same treatment from the Navy Department that Hotchkiss, Gatling, and Maxim received when they applied to the Department for aid in perfecting their inventions. They were driven abroad for assistance, and we have become purchasers of their guns at their own prices. The first submarine boat was not built in accordance with the designs of the inventor. The Navy Department insisted upon having a finger in the pie, and imposed an engine upon him which was a dead failure. All of this imposition was at the expense of the inventor. The same policy was pursued as was pursued in the construction of the Ammen ram. The interference of the Navy Department in the plan made it a complete failure as to speed. After the failure of the first submarine boat the inventor, at his own expense and by the aid of friends, constructed a submarine boat on his own plans and offered her to the Department.

The Board of Construction, consisting of Messrs. Bradford, Melville, O'Neil, Hichborn, and others, in 1898 laid down the requirements for a successful submarine boat to fulfill. The Holland Company spent over $100,000 to come up to the requirements laid down by the board and succeeded on November 9, 1899, according to the Board of Inspection and Survey, in carrying out every requirement laid down by the Board of Construction.

It did more than this. As to torpedo-discharge apparatus and adaptability to submarine warfare, the following was contained in a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Holland Company, dated May 3, 1898:

8. It is to be understood that all parts of the torpedo-discharge apparatus shall be thoroughly practicable and efficient, and that the boat complete and her armament shall be efficient, practical, and adapted to the uses of submarine warfare, including the means of supplying air inside during the whole time that she may be used to effect a submarine operation in war.

This question was decided affirmatively by the Board of Inspection and Survey's report.

It would therefore appear that the question of the efficiency of the Holland in submarine warfare was never submitted by the Secretary to his Board on Construction, but to the highest board in the Navy, namely, the Board of Inspection and Survey, containing such fighting officers as Admiral Frederick Rodgers and Capt. Robley D. Evans.

On the report of the Board of Inspection and Survey the Secretary of the Navy, under authority of law, bought the Holland boat. It cost the inventors over $280,000 to build it, including the experiments, and they received for it $170,000. Thereupon the House supplemented the action of the Secretary of the Navy by authorizing the construction of five more of this same type of boats. My friend, the acting chairman of the committee, voted for those five boats, not only in the committee, but in conference as well.

These five boats, if the contract had been drawn up in time, would at this very hour have been in the Potomac, subject to your inspection. This proposition from the Senate simply provides that if these boats fill the requirements to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy three more boats shall be built. There is a good reason for this, and one that ought to awaken every American. To-day we are informed that the English admiralty has contracted for five of these very boats. It is quick to comprehend their value and to take advantage of it. If we fail to authorize the construction of these three boats proposed by the Senate, the draftsman, the machinist, and other experts of the Holland Company may be transferred to the banks of the Clyde, and another American invention probably become the property of a foreign Government.

There is no question whatever, Mr. Speaker, concerning the merits of these submarine boats. All the officers of the Navy who have had any experience with them and who have seen them in operation unite in saying that they are needed in the service and that they are far more efficient than was anticipated.

Now, as to their efficiency Lieut. Nathan Sargent, the commanding officer of the U. S. S. Scorpion, one of the blockading squadron at Newport, says:

The moral effect of an anticipated attack from the Holland submarine boat was great.

Capt. William M. Folger (formerly Chief of Ordnance of the United States Navy), now commanding the battle ship Kearsarge, the flagship of the blockading squadron, says in his report:

It is clear that the Holland type will play a very serious part in future naval warfare. There is no doubt whatever that the vessel at Newport can approach a turret ship unseen either by night or day. Her only danger is she may be run over herself by picket or large vessel.

Rear-Admiral Farquhar, the present commander in chief of the North Atlantic squadron (formerly chief of yards and docks), which was blockading Newport, says, after witnessing the performances of the Holland:

The Holland impressed everyone with the idea that under ordinary circumstances she could always get in a torpedo either day or night without being discovered.

The Holland arrived at Newport June 24 last, and Lieut. Harry H. Caldwell, then of Admiral Dewey's staff, was assigned to command her. The annual report of Commander N. E. Mason, in charge of the torpedo station, says, under date of September 1, 1900:

Up to the present date the boat has made 10 runs entirely under the control of the Navy crew.

Under date of September 27 last, Lieutenant Caldwell makes a lengthy report, and, among other things, says:

She (the Holland) is in excellent condition. There have been many minor accidents, but, I think, fewer than on the ordinary torpedo boats.

Commander N. E. Mason, U. S. N., makes a lengthy report on October 1, in which he says:

In my opinion the Holland has been a grand success so far, and for some time the naval crew have had entire charge of her, under command of Lieutenant Caldwell, running and working her both night and day without the presence of any of the Holland experts.

Having made several dives in the boat myself with the naval crew alone, I am of the opinion that they are competent in every way to maneuver and manipulate the boat successfully.

During the late combined maneuvers of the fleet, shore defenses, and the torpedo flotilla, the Holland made a successful attack on the fleet at night by herself, without convoy, at a distance of 7 miles out from the mouth of the harbor, and with the naval crew alone in her.

Here is what Admiral Dewey says in a letter to Senator STEWART:

Replying to the first of the questions which you propound, viz, whether or not in view of the favorable reports made by officers of the Navy upon the U. S. S. Holland since she has been in the possession of the Government, I agree with those officers as to the great value of this type of boats for harbor and coast defense, I have to state that I do, and that my opinion as to its value has not changed since my testimony before the House Committee on Naval Affairs in April last.

What did Admiral Dewey say at that time? Let me read it:

Gentlemen, I saw the operation of the boat down off Mount Vernon the other day. Several members of this committee were there. I think we were all very much impressed with its performance. My aid, Lieutenant Caldwell, was on board. He could tell, if necessary, what was done from the inside. The boat did everything that the owners proposed to do. And I said then, and I have said it since, that if they had had two of those things in Manila Bay, I never could have held it with the squadron I had.

The moral effect—to my mind it is infinitely superior to mines or torpedoes or anything of the kind. With those craft moving under water it would wear people out. With two of those in Galveston, all the navies of the world could not blockade that place. I agree with the resolution of Mr. CUMMINGS. I think it would be money well spent. I think it would tend to keep peace. That is what we want a navy for. We want peace.

And, Mr. Speaker, if we can have peace with three submarine boats, at an expense of $500,000, as against four battle ships and cruisers at an expense of over $20,000,000, I say, in God's name, and in the name of the taxpayer, take the submarine boats.

Here let me read extracts from a letter from Lieutenant Caldwell, formerly of Dewey's staff, now in command of the Holland. It was written on January 12, 1901, to my colleague on the committee, the Hon. R. B. HAWLEY. He says:

The Holland has been under my charge from June 25, 1900, to the present time. Her longest submerged run was about 1½ miles. I consider her durable, habitable, and reliable as a vessel of war for coast and harbor defense.

During the late combined maneuvers of the fleet, shore defenses, and the torpedo flotilla the Holland made a successful attack upon the fleet at night by herself, without convoy, at a distance of 7 miles out from the mouth of the harbor and with the naval crew alone in her. The Holland was under my command. She left the torpedo station at sundown and was placed in a partially submerged condition, with the turret and about 6 inches of the hull above water, ready to dive at short notice. Cruised in this condition to southward and eastward of Brentons Reef light-ship. Sighted two vessels of blockading fleet and fired torpedo signal at them, but was not answered, and they disappeared before I could ascertain their identity.

About 9 p. m., about 7 miles south-southeast from harbor entrance, sighted U. S. S. Kearsarge within range and fired torpedo signal. Followed her and, getting within 100 yards without being discovered, showed light, hailed her, and informed her commanding officer that she had been torpedoed. The Holland was not seen by any vessel of the blockading fleet or torpedo boat, although she was within torpedo range of three of the former and several of the latter. I consider that the attack was a success, because the Holland could in all probability have torpedoed three blockading vessels without being discovered.

I believe that I could sink one or more vessels of a blockading fleet or else make them keep so far away as to make the blockade ineffective.

With six of the Holland boats under my command, having trained crews composed of American men and officered by men of my own selection, I believe I could break a blockade of New York City made by 15 ships of war. I would do it by direct night attacks, approaching the fleet from different directions in partially submerged condition and diving when discovered. If the fleet kept underway, by lying in wait at different points of its course or accompanying a decoy blockade runner.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion of officers who are in charge of the boat and who are entirely conversant with its merits.

Mr. GAINES. How much do these boats cost?

Mr. CUMMINGS. A hundred and seventy thousand dollars each. And right here let me talk to you upon this question of cost.

Mr. HOPKINS. What does the Secretary of the Navy say upon that?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The price is made by the Secretary of the Navy, but limited to $170,000. I read an extract from a report of the Board of Construction sent to Chairman Foss, dated January 2, 1900. It says:

As regards the cost of the present boats, namely, $170,000 each, the board is of the opinion that if the cost of construction, with a reasonable profit to the contractors, is alone considered, it is a very high price; but if the expenses of the company in developing the boat are taken into consideration, the price is not excessive.

Now, as to the question of desirability, the Secretary of the Navy, on January 9, 1901, also gave the chairman of the committee information on that point. He said:

The question with the Department is not so much the desirability of submarine boats. This may be regarded as largely settled by the fact that one is now in commission and has given promise of great possible efficiency, and that seven more have been authorized by act of Congress and are now in process of construction.

This speaks for itself and indicates that the Secretary is in accord with Admiral Dewey.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I see in looking over the testimony that was taken by the Committee on Naval Affairs that Admiral Hichborn said in answer to a question of Mr. VANDIVER whether he considered the Holland boat improved, he answered, "Yes, sir; the Holland to-day is an improvement on anything that has ever been built in the history of the world;" and further on, I think that in reply to a question of the gentleman from New York Admiral Hichborn replied that he regarded it as the most successful weapon that could be put in the hands of the American Navy.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is true. I was about to call attention to it.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Government already owns either six or eight of these vessels.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is building seven; it owns one.

Mr. GAINES. Where are they?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The seven boats, or six boats, will be completed according to contract in the time agreed to, and be here in Washington during the latter part of April, and this amendment of the Senate simply provides that if they fulfill the requirements and are satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy he shall build three more.

Mr. CANNON. How long does it take one of the shipyards to build one of these boats, under a stress?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Nine or ten months.

Mr. CANNON. Ordinarily, or working under a stress?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not think you can build one of them in less than nine months, possibly seven.

Now, here is the testimony of Lieut. Commander Wainwright, Superintendent of the Naval Academy at Annapolis:

Mr. CUMMINGS. You have the submarine boat at Annapolis?
Commander WAINWRIGHT. Yes, sir.
Mr. CUMMINGS. How long has she been there?
Commander WAINWRIGHT. About two months, I think.
Mr. CUMMINGS. Have you had any experience with her.
Commander WAINWRIGHT. Yes, sir; I went down on her. We went out into the bay.
Mr. CUMMINGS. How far?
Commander WAINWRIGHT. Out into deep water.
Mr. CUMMINGS. Six or seven miles?
Commander WAINWRIGHT. Five or 6 miles.
Mr. CUMMINGS. How did she work?
Commander WAINWRIGHT. Beautifully. I was very much surprised. I followed the boat for a good many years, the plans as they were growing, but I was very much surprised to see how well she can be handled. Of course Lieutenant Caldwell is an expert.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Who went with you?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. Lieutenant Caldwell and his regular crew who handle her.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What is your opinion as to the degree of efficiency she will obtain?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. I think she is an excellent harbor-defense boat.

Mr. DAYTON. What speed does she make under water?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. About 5 or 6 knots. She makes all the speed you can use under water.

Mr. DAYTON. What speed does she make on the water?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. She makes a little over 8 knots. That is about as much as they can hope for with a submerged boat.

The CHAIRMAN. How long does she stay under water at one time?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. I do not know. She is practically under water most of the time, but she should do fighting when awash.

The CHAIRMAN. How far did you travel on her?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. We went slowly until we came to the deep water, and then we went down 12 or 13 feet. Her nose was lower than that. Lieutenant Caldwell wanted to show me how she could dive. She made what I call porpoise dives. She steers beautifully.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you ever out in rough weather with her?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how she will stand rough weather?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. I do not see how that should bother her—that is, awash.

The CHAIRMAN. You have to come up every little while to get air?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. You can run awash and run a long time, because you can open up and take the air down and shut up again. I do not mean to sink her completely under water.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. What do you think is the greatest point of efficiency?

Commander WAINWRIGHT. When she is awash. Then she is just barely out of water and she would be very hard to destroy by any large boat. She will only dive when the small boats are after her. I think she is the best harbor torpedo boat built. I would not mind trying her in daytime.

I want to say that the new boats now being built are guaranteed a speed of 8 knots on the surface and 7 knots under water.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the House committee this year voted down a proposition to build seven additional boats by two majority; the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs was unanimously in favor of building three. I am confident that a majority of the House committee would to-day favor their amendment. It will be impossible, in my opinion, for the Senate to recede in view of the unanimous action taken by their committee. The conferees have twice disagreed. It is now about time for the House to take some action.

Believing, as I do, that these ships are of great value and that they will save to the Treasury of the country millions upon millions in the way of battle ships and cruisers, I earnestly commend this proposition of the Senate to the House of Representatives, and hope that they will instruct the conferees to accept the Senate amendment. How much time have I occupied, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed twenty-two minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I concur in all that my colleague from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has said regarding these submarine boats. It is generally conceded to-day that these boats are a great success. Their practicability has been demonstrated by the best experts in naval warfare. They believe these boats are more formidable for coast defense and for harbor defense than the torpedo boats. The Government can have these boats built for a very small sum of money, and the Government should continue the building and construction of these boats. In my opinion, it will be wise economy.

My colleague from New York has given the testimony of the best men in the Navy in regard to the practicability and the destructive qualities of these submarine boats. The money of the people can not be better expended than by continuing their construction now. I wish the Senate had put in five instead of three. At the present time we ought to have five more of these boats. However, I shall stand by my colleague, Mr. CUMMINGS, and shall vote for the Senate amendment and to instruct the conferees on the part of this House to agree to that amendment. If we are going to have a great Navy, what better way can we improve and help the Navy than by having many of these submarine boats to protect our coasts and harbors?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take but five minutes—at the outside ten minutes—to state the reasons why the majority of the committee are opposed to the further construction of these submarine torpedo boats. In the first place, the men in charge of the Navy Department are all opposed, with a single exception, to further building the submarine boats until further experiment and information may be had in reference to them. This includes the Secretary of the Navy, the Construction Board, with the single exception of Admiral Hichborn, who retires by reason of the age limit on the 1st day of March.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman name the other members of the Construction Board?

Mr. DAYTON. The other members are Admiral Melville, in charge of the Bureau of Steam Engineering; Admiral Bradford, in charge of the Bureau of Equipment; Admiral O'Neil, in charge of the Ordnance Department, and Captain Woodward, if I remember rightly, in charge of the Naval Intelligence Office—four out of five.

In addition to this, they have the general board of naval officers, who advise with the Construction Board and the Secretary of the Navy, and who has at its head and as its chairman Admiral Dewey, and this board has made its recommendation as to what we should construct, and this board has not recommended at this time any further addition to these boats. Admiral Dewey has joined in the full report, recommending that we construct other type of vessels, but not recommending these boats.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DAYTON. No; the gentleman must speak in his own time.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DAYTON. No; I want to get this statement into the RECORD, and then I will yield. I want to say that Capt. Robley D. Evans and Captain Chadwick—in fact, the great majority of the officers with whom I have talked in reference to this and sought information from—regard it as an experiment, and say that we ought not under any circumstances to expend more money in regard to the construction of these boats until we have ascertained their utility and their benefit. Now, the third reason——

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. DAYTON. Not until I have finished this statement. The third reason why these boats should not be constructed is because the amendment proposes to give the monopoly in the construction of submarine boats to one company, when there are other companies in this country that are willing and anxious to compete and make as good a boat as those of the Holland Torpedo Company.

In fact, there are two companies to-day that are offering to this country to compete for the construction of these vessels, and are ready at any time, as they state, to show that their vessels are equal, if not superior, to the Holland Torpedo Company's boats. I refer to one, the Argonaut, where, it seems to me, the practical operation of it every day carries out this view, and it can be obtained at a much less price, to which I will refer in a moment.

The fourth is that the Holland boat is dangerous. It is constructed so that it must be run by three distinct and separate motive powers. First, compressed air, and the compressors in it are unable to keep up the supply of compressed air when it is running equal to the exhaust of that compressed air. Second, electricity, and third, gasoline, and already one crew in charge of this vessel have nearly lost their lives from the very fact of a leak of the gasoline in this confined space of the Holland boat.

The fumes of that gas came very nearly destroying the lives of the crew. Fifth, it is too slow in speed. Its actual test trial of speed—and we have it all here set forth—shows that it does not come up to or equal similar vessels in France; that it has not been able to attain under water a speed exceeding 6 or 7 knots an hour. When you remember that there are undercurrents in every harbor, and that these currents are variable, and that the speed of counter-currents may be very great, you can see how unreliable it is to depend on a boat with no greater speed than that.

Another thing about it is, it has been demonstrated that the compass under water is affected by the torpedo and by its confined condition, and these conditions and the currents make it absolutely impossible to steer it by the compass.

And lastly, Mr. Speaker, the cost of this vessel, by the expert testimony that has been presented to the committee, does not exceed fifty to seventy thousand dollars, while under this provision we are asked to give this company a monopoly of building them at $170,000 each.

Ah, but the gentlemen say that these are inventions, and the time they have taken in the construction of these vessels ought to be compensated for. I call attention to the fact that we have already compensated them. We have already given them the construction, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] said, of seven; yes, eight.

We have already one, and we have given them a contract by last year's bill for seven more, amounting to over a million dollars, and there is no reason, legally or morally, why there should not be open competition and this Government should not be able to get these vessels at their fair and reasonable cost, which will not exceed, in my judgment, $50,000, and the experts say will not exceed over $70,000.

I want to say further, gentlemen, that this invention is not a new one. I state upon the testimony of such men as Melville, O'Neil, Bradford, Evans, and many other naval officers that there is not a single thing about the Holland torpedo boat that presents any practical new features over and above the experiments that have been made for one hundred and twenty-five years; not since the time that Fulton tried his experiment in France, which was then a success so far as this Holland torpedo boat is a success.

It is not a new thing for a boat to be able to dive under water. It is not an unusual thing for a boat to be able to come up from the water, or an unusual thing for a boat to cast its torpedo. Now, then, with this explanation I desire to yield to my colleague.

Mr. GAINES. Before the gentleman leaves the floor I hope he will yield to me, as he said he would.

Mr. DAYTON. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman a few moments ago said that Admiral Dewey had not approved of this boat. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. DAYTON. I said that Admiral Dewey—and if the gentleman had listened he would not have asked me this question—had joined in the full and unanimous report of his board, which did not recommend the construction of any of these vessels.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to lose this time, and I want to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, this is a plain business proposition for the House to consider. The Senate amendment provides that it shall be made the duty—it is made mandatory—of the Secretary of the Navy to buy three Holland submarine torpedo boats as soon as he shall have tested the first one of the six that are now under construction. The committee fixed the price at $170,000 each which he will be allowed to pay. The amendment I have offered takes away the mandatory provision and leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy whether he will buy three additional boats, and leaves it to him to approve of the design and character of the boat, but makes the maximum limit of cost the same as it is now.

My reason for offering the amendment was to throw the construction of these three boats open to public competition. There is an organized concern in the district which I have the honor to represent that is building a substantial and working submarine boat—engaged every day in the exploitation of wrecks under water. They wish the privilege of making a bid upon these boats if they are to be built.

I fully agree with the committee that we ought to insist on the action of the House and not agree to build any of these boats at this time. But if we are to build any, the work should be thrown open to public competition, and every sound, substantial concern in the country that wishes to bid for them should have that privilege. That is all that my amendment contemplates. I submit it to the judgment of the House for a vote.

Mr. THROPP. Do you propose to limit competitors to the Holland boat?

Mr. HILL. Not at all. My amendment strikes out all reference to the Holland boat, and allows everybody, whether in Pennsylvania or Virginia or Idaho or elsewhere, to bid upon this proposition.

Mr. HAMILTON. Can the gentleman state how many individuals or establishments are engaged in the manufacture of this kind of boat?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. I simply know that good, substantial men in the Fourth district of Connecticut, who are able to put up the money and carry out their contract, desire the privilege of bidding upon this contract if it is to be made. In my judgment it should not be made at all at present.

Mr. GAINES. Do all these proposed contractors live in the United States?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. The gentlemen to whom I refer live in the State of Connecticut and are responsible men.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Does not the gentleman know that this boat has been in competition with 9 different types?

Mr. HILL. I do not care if there were 900. The competition should be open to every responsible concern. This is a proposition upon which every responsible concern in the United States should have the privilege of bidding.

Mr. VANDIVER. Would it not be well if the company for which the gentleman speaks should go ahead and complete their invention and then offer to the Government such a proposition as these other people offer?

Mr. HILL. This invention is complete, and the boats are at work. But here is a proposition absolutely barring out that concern, barring out everybody but one particular bidder—making it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Navy to buy nothing but the Holland submarine boats. I propose to strike out that provision and let everybody bid.

Mr. VANDIVER. Would it not be well if the people for whom the gentleman speaks should present their invention to the Navy Department, have it investigated by naval officers, and have it reported on officially?

Mr. HILL. My amendment provides that—

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized in his discretion to contract for three submarine boats of such character and design as he may approve.

That is all. If the persons for whom I speak can not meet the specifications they will not put in a bid. If they can, they will.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 11598. An act for the relief of Frank B. Case;

H. R. 1136. An act for the relief of parties for property taken from them by military forces of the United States; and

H. R. 12901. An act to supplement existing laws relating to the disposition of lands, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, numbered 2 and 3, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. BUTLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11820. An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11821. An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13729. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolutions:

House concurrent resolution 88.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 8998) granting an increase of pension to Alexander F. Hartford.

House concurrent resolution 87.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 4963) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Churchill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2471) for the relief of Olivia M. Clifford.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6012. An act to provide an American register for the steam yacht May.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER].

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, this is a plain, simple proposition. I want to say frankly that personally I care nothing about this matter. I commenced the consideration of this proposition early in the session, I frankly state, with some little prejudice against it. Until I heard the opinions expressed in the committee room in the official hearings, and until I learned the facts in the case, I had not determined to support the proposition to complete any more of these boats. But when Admiral Dewey, Admiral Hichborn, Lieutenant Caldwell, and other officers of the Navy for whom I entertain the highest respect gave their unqualified indorsement to this invention I thought it demanded from me at least respectful consideration.

The question is simply this: Shall we proceed with further developments in this direction, or shall we abandon the project? All admit that this is a period of rapid development in naval construction. This is comparatively a new invention. I do not pretend to say that it has fully and finally demonstrated its usefulness, but I do believe, from what I have seen of it and from what I have heard of it, that it has so fairly presented itself to our consideration as to require of us, if we perform our duty as public men, to develop it until we shall have fairly tested whether or not the principle is a practical one.

Mr. HAMILTON. Assuming that it is practicable, would it not be better to leave the matter open for general competition?

Mr. VANDIVER. It has been open to competition for years past, and so far as we are informed this is the only invention of the kind that has received any sort of official indorsement from those who have examined it and who are in position to give valuable information about it.

I want to refer to what took place nearly a year ago when the Naval Committee of the House, the Naval Committee of the Senate, together with Admiral Dewey and a number of others, went down the Potomac to a point opposite Mount Vernon and witnessed the experiment with this boat. Everybody on board the vessel seemed to be delighted with the performance that we witnessed, and after we came back Admiral Dewey and others, in our committee room, freely stated to us that they thought this invention had fully demonstrated its usefulness; that it had passed beyond the stage of experimentation.

Admiral Dewey said that if two of those boats under the control of the enemy had been in the harbor of Manila he never would have been able to enter that harbor with the squadron he had. He stated further that if two of those boats were placed in the harbor of Galveston all the navies of the world would not be able to blockade that harbor. With such indorsement as this, and realizing the importance of this question, I offered in the committee—and I believe I offered it here in this House when the bill was under consideration before—a substitute proposition.

I did not want to appear to oppose every proposition for enlargement of the Navy. I wanted to wait a little on battle ships and see if we can develop this new invention, which is much less costly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. LENTZ. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCALL). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER] will suspend. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. LENTZ. Last evening I delivered to the foreman of the RECORD my speech under the general leave to print——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman from Ohio permit the gentleman from Missouri to conclude and then bring up this question of personal privilege later.

Mr. LENTZ. How long will it take the gentleman to conclude?

Mr. VANDIVER. Only a very few minutes.

Mr. LENTZ. With the understanding that I may have the floor next, I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, I was just about to say that I am in favor of progress—reasonable progress, conservative progress—in the improvement of the Navy; and although I took a position against authorizing a contract for more battle ships to be built just at this time, although I thought we were going, or had gone, just as rapidly as prudence would justify, yet I wanted to see some improvements made in this other direction, because I believed it to be more economical.

As Admiral Dewey had testified before our committee that two of these boats would be sufficient to protect any harbor on our coast, I thought it would be a good business investment for us to put two of them in every important harbor. I do not want to do this at once, because this important invention may still be improved; but I want the Government at this time to order at least three more of these boats, and I think the Senate amendment is a wise one.

I want to say further that there are six of these boats now in course of construction; and under the provisions of the Senate amendment, as soon as one of these boats is completed it is to be tested, and if it proves to be entirely satisfactory then the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract for three more, but not unless these others are satisfactory.

One more word, and then I am through, as I suppose my time has about expired. It seems to me that there has been a change of front on this question within the last year. The Naval Committee, a year ago, was absolutely unanimous in favor of this Holland boat experiment, as I remember—absolutely unanimous. I do not see why they should to-day repudiate the stand they took then. These three boats can be built for less than half a million dollars, while a battle ship costs five millions or more, and the torpedo boat is, for some purposes, more effective than the great war vessel. Eminent naval experts declare that it will revolutionize naval warfare. At any rate I know it will reduce the cost. Let us try it.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LENTZ. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LENTZ. Last evening I took my remarks, made under the general leave given last Wednesday, to the foreman of the RECORD. I had called the office up early in the afternoon.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. LENTZ. I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not understand that any question of privilege can be raised on a conference report that does not interfere in any way with the conference report.

Mr. LENTZ. I had understood that——

Mr. CANNON. Let the Speaker pass upon it.

Mr. LENTZ. I had understood that I——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The Chair is not quite clear about this matter. If this was a conference report that we were considering, the Chair would readily sustain the point of order; but the conference report has been beaten. It is out of the way. It is not before the House at all.

Mr. CANNON. We are proceeding now to the consideration of a privileged matter, an hour and a half discussion on each side. Now, is it possible that gentlemen can be taken off their feet during that hour and a half on a question of privilege having no connection with the matter that is being considered by the House?

Mr. LENTZ. I submit, Mr. Speaker, no one was discussing any matter here, and I was recognized to have the floor.

The SPEAKER. Still the point of order was made against the gentleman being heard at this time.

Mr. LENTZ. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on his privilege for a while. Of course the Chair readily sees that matters may spring up that would have to be considered eo instanti.

Mr. LENTZ. I took my speech to the Public Printer, the foreman of the RECORD, and left it, having been told, however, that they were very much crowded, and might not be able to print it last evening. I left it there, and went back this morning, and was told that my speech had been sent over, as I understood them to say, to the Reporters.

I followed that up, thinking it went there, and asked the Reporters for it, and they could not produce it. I was then told it was delivered to the Speaker, and by the Speaker to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I want to know, in the first place, upon what authority that could be done. I understand that the control of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD——

Mr. CANNON. I renew my point.

Mr. LENTZ (continuing). Is in the House, and not of any gentleman. I also understand a gentleman is not entitled to inspect the Reporter's notes, much less his speech. I am anxious to know if speeches are to be held out of the RECORD until some one member is satisfied to have them printed; and I am a little curious to know if my speech is to be edited, and whether the gentleman from Ohio is to eliminate and insert until it suits him. Has it come to pass that Congress is to have a censor as well as in the Philippine Islands?

I suppose that if my speech should go into the RECORD, when in the RECORD, if there is anything in it objectionable, I am perfectly willing to have it brought up in the proper way, under the rules, and have the House pass upon it whether I have violated the general leave to print or not. When these remarks are in the RECORD there is ample time before this Congress adjourns for gentlemen to submit their views in reply.

At the end of the Fifty-fifth Congress there was an extra number of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD issued, probably three weeks after we adjourned, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] almost monopolized that extra issue or number of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Had my speech appeared this morning, and had it not been withheld—and certainly no one was authorized to withhold it—there would be an entire week to reply to any part of it; and I welcome replies to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. LENTZ. I ask the Speaker why my speech was withheld from the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair was yesterday called to the fact that a great abuse of the privilege of the House had been exercised by the gentleman from Ohio under the leave given him to print, and the Chair asked the young man who waits upon the Printing Office to hold the gentleman's remarks until the Chair could have an opportunity to glance over them; but amid the pressure of business of yesterday the Chair was unable to examine that and many other things left by members upon his desk. Nor has he had time this morning; but not having the time the Chair only a short time ago, when the messenger came to him, told him to go ahead and print the gentleman's remarks, and if there was anything offensive or anything wrong it could be corrected by the House, which was the proper body to settle it.

Mr. LENTZ. Will the Speaker permit me? No living man could have known a word in my speech before 9.30 last night. No one upon earth except my stenographer and myself in my room had put eyes upon a word in that speech before last night. This gentleman who told the Chair that there was anything improper in it must have falsified to the Chair. He must have been mistaken.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that this matter has now developed beyond the point the gentleman wants it to be.

Mr. LENTZ. Am I to understand the Speaker to say that my speech has been sent to the Printing Office?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that such matters have been repeatedly brought to the attention of the Chair, and by taking time and by getting the parties together who have been firing at each other in debate the matter has been fixed up. The Chair had an instance of that only last week, but the Chair had not in the closing hours time to attend to this thing.

This young man when he spoke to me about it, representing the Printing Office, was given the copy an hour or so ago. It was in the hands of the Government Printer when the matter was brought to the attention of the Chair. The Chair has not read a single word, but has given direction that it must take the usual course, and if there is anything in it that is censurable it is for the House to do that if it sees proper.

Mr. LENTZ. As early as 5 o'clock yesterday, or rather half after 3, I telephoned down to the Public Printer asking him to send the messenger.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is a matter of privilege before the House. I want to be heard on the matter of privilege.

Mr. LENTZ. Just a minute. Certainly not after half past 3, I asked them to send a messenger to get a pamphlet matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes this ruling, that if anything further is to be done in this matter a distinctive proposition must be submitted to the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I intend to submit a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman intends to submit a resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I intend to submit a resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is the proper course to pursue.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I had commenced to write it, but had not got it finished. I could state what it is, however.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better put his resolution in writing.

Mr. LENTZ. I desire to make a further statement, in order that I may not be misunderstood.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not permit any further discussion until some distinctive propocition is before the body.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to know what time there is remaining on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has fifteen minutes.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I understand we are waiting for the gentleman from Tennessee to prepare his resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is the situation. Some distinct proposition must be before the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the resolution I desire to offer I will read, and then send it to the desk. It is written very hurriedly.

Resolved, That the Speaker has no right to withhold from the RECORD the speech of a member made on a general leave to print.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a moment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. It is not a question of privilege; it is a bare declaration as to the right of the Speaker and the rights of members. A question of privilege must be something more direct in hand. This is a general proposition. It might cover the rules, be a mere declaration or order, and so on. My other point is that there is already a privileged matter before the House, upon which an hour and a half's debate has proceeded, and that can not be interrupted by such a general resolution as the gentleman offers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in regard to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois that there are privileged questions and questions of privilege. The gentleman submits a privileged question, but the gentleman from Ohio submits a question of privilege, and the Chair would be very loath to hold that the question of privilege should not be considered. The Chair has stated all that he knows about this matter.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have not yielded the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, if he was not understood before, that he has not seen this speech or this manuscript, knows nothing about the contents of it, heard none of the discussion, did not intend to keep it out of the RECORD, and gave no such orders. He asked to have it held, as it was submitted to the Chair by the young man from the Printing Office, and in the pressure of business it was overlooked. The Chair never thought of it again until brought to his attention to-day. But the gentleman from Iowa raises the question of consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would it be in order to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration raised by the gentleman from Iowa must be disposed of first. It is a privileged and proper question to be raised.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But, Mr. Speaker, I had commenced to address the House and had uttered one sentence, and I do not think I can be taken off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been introduced and the question of consideration has been raised, and the question is whether the House will now consider the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the hour is so late that if we do not consider it now the speech will be kept out another day.

Mr. LACEY. That would be too bad.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; it would be too bad.

The question was taken; and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee demanded a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that on a matter which in a sense points toward him the Chair will exercise a privilege which he thinks he has a right to exercise and order tellers instead of counting. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] as tellers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. To relieve that trouble, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 130, "present" 5, not voting 100; as follows:

So the House refused to consider the resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and my name was not called on the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. KITCHIN's name was called, and he voted "aye" as above recorded.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire if my colleague, Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. McCALL. Then, being paired, I withdraw my vote of "no."

Mr. McCALL's name was called, and he voted "present," as above recorded.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For this day:

Mr. CRUMP with Mr. CATCHINGS.
Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.
Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. BRENNER.

Mr. McCALL with Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts.
Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.
Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.
Mr. ADAMS with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I find I am paired with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY], and I withdraw my vote of "aye."

Mr. COWHERD's name was called and he voted "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer a privileged resolution, and I rise to a question of privilege for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is a question affecting the integrity of our proceedings, and therefore of the highest privilege.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the speech of Mr. LENTZ, of Ohio, on the general deficiency bill, made in the House on Wednesday last, February 20, has been withheld from publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD after the same was delivered to the Public Printer for publication by Mr. LENTZ; and

Whereas said speech has been turned over to the Speaker of the House, who, it is alleged, has delivered same to a member of the House for some purpose to the House unknown,

Resolved, That such action is hereby condemned by the House, and it is hereby ordered that said speech be delivered forthwith to the Public Printer for publication in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to be heard on this resolution as a matter of privilege.

Mr. PAYNE. I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. It is that the House is already engaged in the consideration of a question of the highest privilege, a conference report, and that this can not be taken away from the House by a resolution of this character.

The SPEAKER. That question the Chair has already ruled upon this afternoon, and overruled the point as the situation stood.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to be heard on my resolution.

Mr. LACEY. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is a question of the highest privilege, affecting the integrity of our proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit that the gentleman can not take me off the floor after I have stated that I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Any member has the absolute right to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the speech of the gentleman from Ohio is to be withheld in this way, the right of publishing a speech is absolutely denied. I do not believe the House of Representatives will vote to sustain that position. I appeal to gentlemen——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The speech referred to was in the Public Printing Office long before this row.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (while the Speaker rapped for order) engaged in a colloquy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Tennessee are not in order. The question is, Will the House consider the resolution?

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. HULL, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 128, answered "present" 5, not voting 105; as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. MULLER.

Mr. POWERS with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I find I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. POWERS, and I desire to withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. SULZER. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I offer the following resolution——

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SULZER. I had the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point that the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. As many as are in favor of the motion that the House adjourn——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Did the Speaker overrule the point of order I made that this motion is dilatory?

The SPEAKER. Certainly he did.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 120, noes 98.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for tellers.

INSTRUCTIONS TO PEACE COMMISSIONERS AT PARIS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I report back the resolution introduced yesterday by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] to print 3,000 additional copies of the papers relating to the treaty with Spain, with the omitted telegram inserted. I find that the telegram to which the Senator from South Dakota referred was omitted. I sent for the original papers, and I found that telegram among them in its proper place. It had been sent down by the officers of the Senate with all the other papers and it appears to have gone into the hands of the printers, because it has their mark upon the top. Why it was omitted in printing I do not know, but I report back the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota and ask that it may be passed.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of the papers relating to the treaty with Spain, with the omitted telegram inserted.

REFORMATORY SYSTEM.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the Department of State, 1,000 copies of House Document No. 459, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, entitled "The Reformatory System in the United States," being reports prepared for the International Prison Commission.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that document been printed for the benefit of Congress?

Mr. PLATT of New York. It has not.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me that every Senator and Representative ought to have at least one copy of it.

Mr. PLATT of New York. No one has asked for the printing except the Department of State, and I thought it right to put the resolution in its present shape.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, let it go.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRISON SYSTEMS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Department of State 1,000 copies of House Document No. 565, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, entitled "Prison Systems of the United States," being reports prepared for the International Prison Commission.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution from the House providing for printing a digest of contested-election cases in the House of Representatives, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and substantially bound 2,000 copies of "A digest of all the contested-election cases in the House of Representatives of the United States from the First to the Fifty-sixth Congress, inclusive," compiled by Chester H. Rowell, 1,500 for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate; and that in addition to said number there be printed and substantially bound 500 copies, the same to be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the House and distributed from time to time on his order; and that there be further printed and substantially bound the additional number of 50 copies, 10 each to be deposited in the library of the House of Representatives and in the rooms of the Committee on Elections and 10 to be delivered to the compiler.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to interfere, at this late day especially, with the discretion of the Committee on Printing, but I should hope there might be rather a larger number printed. These books are in great demand for public libraries, for State libraries, and law libraries, and the resolution provides for a very small number.

Mr. PLATT of New York. The committee has been inclined to be economical; but I will accept any amendment which the Senator may suggest.

Mr. HOAR. Has the resolution to go back to the other House?

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is reported by the committee without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, if agreed to by the Senate without amendment, does not go back to the House.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, then; I will not interfere with it at this late day; I will let it go. If it had to go back to the House at all I would move to increase the number.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

DOCUMENTS FOR LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to regulate the distribution of public documents to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That of the publications described in this section the number of copies which shall be printed and distributed by the Public Printer to the Library of Congress, for its own use and for international exchange, in lieu of the number now provided by law shall be 62, except as such number shall be enlarged to not exceeding 100 copies by request of the Librarian of Congress, to wit: The House documents and reports, bound; the Senate documents and reports, bound; the House Journals, bound; the Senate Journals, bound; all other documents bearing a Congressional number and all documents not bearing a Congressional number printed by order of either House of Congress, or by order of any Department, bureau, commission, or officer of the Government, except confidential matter, blank forms, and circular letters not of a public character; the Revised Statutes, bound; the Statutes at Large, bound; the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, bound; the Official Register of the United States, bound.

SEC. 2. That in addition to the foregoing the Public Printer shall supply to the Library of Congress for its own use 2 copies of each of the above-described publications, unbound, as published; 5 copies of all bills and resolutions; 10 copies of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and 2 copies of all documents printed for the use of Congressional committees not of a confidential character.

SEC. 3. That of any publication printed at the Government expense by direction of any Department, commission, bureau, or officer of the Government elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office, there shall be supplied to the Library of Congress, for its own use and for international exchange, 62 copies, except as such number shall be enlarged to not exceeding 100 copies by request of the Joint Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. In what is known as the Manderson bill, which, after long consideration in the Senate, was passed about six years ago, the number of all documents to be furnished in different directions was fixed, and except as it has been varied by reports from the Committee on Printing that has been the law since then, I should like to ask the Senator from New York reporting the joint resolution how much increase it provides over the provisions of the present law?

Mr. PLATT of New York. I can not answer the Senator from Maine exactly as to that, but it is only a nominal increase. This measure came from the Librarian himself, and I did not investigate as to how much of an increase is proposed, but I do not imagine that it is very much.

Mr. HALE. If it is only a small increase I do not object. I have not the act here. That prescribes what the number shall be. But I think the Senator should look carefully that we do not send over to the Library a mass of matter that will never be used, but will accumulate and pile up there and will needlessly occupy room, because if we shall do it to a great extent we shall soon find that the large space we have given for the books will be taken up by these documents.

I am not prepared, because I do not know how large an increase is proposed, to object to the joint resolution now, but I call the Senator's attention to that point.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it lie over, then, so that it can be examined.

Mr. HALE. It might go over for a day, if the Senator from New York has no objection, and then we will look at the Manderson law.

Mr. PLATT of New York. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie over for one day if there be no objection.

ARMY POST EXCHANGE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 146) for the printing as a Senate document of so much of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs as relates to the post exchange or canteen, to report a Senate resolution in lieu of the joint resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported as a substitute will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed as a Senate document 10,000 copies of so much of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs as relates to the post exchange or canteen, of which 3,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 6,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know the purpose of printing the testimony at this time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Well, Mr. President, I can explain it. By some disagreeable mistake the Printer—I do not know that he was to blame, either, I do not know how it came around—printed the number we seemed to have wanted at that time before the resolution directing the printing had been passed, and the Printer's accounts are now rather awkward for him. He has in print this number of copies, and the resolution ought to be passed.

Mr. HALE. It has been already printed?

Mr. HAWLEY. They are already printed, and we just want to adopt this resolution in order to enable him to keep his accounts correctly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I had the impression that it was for the purpose of bolstering up the Administration's case in their defense of the canteen, for they took the evidence practically of only those who were in favor of this institution. But if it is for the purpose of correcting an error and the copies are really printed, then I shall not object.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is reported as an original Senate resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. It does not go over the $500 limit. I do not see how it is myself, but they say it does not go over the allowance.

Mr. SHOUP. If the resolution is to lead to further discussion, I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution (S. R. 146) for the printing as a Senate document of so much of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs as relates to the post exchange or canteen will be indefinitely postponed.

ESTATE OF A. N. PERKINS, ETC.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills:

A bill (S. 1185) for the relief of the estate of A. N. Perkins, deceased, late of Tuscaloosa, Ala.;

A bill (S. 1335) for the relief of Thomas E. Streeter;

A bill (S. 3822) for the relief of Jacob Joiner;

A bill (S. 4344) for the relief of Joseph Harvey, administrator of Matilda Harvey, deceased;

A bill (S. 4990) for the relief of James Chieves;

A bill (S. 5117) for the relief of Jesse W. Coleman; and

A bill (S. 5880) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Charity M. Locke, deceased—reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the claims represented by the following bills, to wit: S. 1185, 1335, 3822, 4344, 4990, 5117, and 5880, for the relief of the estate of A. N. Perkins, deceased; for the relief of Thomas E. Streeter; for the relief of Jacob Joiner; for the relief of Joseph Harvey, administrator of Matilda Harvey, deceased; for the relief of James Chieves; for the relief of Jesse W. Coleman, and for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Charity M. Locke, deceased, now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and the said Court of Claims shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

POTOMAC RIVER FLATS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13865) relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats, to report it with amendments. This is a very important matter for the War Department in connection with the Potomac Flats, and I ask for its immediate consideration. It will take but a moment. The bill came from the House yesterday, and it is very important to have the matter closed.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia were, in line 3, page 1, to strike out "Norris" and insert "Morris;" in line 5, page 2, after the word "improvements," to strike out the words "used in connection therewith" and insert "made by or;" and in lines 11 and 12, on the same page, to strike out the words "used in connection therewith," so as to read:

That in the case of the United States against M. F. Morris and others, instituted under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats," approved August 5, 1886, 24 Statutes, 335, and recently remanded by the Supreme Court of the United States to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the latter court, in order to carry out the mandate of the Supreme Court and also to carry into full effect the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, 30 Statutes, 1377, entitled "An act relative to wharf property and certain public spaces in the District of Columbia," is hereby authorized and directed, in ascertaining the values of the wharf structures and other improvements made by or belonging to the defendants in the above cause, or to others, which are in or over the waters of the Potomac River, south of Water street, in the city of Washington, in which the said defendants claim riparian rights, to also, in like manner, ascertain and determine the values of the portions of such wharf structures and other improvements which are upon the adjoining land of the United States, but not in or over the said waters of the Potomac River, and shall also ascertain, declare, adjudge, and award to whom the values so determined are justly payable.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHOUP. I give notice that I wish to have the Senate proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, and I shall reserve the right to object to the consideration of bills.

INAUGURAL ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report a joint resolution giving the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to provide for the public comfort. It is a joint resolution a few lines in length that is important in reference to the inaugural ceremonies, and I ask that it be considered at this time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 164) giving the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to provide for the public comfort was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to expend a sum not to exceed $500 from the emergency fund of the District of Columbia to provide for the public comfort during the approaching inaugural ceremonies; and the said Commissioners may from time to time issue temporary permits for the aforesaid purpose, subject to such regulations as they may prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSA M. WYATT AND OTHERS.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills:

A bill (S. 5960) for the relief of Rosa M. Wyatt;

A bill (S. 5992) for the relief of D. W. and Minna H. Glassie and Joseph C. Nash;

A bill (S. 5121) for the relief of Harvey R. McRaven;

A bill (S. 5905) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary E. Purnell, deceased;

A bill (S. 4346) for the relief of the estate of Turner Merritt;

A bill (S. 5959) for the relief of Clementine Vaughn; and

A bill (S. 5972) for the relief of Attie Lewis—

reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the claims represented by the following bills, to wit: S. 5960, S. 5992, S. 5121, S. 5905, S. 4346, S. 5959, and S. 5972, for the relief of Rosa M. Wyatt; for the relief of D. W. and Minna H. Glassie and Joseph C. Nash; for the relief of Harvey R. McRaven; for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary E. Purnell; for the relief of the estate of Turner Merritt; for the relief of Clementine Vaughn; and for the relief of Attie Lewis, now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN M'VEA.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6011) for the relief of the legal representatives of John McVea, deceased, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 6011) entitled "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John McVea, deceased," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompaning papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 165) authorizing proper officers of the Treasury Department to examine and certify claims in favor of certain counties in Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the construction of a revenue cutter for use in the waters of the Territory of Hawaii, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,500 for the construction of an elevator in the court-house and post-office building at Pensacola, Fla., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPOONER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $610 to pay Francis Bloodgood, of Milwaukee, Wis., being the balance of a judgment rendered in his favor in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin for services rendered as United States commissioner, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DEPEW submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,565 to refund to Rodocanachi Sons & Co., being the amount levied as additional duties by the United States on 449 bales of wool, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted an amendment proposing that of the appropriation of $48,000 for improving the inner harbor at Michigan City, Ind., $20,000 be used in the discretion of the Secretary of War for the construction of a turn basin in that harbor, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to state an account with Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company for transporting the United States mails over postal routes numbered 30003 and 149003, from July 1, 1878, to February 21, 1892, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 to pay John W. Langley, appointment clerk of the Census Bureau, for extra services rendered from May 1, 1899, to the present time, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Census, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McENERY submitted an amendment proposing to refer the petition and account of E. H. McIlhenny for expenses incurred and services rendered by him in rescuing, housing, feeding, clothing, and caring for shipwrecked sailors in the Arctic Ocean in the years 1897 and 1898 to the Secretary of the Treasury for examination, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $87.50 to pay Joseph W. Parse the amount paid by him for rent of a room for use of the United States district court in Batesville, Ark., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KENNEY submitted an amendment that in the purchase of the entire collection of maps, field notes, records, and other surveying data of the late H. W. Brewer, the name of the late Charles Wilson be added, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL HAINS'S PAPER ON ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that a paper which I hold in my hand may be printed as a document for the use of the Senate. It is an address made by Gen. Peter C. Hains on the subject of the isthmian canal from a military point of view, before the American Academy of Political and Social Science in Philadelphia on Tuesday last. It contains very valuable statements upon the subject of the fortification of a canal. This gentleman being a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, I think it is quite important that the paper should be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the paper he has indicated may be printed as a document. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPILATION OF TREATIES, ETC.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that there be printed as a Senate document 3,000 copies, 2,000 for the use of the House and 1,000 for the use of the Senate, of a compilation of the treaties of all nations, and laws passed, concerning the sale of ardent spirits and firearms to the savage natives in the South Sea Islands, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator was not heard on this side of the Chamber. Will he kindly repeat his request?

Mr. MONEY. The request is for the compilation of the treaties of all nations, and laws passed, concerning the sale of ardent spirits and firearms to the savage tribes of the New Hebrides and other South Sea Islands. It is very desirable that this compilation should be printed as a document, not only for the use of Congress, but for the general public. More telegrams, I suppose, have been received on this subject than on any other before the Senate. Senate bill No. 5696 on this subject was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and reported by myself from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that an order be made for printing 3,000 copies of the compilation referred to, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the usual number be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. MONEY. What is the usual number?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands it is 1,632.

Mr. MONEY. That will be sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as modified, that the usual number of copies of the compilation referred to be printed? The Chair hears none; and that order is made.

COST OF PUBLIC ARC LIGHTING.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate the cost of public arc lighting and make a report to the Senate on the same.

CHURCH LANDS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,000 additional copies of the Report on Church Lands in the Philippine Islands, with the accompanying message of the President, for the use of the Division of Insular Affairs, War Department.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO GUNNER CHARLES MORGAN.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of the letter of Charles Morgan, gunner in the United States Navy, addressed to Admiral W. T. Sampson in the month of February, 1901, asking for a recommendation to the Secretary of the Navy for promotion to the office of ensign in the Navy, and Admiral Sampson's indorsement thereof, and all other letters and communications on the subject between Admiral Sampson and the Navy Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rules.

SECURITIES OF INTERSTATE RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a statement showing in detail the character and par value of all common stock, preferred stock, mortgage bonds, income bonds, car trust certificates, and other securities issued or authorized to be issued by each railroad company subject to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce, together with the par value of each class of such securities outstanding on June 30, 1900, the rate of interest or dividends paid thereon during the year ended June 30, 1900, and the market value of such securities on March 31, June 30, September 30, and December 31, 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish that the resolution might lie over, for the reason that I am not sure that the Interstate Commerce Commission have any information which would enable them to answer the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] on yesterday in relation to automatic car couplers.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he will not permit the resolution to go over until to-morrow, so that we may proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am willing that the resolution shall go over, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

There are two other resolutions coming over from a previous day, one submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] in relation to letters of Jefferson on Cuban annexation, and another resolution submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] in relation to the hours of labor on Government work. Is there objection to these resolutions going over, retaining their place? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

BONDS OF PIMA COUNTY, ARIZ.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill 8068, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8068) "An act authorizing the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., to issue fifty-year 5 per cent bonds of Pima County, Ariz., to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

First, the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate on page 3, line 9; second, the Senate recedes from its amendment on page 3, lines 12 to 14; third, the Senate recedes from its amendment on page 3, lines 15 and 16; fourth, the Senate recedes from its amendment on page 3, line 18; fifth, the Senate recedes from its amendment on page 3, lines 18 to 20, inclusive; sixth, the House agrees to the Senate amendment striking out the preamble, with the following amendment, to which the Senate agrees: Strike out the words "the aforesaid," in line 12, page 3, and in lieu thereof, after the word "of," in said line 12, insert the following: "The 147 negotiable coupon bonds, each in the sum of $1,000 and dated June 30, 1887, issued by the supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., and numbered 104 to 250, both inclusive;" seventh, the House agrees to the Senate amendment of the title of said bill, so that the bill as agreed upon by the conference committee shall read as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., be, and they are hereby, authorized to prepare, execute, sell, and deliver, from time to time, bonds of the said Pima County, in accordance with the provisions of Title XXXI, chapter 2, county indebtedness, of the Revised Statutes of Arizona, approved March 2, 1887, bearing interest not exceeding 4 per cent per annum, both principal and interest payable only in gold coin of the United States of America of present standard, the proceeds to be used only for the redemption of the 147 negotiable coupon bonds, each in the sum of $1,000 and dated June 30, 1887, issued by the supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., and numbered 104 to 250, both inclusive. The total amount of the bonds hereby authorized to be issued shall not exceed $147,000, and no bonds shall be issued under the provisions of this act except when it is necessary so to do in order to refund the aforesaid indebtedness of Pima County, and then only in amounts sufficient to refund such indebtedness as it falls due, as hereinbefore set out. None of said bonds shall be sold or exchanged for less than their par value and any interest that may be due thereon, and this act shall be printed on the back of all bonds issued under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. That this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

"Amend the title so as to read: 'An act authorizing the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., to issue fifty-year 4 per cent bonds of Pima County, Ariz., to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county.'"

W. J. SEWELL,
W. P. DILLINGHAM,
WM. B. BATE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. S. KNOX,
L. FLETCHER,
D. E. FINLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I ask that the conference report may go over and that the bill as agreed to in conference may be printed, so that we can see what has been done there. There seems to have been some revolutionizing about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the conference report go over for the present and that the bill be printed as it will stand if the report of the conference committee be adopted. Is there objection?

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the request of the Senator from South Dakota will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to know whether that was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I rose to interpose an objection to the conference report going over.

Mr. LODGE. If objection is made and this report is going to lead to debate, I shall raise the question of consideration on it. I do not think we ought to go on with the consideration of a question like this when the Army appropriation bill is pending.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think certainly the conference report ought to be printed, so that we may have an opportunity to see it in printed form.

Mr. KYLE. I withdraw the objection, if it be understood that the conference report be taken up to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13575) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COOPER, Mr. HITT, and Mr. JONES of Virginia managers at the conference on the part of the House.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. On behalf of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill 13822, being the fortifications appropriation bill, I present the conference report, and ask that the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13822) "making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, and 10; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", the expenditure of which shall be made by the several bureaus of the War Department heretofore having jurisdiction of the same, or by the board itself, as the Secretary of War may direct, and one additional member shall be added to the said Board of Ordnance and Fortification, who shall be an artillery officer of technical ability and experience, to be selected by the Secretary of War;" and the Senate agree to the same.

GEORGE C. PERKINS,
F. E. WARREN,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
SAMUEL J. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to be good enough to make a statement of the controverted points. Of course, no Senator has the bill before him, and so is unable to understand from the reading of the conference report what has been done.

Mr. PERKINS. The first amendment from which the Senate conferees recede is amendment numbered 1, which has been read at the desk, for the purchase of land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine. In the interest of economy, the Senate finally, after due conference and consideration, receded from that amendment.

Does the Senator desire me to go through all the various amendments which were dealt with by the conference?

Mr. BUTLER. No; that will do.

Mr. PERKINS. There are ten amendments in all which were in disagreement.

The conference report was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the request for a conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FORAKER, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. MALLORY were appointed.

FRANK B. CASE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11598) for the relief of Frank B. Case, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and agree to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. TILLMAN were appointed.

HENRY B. SHELL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 9903) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Shell.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHOUP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. VEST to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] if he will yield to me for a motion to take up what is known as the District code bill?

Mr. SHOUP. I shall have to decline to yield to the Senator for that purpose. I wish the Army bill to have preference. I have yielded a great deal heretofore to Senators in a spirit of accommodation, but I can not possibly yield further.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned on yesterday I was endeavoring to show that the temporary scheme adopted for the government of the Territory of Louisiana by Congress could not be considered as a precedent for the extraordinary grant of power which this amendment proposes to vest in the President, because the Territory of Louisiana came to us with a government already in force, having officers and a code of laws, and the act of Congress taking over that Territory and making temporary provision for its government until Congress could act more fully in the premises simply adopted the government and the laws and provided that the power to execute them should be vested in such officers as the President of the United States should appoint.

When you come to analyze that enactment of Congress it will be seen that it amounts to no more than an adoption by Congress, for the time being, of the government and the laws then existing in the Territory of Louisiana, and authorizing the President to fill up the offices provided by such laws with such persons as he might choose to appoint, who should carry on the government in the manner that it had theretofore been carried on, until Congress should act further in the premises.

It will be seen that there was in that instance no delegation of legislative power to the President at all. There was simply a conferring on him of the rightful and proper and constitutional power to fill up those offices as he pleased, and to carry on by the incumbents of those offices the government of Louisiana as it had theretofore been carried on, and not some indefinite government to be established by him. But by this amendment the President is to be given power to vest all military, civil, and judicial power in the Philippine Islands in such officers as he pleases and to be carried on in such manner as he shall direct, which involves not alone the appointment of the officials, but the determination of their powers and duties as well.

There is no perpetuation of the existing government which we received when we received the sovereignty of the Philippine Islands. The effect of this is to destroy all of that, and vest in the President the power to establish and maintain such government as, in his discretion, may seem best and to execute it by such persons as he may choose to appoint for that purpose.

Mr. President, the act of Congress of October 31, 1803, which took over the government of the territory of Louisiana, was construed in a subsequent law passed by Congress at the same session, and the limited character of the power conferred upon the President is very clearly set out in this subsequent enactment of Congress. I refer to the act approved March 19, 1804, providing for the expenses of the civil government of Louisiana; and I call the attention of Senators to this exposition by Congress of the meaning of its former enactment. Section 2 of that act provides:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of making a reasonable compensation to the person or persons in whom the powers of civil government, heretofore exercised by the officers of the said territories under the Spanish and French Governments, have been vested by the President of the United States, and also for defraying the other civil expenses of the said territories from the time when possession of the same was obtained by the United States to the time when a form of government shall, under the authority of Congress, be established therein, a sum not exceeding $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States and to be accounted for as other public moneys, shall be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

For the purpose of making compensation to the persons in whom the powers of civil government theretofore exercised by the officers of said territory under Spanish and French laws had been vested, is the language of the enactment, showing that Congress never had in mind that it was conferring upon the President the power to establish a scheme of government in the Territory of Louisiana and to carry it on in such manner as he pleased, but that it was simply conferring on him the power to fill up the offices theretofore in existence in the territory of Louisiana with such persons as he pleased, and to carry on that government already in existence by those officers.

Mr. President, we have not been favored with the views of the author of this amendment, or of any of its friends, on this question of power which I have been discussing. They have been silent on the subject, and, so far as anybody knows, they propose to remain silent and to force a vote upon this amendment without any discussion upon their side concerning its merits. But I have heard it suggested by gentlemen who, I suppose, are in favor of the adoption of this amendment, that this was no more a delegation by Congress of legislative power than it was a delegation of legislative power to create Territorial governments in the several Territories in which legislative departments were provided for and vested with the power of legislation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there not a plain distinction between the delegation of power by Congress and the exercise of power by Congress through persons to be selected in the way provided by Congress?

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I can not see, as applied to this proposition, any distinction. If Congress is invested by the Constitution with power to be exercised by it alone, it must exercise that power, and it can not cast the burden upon any other shoulders. Of course, there may be a conferring of power upon any individual or upon any department of Government if it be within the purview of the Constitution, but it is not permissible for Congress to shift from its shoulders to the shoulders of any individual or any department of Government the power conferred on it alone.

I was proceeding to say with reference to the proposition that this proposed amendment was no more a delegation of legislative power than was the conferring upon the legislature of a Territory the right to legislate in the Territory; that when the Constitution of the United States was formed it found in existence a scheme of Territorial government established by the Confederation for the government of the Northwest Territory.

The Government of the United States owned Territories prior to the adoption of the Constitution; it had organized Territorial governments, and had created three departments of government therein—legislative, executive, and judicial—and had conferred upon the legislative department the power of legislation in all local matters, subject to the supervising power of Congress. So when the Constitution was adopted it was adopted in view of the fact that that was the scheme of Territorial government prevailing upon this continent pursuant to our ideas of free representative government, and the Constitution must be considered to have been adopted in view of that fact and in recognition of the fact that that was a proper form of legislation to be pursued in the government of the Territories of the United States.

When the constitutions of the several States were adopted, we had what were called township governments in many of the States. In all New England, I believe, they had township governments, in which there was a large legislative power vested as to all local matters. So, also, we had municipal corporations, and the power to legislate in local matters was confided to those corporations. When the State constitutions were adopted, they were adopted with the knowledge on the part of the framers of the constitutions of this system and with the implied adoption of that system. Consequently while every State in the Union has three departments of government, while the courts of those States have been jealous to keep separate and apart and distinct the powers of those several departments of government, it has never been considered in any of them a trenching upon that principle for the legislature to delegate to municipal corporations or to township governments the right to legislate in local matters.

So when the Constitution of the United States was adopted, with the existence of the government for the Northwest Territories well known to its makers, it was adopted with a knowledge of the fact that that was the American system, and that system would be pursued in the government of other Territories if any such should come to the United States. Such has been the uniform history of legislation for all the Territories of the United States when found to be fitted for government.

It was declared in the Supreme Court of the United States in some case—I can not quote it now—that the articles for the government of the Northwest Territory were adopted anterior to the Constitution and that they stood upon the same footing as the Constitution and had the same degree of dignity and power in the American system. They were considered a solemn and binding compact between the States of the Union and the people of the unorganized Territories which could not be departed from without a violation of the plain faith and the plain duty of the people of the United States to the people of the Territories. That being the fact, manifestly while the creation of these Territories and the vesting in their legislatures of legislative power is in essence a delegation of legislative power, it is a delegation of power which was within the contemplation of the makers of the Constitution, and is not, therefore, in violation of the principle for which I am here contending.

Mr. President, this measure presents a question of policy as well as a question of power, and, in my judgment, the one appeals to Congress against the enactment of this proposed legislation as fully and as strongly as the other. It is a departure from the American system, the first in the history of this Government, and it involves such an extraordinary departure that I do not think Congress at this time, with the meager discussion which it is possible to give to it, ought to consider for a moment the question of its adoption.

As I stated yesterday, it vests in the President of the United States all of the powers which belong to and are exercised by the Czar of Russia in the government of any of his subjects. It gives him and his creatures all legislative, executive, and judicial powers in the government of the people of the Philippine Islands. Ought we to establish any such scheme of government? Ought we to adopt any such principle in dealing with any people who are to be subject to the sovereignty of the United States? Ought we to run counter to the accepted history and the accepted principles of government which have prevailed for one hundred and twenty-five years in dealing with this people who have come under the sovereignty of the United States, who are entitled to the protection of the Constitution of the United States and to the beneficent institutions which we ourselves enjoy?

I remember when the Spanish treaty was adopted the distinguished author of this amendment stated, in one or more speeches delivered in this Chamber, that there was not only no purpose on the part of anybody to deprive the people of the Philippines of the benefits of free government, as understood by the people of the United States, but I believe he went further and stated that there was no purpose on the part of anybody to deprive them ultimately of their independence, for which they were then striving and for which they have ever since been striving.

I remember that every time the Philippine question has been discussed our friends on the other side have risen and rebuked Senators upon this side who have been fearful that these people would not be accorded the same rights that all of the people of this country have, and they have said that in good time, when the insurrection had been suppressed, full and just and adequate legislation would be adopted, extending to the people of the Philippine Islands all the benefits of free government, as that term is understood in this country. And yet here, when it is proposed for the first time to legislate in the direction of giving these people a civil government, the proposition is to vest in one man every power of every character which may be exercised in government, absolute, autocratic, dictatorial, and imperial power. It is an extraordinary proposition; to my mind it is a monstrous proposition; one which no man of any political party in this Chamber or in public life in the United States ought to countenance for a moment.

If the institutions which we shall frame for the government of the Philippine Islands are to react upon the institutions of the United States, as we heard from a distinguished Republican Senator when the matter was first discussed in this Chamber, then indeed we may well tremble for this country if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin be adopted, because we will not only have a czar for the government of the people of the Philippine Islands, but we will have a czar for the government of the people of the United States before the Government of the United States shall have passed out of existence.

Moreover, Mr. President, we are striving at this time, if the reports from our officials in the Philippine Islands are to be accredited, to inspire confidence and respect and affection in the breasts of that people toward the Government and the people and the institutions of the United States. Is an autocratic form of government, in which all power is vested in one man, the way to inspire respect and love and affection in the breasts of the people of the Philippine Islands toward the United States of America? Is it the way to carry to them the message of peace and good will and respect for their rights, which it should be the object of every legislator to endeavor to convey to them, to say to them, "We are now dealing with your rights; we are now considering the form of government which we are to give to you; and the best we can do is to vest all power absolutely in the President of the United States, to give you such a government as he pleases, to legislate for you as he pleases, to make such institutions for you as he pleases, and to carry on those institutions for you as he pleases."

Mr. President, if I were a Filipino, I would never cease opposition to the attempt to impose the rule of the Government of the United States upon myself and my people in face of so tyrannical a proposition as that which is involved in this amendment, and I shall lose faith in the justice and mercy and love of the Almighty for mankind, if, this being the best we can do for the people of the Philippine Islands, He permits the struggle of that people to throw off our rule to fail and come to naught. Tyranny is tyranny the world over, whether enacted by the Congress of the United States or the British Parliament, whether enforced by the autocratic power of the Czar of Russia or the arbitrary will of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, is it imagined by anyone that we are going to give to the people of the Philippine Islands fair and decent and honest government as the result of this legislation? Can anybody imagine anything of the kind? Does not everybody know that it can not and will not result in anything of the kind? Does not everybody on the contrary know that it will result in debauchery, in dishonesty, in corruption, and in bringing down upon the Government and the people of the United States the utmost shame and humiliation? The members of the Philippine Commission themselves have drawn for our information a picture of that which is going to happen when we establish this scheme of civil government for the people of the Philippine Islands. I read from the report of that commission, page 20:

> The difficulties in securing a good civil service in the islands are formidable. There are two classes of applicants, one the Americans and the other the Filipinos. The Filipinos have had no training except from being in the Spanish service or observing its workings. That service was notoriously corrupt. The salaries paid were palpably inadequate for the support of life and were a plain intimation to the civil servant, in their inadequacy, that, if he could, he was expected to add to his official income in illegal ways and by peculation. This is not only characteristic of Spanish civil service, but also of that of all Oriental governments, and in the outset it is not too severe to say that the percentage of Filipinos who can be trusted to handle money in public office or to exercise any direct official control over their fellow-residents, without peculation or the imposition of illegal charges is comparatively small.
> They must be taught by better salaries and by the example of the Americans a different standard of integrity. On the other hand, the Americans who come to these islands come eight or ten thousand miles, come with a venturesome spirit, come with the idea of amassing a competence by their stay in the islands. They are exposed in any important official position where there is opportunity for defeating the rights of the government to constant temptations offered them by interested persons seeking to escape lawful burdens or to obtain fraudulent advantage, and who have no other conception of a public officer than of one who is to be reached by bribery if the sum offered be large enough.

Macaulay gives us in his essays something of an insight into the corruption and the results of the corruption of arbitrary government such as that which it is proposed by this bill to impose upon the people of the Philippine Islands. We are proceeding now to establish a system there, if system it may be called, in which the rights of the people of those islands are not nearly so well guarded as were the rights of the people of India against the impositions of officers of the East India Company in the early history of English dominion in the East Indies.

Yet it was the recognized thing that the superior officers, and even the inferior officers of that company, who went out to carry on the government of India, were expected, out of the peculations in which they might engage during their service there, to amass a competency upon which they might come back to their native country and live in affluence and plenty ever afterwards. It became so notorious that those officials, when they came back to their native country, became known as nabobs. Are we going to establish a government for the Philippines without any limitations whatever, intended to secure honesty and efficiency? Is it possible we are going to invest a single individual with autocratic power in those islands? Are we going to repeat the history of England, and have a class of nabobs returning to this country from the Philippines, rich on the plunder of that people, to be known here as the nabobs of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. President, the President does not need this power. Everybody knows that insurrection is still rampant in those islands. Everybody knows that we are not anyways near the end of the war in those islands. Everybody knows that the President, as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, so long as war exists there, can exercise and lawfully exercise as a war power identically the powers which it is proposed to vest in him by this extraordinary legislation.

Why, then, I ask, should we rush in at this hour for the purpose of establishing civil government which can not be put in force there until the military government has been got out of the way, and knowing that the latter can not be gotten out of the way until the war has ceased? Why should we put this extraordinary legislation upon the statute books at this time? There is not any necessity for it. There might be some necessity for it if the Senate could get its consent to the scheme outlined by the Philippine commissioners providing a civil government with power to grant franchises in the islands and with power to dispose of the lands and the mines of the islands. But the Senate has indicated its purpose not to give any temporary government that may be established in the Philippine Islands any such power. If the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin be adopted it will be limited by other amendments taking away from the government to be established the power to grant such franchises or to dispose of the lands and mines.

Therefore I say it is exceedingly unwise, in virtue of the very doubtful character of the power at least, and in view of the injurious effect which it is certain to have upon the minds and the affections of the people of those islands, for the United States to think of enacting this legislation at the present time. We will have plenty of time to adopt needed and proper legislation at some later session of Congress. It is not pressing. The insurrection is not going to be put down between now and the assembling of the next Congress. This will remain a dead letter upon the statute books for years and years to come, but it will constitute a precedent so pernicious that even though dead, it will live to curse us throughout our entire history.

Mr. President, I hope our friends on the other side will consider this matter carefully, will look into it, will reason it out for themselves, and that in the end they will see the unwisdom of making such an extraordinary grant of power to any individual, even though he hold the exalted position of President, and all for nothing, all for the accomplishment of no purpose, except that, having sworn the animal was 16 feet high, they now propose to stick to it.

Mr. SHOUP. I will say to the Senator from Washington that if he will examine an amendment found at the bottom of page 3385 of the RECORD, he will see that provision has been made guarding against any such abuse of power.

Mr. TURNER. I understand that to be the case. Therefore, I say, as this amendment has been shorn of everything which could grant to the President any power which he does not already have and exercise as the Commander in Chief of the armies of the United States, it is utterly useless to put it on the statute books. It does not accomplish anything. It runs four or five years ahead of the necessities of the situation. Why put an utterly indefensible provision in the statutes of the United States, or, if not indefensible in the view of our friends on the other side, yet one which is so exceedingly doubtful that it seems to me it ought to make them pause and hesitate?

This is not the way we have treated our other Territories. As the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] said, this amendment is drawn in the similitude of the act of Congress taking over the government of the territory of Louisiana, but it is a counterfeit, a barefaced, base, bald, bold counterfeit. It does not accomplish what the act for the government of Louisiana accomplished at all. It is not intended to accomplish for the government of the Philippine Islands what the act of Congress accomplished for the government of the territory of Louisiana. It is intended, on the contrary, in giving a sweeping grant of power to the President for the government of the Philippine Islands, to counterfeit the Louisiana act, in order that the consciences of the people of the United States may not be aroused to protest against such reckless, vicious, and indefensible legislation.

In view of this spurious and deceitful counterfeit I wish to point out again, as it has been pointed out before, that even this act for the government of the Territory of Louisiana, innocent as it was, as I believe it has been shown, of any of the vices of this proposed legislation, was enacted for only a limited period, that it carried within itself, as stated by the Senator from Alabama, the seeds of its own dissolution, because it was to expire by virtue of its own terms at the expiration of the then session of Congress unless superseded by other legislation which Congress might enact during that session; and Congress did, at the same session at which this temporary grant of power was given, provide for and erect in the Territory of Louisiana a Territorial government in the same form, with the same departments of government as theretofore established for the government of the Northwest Territory and the government of the Southwest Territory. A full scheme of government for Louisiana had been put in force by the enactment by Congress of laws to that end before the close of its then session.

More than that, this first scheme of government adopted for the Territory of Louisiana, taking the place of the temporary government established by the act of October 21, 1803, had provided that the legislative power should be vested in a limited number of persons, residents of the Territory, to be appointed by the President of the United States. That led to great dissatisfaction on the part of the people of the Territory of Louisiana, who protested that they were not given the rights and privileges and liberties secured to them by the terms of the treaty of cession. There was turbulence and disorder, and in consequence it was only a few months later that Congress again legislated for the Territory and wiped out all discrimination against its people and gave to them the power to elect for themselves their own legislative assembly, with power to deal with their local interests as it pleased.

The later provisions are found in an act for further providing for the government of the Territory of Orleans, adopted by Congress on the 2d day of March, 1805, within less than a year after the adoption of the first Territorial government of Orleans and under the provision of which amendatory act the people of the Territory of Louisiana were given the right to elect their own legislative assembly, charged with the duty of legislating for them in all local matters.

I want to here call the attention of the Senate to a report made by Mr. Randolph, at the second session of the Eighth Congress, which preceded this amendatory act, under which the people of the Territory of Louisiana were raised to the condition of self-government.

Mr. Randolph says in that report:

But because the memorialists may have appreciated too highly the rights which have been secured to them by the treaty of cession, the claims of the people of Louisiana on the wisdom and justice of Congress ought not (in the opinion of your committee) to be thereby prejudiced. Relying on the good sense of that people to point out to them that the United States can not have incurred a heavy debt in order to obtain the Territory of Louisiana merely with a view to the exclusive or especial benefit of its inhabitants, your committee at the same time earnestly recommend that every indulgence, not incompatible with the interests of the Union, may be extended to them. Only two modes present themselves whereby a dependent province may be held in obedience to its sovereign State—force and affection.

The first of these is not only repugnant to all our principles and institutions of Government, but it could not be more odious to those on whom it might operate than it would be hostile to the best interests, as well as the dearest predilections, of those by whom, in this instance, it would have to be exercised. The United States are not the property of an hereditary despot or the rich prize of a military adventurer whose favorites and followers may batten on the spoil of plundered provinces won by the blood and treasure of their exhausted subjects, but they form the patrimony of a free and enlightened people, who control, while they constitute the only fund from which the men and the money of which military power is composed can be drawn. It can never be the interest, therefore, of the people of the United States to subject themselves to the burdens and their liberties to the dangers of a vast military force for the subjugation of others.

The only alternative, then, which presents itself is believed to be not more congenial to the feelings than to the best interests of the Union. So long as their authority pervades the Territory of Louisiana, so long as their laws are respected and obeyed therein, your committee are at a loss to conceive how the United States are more interested in the internal government of that Territory than of any State in the Confederacy. By permitting her inhabitants to form their own regulations the voice of discontent would be hushed, faction (if it exist) disarmed, and the people bound to us by the strong ties of gratitude and interest. The spirit of disaffection, should it be excited at any future period by ambitious and unprincipled men, would be in direct hostility to the obvious interests of the people of Louisiana, whilst the ability of the Union to repress it would remain unimpaired.

Mr. President, these words of Mr. Randolph are as applicable to the people of the Philippine Islands as they were at the time they were written to the people of the Territory of Louisiana. If we would have peace and order in the Philippines, if we would win the affection and the confidence of that people, if we would win them to a regard for the institutions of our Government, the way is not to press upon them a tyranny by force of the military power of the United States, but as quickly as we can, at the first opportunity when peace shall descend on the islands, to give them a form of government in which they themselves will be the moving factors, in which they themselves will have the principal voice, in which the protection of the life, the liberty, and the property of their own people will be worked out through and by means of their own institutions and their own chosen officials.

Mr. President, I feel deeply on this subject, but this is all I shall say at the present time. I sincerely hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will not be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I realize how difficult it is in the expiring hours of a Congress to get a fair hearing, a patient hearing, even on subjects of great importance that really require the attention of the members of the Senate. I desire, in addressing myself to the two controverted questions which are presented by this bill, one concerning the Philippine Islands and the other concerning Cuba, to be as brief as I can.

I regard the question presented by the amendment offered by the Committee on the Philippines as very much improved by the amendment of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Still, it is an objectionable provision. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Relations with Cuba is a very much better proposition than the public press gave us reason to suppose would be submitted to the Senate as an amendment to this bill. Yet there are some features of it that I have not felt inclined to entirely agree with, and of which I shall speak as briefly as I think the importance of the subject will justify.

Mr. President, I am going to be frank about this matter. I want to say now that if there was a Congress to follow this that was not in full accord with the present Congress, if there was a Democratic Congress to follow this, I should myself insist that these two provisions should not be incorporated in the statute at the present session. But when we come to the practical consideration of the question we know very well that the next Congress will be dominated by the same party that dominate this, with, if anything, a rather stronger force than they have in this. Some concessions have been made to those who do not approve of the principle of the Philippine proposition because of the difficulty the friends of that proposition saw in front of them if they attempted to force it in the way it was introduced into the Senate. I have no hesitation in saying that if it had not been for the fear of a protracted delay and a defeat, the provisions concerning Cuba would be very different from what they are now. In a practical way, looking at what is to be the result, I believe that if this action is not taken at the present session of Congress, and a special session shall be called, there will be more vicious legislation concerning these two questions than is now proposed.

There is another consideration, Mr. President, for me. The party that proposes this legislation now is entering upon another four years of domination, so far as the Executive is concerned. For four years at least the Executive Office will be filled with one who is in accord with these provisions, and I am sorry to say that in my opinion he is in accord with them in their worst features. So, as a practical question, I believe it is better for us to debate them now, expressing our objections to them in a proper manner, and then allow the dominant party to take the vote and become responsible to the country for this legislation.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] have so thoroughly gone over the question of the power to delegate to the President what is proposed in this bill touching the Philippine Islands that I do not intend at this late hour of the session to repeat what they have said. A legal argument is practically the same whenever made by a person who has a full conception of the legal question and its bearing upon the subject before the court or before the Senate, and I can add nothing very much except by way of prelude to say that I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Washington that the quotation of the action of 1803 with reference to Louisiana is no precedent whatever for this action. As stated by them, the conditions are not alike. The authority then given was an authority to administer the laws that were then in existence, and this is an authority to create laws, and, having created them, to execute them.

Mr. President, as a lawyer I am at a great loss to understand what benefit shall come by this proposed legislation. If there is a condition of war in the Philippine Islands, as is contended and which I do not propose now to challenge, the President of the United States is there then in the exercise of the power given to him as the Commander in Chief of the Army in a state of war. I do not myself know any limitation upon that power. I never have found in my reading or in my researches that there was a point to which he could not go where any absolute king or absolute emperor could go. That is one of the objections to the exercise of this power. But it is a power that is almost necessary to be given to the Commander in Chief in time of war upon the well-known adage or the well-known sentiment that the civil laws are obsolete and disappear in a time of active war.

I do not suppose it will ever be in the power of men to regulate that power so that it will not be an absolute power; but the fathers of the Republic supposed it would be only executed in the hour of flagrant war, when the necessities of the country demanded that there should be no dual administration; when the necessities required that all the authority that was possible to be exerted by the nation should be exerted in the interest of the war.

Whether such a condition exists now is another question; but it is assumed here that it does exist. Therefore, those who claim that it exists have no right to come here now and say there is a lack of power on the part of the President to do what is necessary to maintain peace, to establish a civil government, to secure the rights of person and property in the Philippine Islands.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] a day or two ago told us that unless this legislation took place there could be no establishment of civil government. Mr. President, that is not the fact. The power of the Commander in Chief goes to the creation of a civil government if he sees fit to create it. It is true it gets its authority from the war power, but to all practical purposes it is a civil government if the government shall be administered, not by the agents of the Army, but shall be administered by those who are not clothed with military authority, except as they are clothed with it for the purpose of exercising not military but civil functions. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Cross vs. Harrison, found in 16 Howard, decided in 1853, declared in no less than six or seven places that the government in California was a civil government and not a military government, and that it was a civil government established by the President of the United States by virtue of his power as Commander in Chief of the Army.

Now, if you want to establish a civil government in the Philippine Islands, the power exists in the President of the United States to establish a civil government. Every principle of a civil government, every constitutional provision made, every tradition of a free people can be enforced by virtue of the President's power, if he sees fit to do it. If he desires to give to the people of the Philippine Islands the protection of all the provisions of the Constitution, he can do that.

Why is it that in the expiring hours of this Congress this provision, so strange to American law and so strange to American minds, so at variance with our ideas of just government, shall be forced upon us? We understand, Mr. President, that we are impotent to defeat this measure unless we shall debate it to an extent that shall prevent a vote, and, as I have said before, I do not believe we would accomplish anything by that course.

It is an offensive provision. It is, as I said, an unusual provision. It is unknown to us in its character, and I have in vain sought to find from some friend of the Administration what benefit is to be derived from it or what advantage either to the Government or to the people of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, before we get through with voting I want to offer an amendment, and I will submit it now for fear that I will forget it. I will send it up to the desk and have it read. I offer it as a separate section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. Insert as a separate section the following:

SEC. —. That the Constitution of the United States is hereby extended over and declared to be in force in the Philippine Islands so far as the same or any provision thereof may be applicable.

Mr. HOAR. Will my honorable friend allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I ask him whether that is not in some way a little ambiguous; that is, does it not affirm over the whole islands our just and rightful and lawful constitutional authority? I do not know what the Senator may think on that point, but I do not think we have any authority there. If the Senator would be willing to modify it so as to say that it is in force in the Philippine Islands so far as to control the action of every American official there, I should be very glad to give it my hearty support.

Mr. TELLER. I am not very particular about how that is done. There is an amendment now pending that will, if adopted, render it quite unnecessary that I should offer this.

Mr. President, I want to be frank about it. I want to find out whether those who say the Constitution does not go there and who say that it is a part of the United States are willing to put the Constitution there or not. Of course I have no idea that it will be adopted, but if it should be adopted I believe it would be the best thing that could be done. The amendment the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has proposed, that the legislation shall be in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States is perhaps in better shape for some minds than the other proposition. I have no idea myself that we are ever to surrender the Philippine Islands. I believe they are to be kept by the Government of the United States—held by it with a sovereignty more or less over them. Whether it is wise or not to do so is not a question I mean to debate. I am looking at the practical condition. I do not believe we shall surrender them to any other nation in the world, and we can only surrender them rightfully and properly to the people of that country. We have no right to surrender them to anybody else.

I know that in the next four years there is no probability that the sovereignty of those islands will be surrendered where it belongs—to the people of the islands; and if we are to be the dominating power there, I want the Constitution of the United States to be there. I want it to throw around every citizen of that country—who are not, in my judgment, citizens of the United States at the present day—all the protection that the Constitution gives to the people within the States. I know, of course, that it is not applicable so far as State governments are concerned. It is not applicable in many ways; and yet we have been in the habit of declaring this for many years. We have been declaring that the Constitution should take effect in the Territories. I will not spend much time on that point except to call it briefly to the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts and others. For instance, when Colorado was admitted into the Union not as a State, but as a Territory, I find this provision:

That the Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory of Colorado as elsewhere within the United States.

I have practically copied that in this suggestion. I find when Nevada became a Territory, in 1861, the provision was:

That the Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory of Nevada as elsewhere within the United States.

Such have been, without stopping to read them, the declarations practically with regard to all the Territories, including Oklahoma, the last one we organized. I do not know, nor does any one else, what the Supreme Court of the United States may say as to the Constitution in the Territories; and I do not now care to go into a debate on that question. Whatever we may think about it, whatever may be our personal views, when the court shall have decided that question, as it is likely to do very soon, we shall have to conform our legislation to that opinion. If they say the Constitution is there by virtue of its own force, then there is no reason why we should attempt any legislation with reference to it. If they say it is not there, then, it seems to me, we ought to put it there. No harm can be done unless it is, as the Senator suggests, a recognition, perhaps, of our supremacy there, which he seems inclined not to be quite willing to concede.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me—I do not like to interrupt him—in my opinion, in the Constitution, in international law, and in justice, we have no more right to govern the people of the Philippines than they have to govern us.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will answer it.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. What would be the difference if we should declare that the Constitution of the United States was in full force and effect in the Philippine Islands, so far as it was applicable?

Mr. HOAR. That affirms the rightful authority of the United States over that people, which I deny. I deny that we could ever get a title over a people, either by purchase or by conquest.

If the Senator would say in his amendment that so long as the authority of the United States is maintained there, the Constitution is in force over the civil and military officers of the United States, that would have my support; but it struck me in what he said that he had yielded the question of right in the matter. I am not sure that the Senator meant to yield that.

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean to yield that. I merely say that I presented that for the purpose of calling out a vote on that simple proposition.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should like to inquire whether either the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Massachusetts maintains that the Government of the United States has not, both by conquest and purchase, the absolute right to control the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TELLER. To do what?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Whether the Government of the United States has not by law and title a right to the ownership of those islands? Do we not own the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would put a further question, then, whether or not, at the time the war with Spain came on, the Filipinos owed allegiance or were subject to any government except that of Spain?

Mr. HOAR. They owed allegiance to their own government.

Mr. SULLIVAN. They were in a condition of rebellion against their rightful government—the Spanish Government.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, speaking for myself only, I find no difficulty with the title of the United States to the Philippine Islands as a question of territorial domination. We took them from Spain, but we took them subject to the rights of the people living on the land, and my contention has ever been since we have ratified the treaty, since we paid for the islands, since we conquered them, that under the laws of nations we had a right to them; but I have insisted that the fact that we had national control over them, that all the world recognized that we were entitled to take possession of them and to keep possession of them, did not release us from the obligation we owed to the people of the Philippine Islands.

What I have insisted, as well as I could, on former occasions, I want to insist on now in the fewest words that I can, so as not to prolong debate—that, in my judgment, the people of a country own it, and our title is subject simply to their right.

There is no way to determine this question of our title; there is no forum to which you can go; but the world says we have got title there; we say we have got title there; and that title brings with it obligations on our part. Those obligations are to recognize the great underlying principles of a republic, to recognize that we have not the right to dominate over those people and control them, either because we conquered that country or because we bought it, or both. We have not the right to avoid those obligations because we may set up the false claim that we are setting up here—that these people are incapable of self-government.

The proposition to clothe President with this power and to create a government there consisting of one-man power and one-man power alone is so repugnant to me, and it seems to me must be so repugnant to every man who thinks rightly on this subject, that I am at a loss how to contest it, how to argue it. It does not seem to me that it ought to be necessary in the Senate of the United States to discuss the duty of the Government of the United States in reference to those people. Whether they came under our domination by virtue of a treaty, or by virtue of conquest, or by their own voluntary surrender to us, our obligations are the same.

Mr. President, I am afraid to go beyond that, because, if I did, I should open up a discussion in my own mind which I should not be able to conclude within the period to which I desire to confine my remarks.

I will not read the case of Cross vs. Harrison, but I want to call attention to the syllabus of it, and I think I can read all I wish to there as to the proposition that this is not an enlargement of powers. I want to read only a sentence:

> The formation of the civil government in California, when it was done was the lawful exercise of a belligerent right over a conquered territory.

I read that simply to sustain my proposition that, if the President wants to establish a civil government in the Philippines, he has ample authority to establish it. Having ample authority to establish it, it seems to me he should have established it long ago, and it will not do for him to come here now and say, "I can not establish a civil government there, because Congress has not given me the power." The President, in the first place, has not before asked the power, and, in the second place, we will give him no more power than he has.

There are some ideas of government which there is great danger we may forget. There are some ideas which prevailed in the early history of this country, which had a controlling influence in securing the present form of government, which I think occasionally we might return to. I want to read some extracts from an address of the Continental Congress before the separation of the colonies from Great Britain, at a time when the great majority of men connected with public affairs in the colonies hoped and expected that we would maintain our colonial relations with that country. They are epitomized in an address sent to the people of Quebec by that Congress, which will be found in volume 1, page 40, of the Journals of Congress. My attention was called to this by a young man who was temporarily in the city. I want to read just a few extracts from it, as it is too long to be read in full.

This is an address prepared by a committee and signed by "Henry Middleton, president," which was submitted to the Continental Congress and approved. I will not attempt to read the text of it, but it names five rights which are essential to liberty.

First. The right of the people to share in their own government by their representatives chosen by themselves.

Mr. President, have we heard any suggestion anywhere in the legislation now proposed that the people of the Philippine Islands ought to have any share in it? I have an amendment pending that they shall have participation in it, but that amendment will not receive the approval of the majority in this Chamber. There is no pretense that those people are to take any part in this new so-called civil government to be established.

The second essential right named in this address is the right of trial by jury.

The third is the right to the writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. President, I have an idea that the right of habeas corpus exists in the Philippine Islands. I do not suppose it could be invoked or enforced, yet as early as 1350 the right of habeas corpus was a well-recognized principle under Spanish law, and I believe has ever been, nominally at least, a feature of Spanish jurisprudence; but it certainly is not in active existence in the Philippine Islands to-day. If so, I suppose those unfortunate creatures, citizens of the United States, some of them at least, and others under our protection and care, or they ought to be, would have invoked it before they were transported from their homes to a distant land and kept there as exiles.

Fourth. The right of holding land by the tenure of easy rents and not by rigorous or oppressive services.

Fifth. The freedom of the press.

Those are the things which are laid down in this address as essential to liberty.

Let me read what was said about it, and I ask the attention of the Senate to it for a moment. I do not believe anybody here has any business which is more important than occasionally going back and hearing what the fathers said about the fundamental principles of liberty. The English Government had organized in Canada a government that had a governor; they had what they called civil government—just such a civil government, Mr. President, as you are going to have in the Philippine Islands—civil only in name; not a republican government, not a free government, but an absolute government—a government as absolute as any government under the sun. When this amendment shall have been crystallized into law, and the President shall have executed it by appointing his representatives, I say here now that in all the world you will find no more absolute government than that, and you may search every page of history since letters were known to men and you will not be able to find a more absolute government than that will be. An absolute government of that character established in the twentieth century by the professed great free Government of the United States! It is not a free government; it can not be a free government when all the power is resolved into one man, though he may have a hundred agents to execute it.

Let us see what these struggling patriots said about this kind of a government:

> You have a governor, it may be urged, vested with the executive powers or the powers of administration. In him and in your council is lodged the power of making laws. You have judges who are to decide every cause affecting your lives, liberty, or property. Here is, indeed, an appearance of the several powers being separated and distributed into different hands, for checks, one upon another—the only effectual mode ever invented by the wit of men to promote their freedom and prosperity.

That is as true to-day as it was one hundred and twenty-seven years ago—

> But, scorning to be illuded by a tinseled outside and exerting the natural sagacity of Frenchmen, examine the specious device and you will find it, to use an expression of holy writ, "a white sepulcher" for burying your lives, liberty, and property.
> Your judges and your legislative council, as it is called, are dependent on your governor, and he is dependent on the servant of the Crown in Great Britain. The legislative, executive, and judging powers are all moved by the nods of a minister.

Could anybody state more clearly and pointedly the condition that will exist under this law when it goes into effect?

> Privileges and immunities last no longer than his smiles. When he frowns, their feeble forms dissolve.

Mr. CHILTON. Was that the answer of the Continental Congress?

Mr. TELLER. That was an address sent in 1774 by the Continental Congress, when it was still hoped, and it is so expressed in this address, that their relations to Great Britain would continue and would be regulated and recognized as the condition of Englishmen. They so stated.

Those men were students of history; they were philosophers in the art of government and greater truths were never uttered. They were not original with them, however, for that great French writer Montesquieu had said the same thing. These great truths that are necessary to be recognized to maintain freedom and liberty are not the creation of men; they have existed always; they are the emanation of the Deity; they are not human, they are divine, and no nation has ever neglected them or repudiated them that could claim to be called a nation of freemen. To-day we are asked here to put our approval upon a bill that would carry the Government of this country back to the dark ages.

Mr. President, I will not give it my approval; but it will get the approval of the great American Senate and the American House of Representatives, and I very much fear that the people of this country have so forgotten these great principles of liberty that it may receive the approval also of the country. But, nevertheless, it is our duty to raise our voices against it and at least give warning to the American people that an outrage of this kind, perpetrated upon 10,000,000 men, who may not be citizens of this country, but who are under its jurisdiction, at least, must in the end reflect upon every one of the 76,000,000 men who dwell under our flag.

Mr. President, I am anxious not to appear to impede the proceedings of the Senate, and I know that if I should take a week my words would fall upon dull and heedless ears. I know that the edict has gone forth that this is to be added to the statutes; and if it is not added to the statutes, the administration of affairs in the Philippine Islands has been upon that principle for two years, and it will go on with the statute or without it. I regret to see the American Congress putting itself back upon what I believe to be a wicked and vicious system of administration, and I will not lend my voice to it.

Now, I want to say a few words about Cuba, and then I propose to leave this matter, not because I have said what I want to say, nct because I have said what I ought to say perhaps, but because it is useless to say more.

The Committee on Relations with Cuba, of which I am a member, have reported an amendment to this bill. It is so much better than what the public press declared was to be demanded of the people of Cuba that I experienced a feeling of relief, at least, when I found that it was not to be so drastic and so savage as I had supposed. I do not believe that it is what we ought to demand of Cuba. I do not believe that it minimizes or destroys her independence. I believe she will be an independent power even with this amendment, but I greatly fear that it will wound the sensibilities of those people down there and that it may get us into trouble. I wish they would accept it, for it would be infinitely better for them to accept it than it would to have other terms, infinitely harder and more drastic, applied to them, as I am sure they will be applied if this bill fails.

Cuba is a foreign country. It has been so said by the Supreme Court of the United States, and it was so declared by us here when we, by a vote of 64 to 6, declared in this body that it was a republic when we declared the people of Cuba were free and of right ought to be free. I have no fears myself about the condition in Cuba. I believe to-day, if their government were put in operation, if we withdrew our troops and recognized it, and should refrain from any attempt to control or influence it, peace and order would there prevail. Possibly now and then there might be an exception, but no greater than has been found in this country year after year in different States, no greater than was found in our earliest history, when there was a whisky rebellion in Pennsylvania, and Dorr's rebellion in Rhode Island, and serious troubles in different States from time to time, even down to modern days, within the last two, three, or five years.

Such émeutes and such troubles will occur; but the Cuban people will in time work out their salvation, and they will have a government there that, in my opinion, will take care of property interests and private rights, and will recognize the right of the people there to a due participation in the affairs of their government.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I pledged myself to the Senate that I would speak; but I am not satisfied with what I have said, for the reason that I have said it in such haste. I will take a moment longer to say that when we submit these propositions to Cuba I hope they will be accepted by the people of Cuba; but if not, I want to say that, in my judgment, there should be no drastic measures nor any friction engendered because they may not be willing to accede to our demands, but that further consideration should be had in regard to these matters.

Mr. President, with these brief remarks, I now leave the question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, before I begin my remarks upon the general question, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some questions of franchises in connection with the Philippine Islands.

Last year a company was organized for the purpose of exploiting the Philippine Islands. It was called the Philippines Lumber and Development Company. It issued an elaborate prospectus, and opened an office in Chicago. I would not allude to the matter if it were not for the fact that prominent officers of the Government were connected with its organization and were members of its board of directors. According to the prospectus, this company had a capital of $5,000,000, and was to engage in the purchase and sale of lumber in the Philippine Islands, and assist in the general development of that country. Their prospectus says:

> Negotiations are pending for timber rights, and some valuable timber rights have already been secured, and negotiations for others are rapidly approaching completion. No other company can compete with this one in getting a first foothold in the islands, and for several years at least this company will be ahead of all competitors.
> Unlike most tropical countries the labor problem is easily solved by the Chinese labor, which is plentiful and fairly good.

The office of the company is in the Merchants' Loan and Trust Company building, corner of Adams and Clark streets, Chicago, and upon the glass door of the office is printed the following:

> Philippines Lumber and Development Company, J. A. T. HULL, president.

Mr. HULL, the president of this Philippine company, is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the present House of Representatives. The attorney of this company is Hon. B. B. DOVENER, a member of Congress from West Virginia. The company is organized in West Virginia. Its treasurer is John Gibson, a banker at Creston, Iowa. Its secretary is Stewart Spalding, of Chicago. Mr. Spalding is also secretary of the Calumet and Chicago Canal and Dock Com any and is financially interested in other concerns. The officers of the company said last fall, when interviewed by a reporter, that the son of Congressman HULL and a former major of volunteers was at that time in the islands in the interest of the company. I do not care to comment upon this. It is not strange that these things occur and that members of Congress and prominent officers of the Government undertake such enterprises and engage in them—enterprises which for their success are based upon the influence of those who have to say what policy, military and otherwise, shall be pursued in regard to those people. I say it is not surprising that members of Congress engage in these transactions when the Administration is appointing the sons and relatives of Senators, Members, and judges to official positions when legislation is pending which the Administration is exceedingly anxious shall come to a successful conclusion.

This simply illustrates what may be accomplished in the Philippines if the policy now being pursued is to be continued. Sixty-eight million acres of the land in that country are still owned by the Government. But a few million acres have gone into private ownership. The purpose of the company was—and it was one of the arguments which they used with people in order to induce them to invest in their stock—that they had concessions from private parties of land in that country, but they could, no doubt, also secure large concessions from the Government itself. Here, then, is the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, a man who, above all others, had charge of the bill to enlarge the Army for the purpose of continuing our operations in that country, exploiting the Philippines. It is not the only enterprise engaged in by the officers of the Government.

I have in my hand papers in relation to the organization of a company for the purpose of controlling the production of hemp in the Philippine Islands. The scheme of the company was to build at Manila a mill to manufacture manila hemp and also to control the output of the islands. A meeting was held in this city which was attended by H. O. S. Heistand, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army of the United States, and he, with Major Hawks, proceeded to the organization of a company under the laws of West Virginia for the purpose of building a factory to manufacture manila hemp and to control the output of manila hemp in the island. Major Hawks testified that the Assistant Adjutant-General informed him that several officers of the Army had been seen by him and would engage in the enterprise. One thing is certain, the Assistant Adjutant-General did engage in the enterprise, as will be shown by his letters and telegrams attached to these papers.

It was arranged that Major Hawks should go to New York and raise the capital necessary to carry on this enterprise, and the Assistant Adjutant-General agreed to secure for him the indorsements of the officers of the Army for this purpose. So on July 13, 1899, Major Hawks received the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 13, 1899.

To whom it may concern:

Erastus L. Hawks, late major, Tenth United States Volunteer Infantry, and now organizing a company for the purpose of manufacturing rope and cordage from manila hemp at Manila, P. I., has our full confidence and earnest good wishes, believing his representations and business methods will be correct.

The enterprise, we believe, affords a good opportunity for the safe investment of capital, and the Government will look with favor on same.

H. O. S. HEISTAND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.
JAMES A. BOYD,
Assistant Attorney-General.

GEO. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Then follows a letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 27, 1899.

MY DEAR MAJOR HAWKS: I did not get to see General Corbin before you left the other day. I was kept busy at the White House all afternoon, and only chanced to meet Meiklejohn as he was leaving the office. He is much pleased with the work done. We are expecting a cable now any time in re the site.

You are assured of assistance in making your project a success, and, indeed, it looks as if you could even in spite of us if we were not your friends.

Yours, sincerely,

H. O. S. HEISTAND.

He was still occupying the position of Assistant Adjutant-General. Here is another:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31, 1899.

MY DEAR MAJOR HAWKS: Your note of the 26th to hand, and I note with gratification what you say of our prospects and progress.

I have sent you a pamphlet showing export duties, etc., as at present arranged. Of course the needs of the future will be met as developments require.

Yours, truly,

H. O. S. HEISTAND.

Here is a scheme originating in the War Department. Heistand says that the Adjutant-General, his immediate chief, and the Assistant Secretary of War were parties with him in the transaction. Hawks goes to New York, receives the indorsement of the Assistant Secretary of War, the Assistant Adjutant-General, and James E. Boyd, Assistant Attorney-General, and promotes his enterprise. He receives from Heistand the assurance that the duties will be arranged—

Of course the needs of the future will be met as developments require—

Referring to the duties to be levied upon their products.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator what is the name of Mr. Boyd. Is he the gentleman whom we confirmed as United States judge in North Carolina?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is the same man.

Mr. TELLER. The same man?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the same man; confirmed as United States judge.

Mr. TILLMAN. What papers are those from which the Senator from South Dakota is reading?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am reading sworn copies of letters and correspondence between Heistand, Assistant Adjutant-General, and Major Hawks. These are verified by affidavit as being correct copies.

Mr. TELLER. Is the Major also in the service?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Major is not in the service. But I will reach that further on.

Mr. TILLMAN. Those are the two who had some trouble, and one was discharged and the other retained?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Promoted.

Mr. TILLMAN. And promoted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; Heistand was promoted. Then follows this:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 1, 1899.

MY DEAR MAJOR HAWKS: The following telegram received from General Otis this morning:

"Number available sites between Bacoor and Cavite well protected, permitting building of wharves to deep water, about 24 feet. Price depends upon vicinity to villages, and now fluctuating."

Very sincerely,

H. O. S. HEISTAND.

Maj. E. L. HAWKS, New York City.

He is still Assistant Adjutant-General. He telegraphed to Otis to select a site, which gives additional assurance to New York investors that the Army was behind the enterprise.

Again:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, August 9, 1899.

MY DEAR MAJOR HAWKS: I have your several recent favors and am sorry you were ill, but am pleased that you are entirely recovered again.

I return herewith Mr. Jackson's letter, and have mailed you to-day map showing you the district about Manila.

I don't think there will be any more troops raised, and I base this opinion on present indications. However, if they are, I will let you know as soon as my advice warrants.

Sincerely, yours,

H. O. S. HEISTAND.

Maj. E. L. HAWKS, New York City.

Finally it appears that Meiklejohn and Corbin refused to go on with the enterprise. They dropped out. Then difficulty arose. Heistand was sent to Paris. Hawks was left, with what expenses he had incurred, in trouble and difficulty. He thereupon put the matter in the hands of an attorney, who saw Meiklejohn and saw Corbin. He finally agreed to take a sum of money for his expenses and an appointment in the War Department, if he would keep quiet in the future and drop the enterprise, so far as his relations with it were concerned. Here is a copy of an affidavit by Hawks, reciting the settlement, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

The affidavit is as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Before me, the undersigned, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, on this —— day of January, A. D. 1900, personally came Erastus L. Hawks, of lawful age, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is a resident of the District of Columbia; that he is personally acquainted with H. O. S. Heistand; that he is the same Erastus L. Hawks who has this day executed an indenture of release and satisfaction to the said H. O. S. Heistand; that, as a part consideration for the execution of such release, he has received from the said Heistand the sum of —— dollars in money to him in hand paid, and that, in further consideration of the adjustment of the disputes and differences between him and the said Heistand, spoken of in such indenture of release, he has delivered to the representatives of the said Heistand letters, telegrams, papers, documents, contracts, articles, minutes, and memoranda, by whomsoever made, written, signed, or executed, in any way connected with the business spoken of in said indenture, that have come into his possession or under his control, as well as all copies thereof, whether written, printed, carbon, or letter-press, and all pictures, photographs, lithographs, duplicates, engravings, negatives, films, or reproductions thereof, or any part or portion thereof, no matter how made, which have been in any way within his possession or control or knowledge, and that neither originals or copies or duplicates or reproductions of any kind or character whatsoever now remain in his possession or under his control, or in the possession or control of anyone else, by or through the affiant, except alone the representatives of the said Heistand, and further affiant saith not.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then follows this remarkable situation:

APPOINTMENT DIVISION, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 1, 1900.

Erastus L. Hawks is hereby employed as inspector under the War Department for duty in connection with the customs service in the Philippine Islands, at a compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum, to be paid from the fund accruing from the collection of revenues in the Philippine Islands.

This employee is entitled to transportation and actual and necessary expense of subsistence while traveling from Washington, D. C., to Manila, P. I., at a rate not exceeding $3 per diem, to be paid from the said fund as above.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

The next paper is:

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Manila, P. I., April 18, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that you are hereby detailed for duty at the custom-house at Iloilo, P. I.

You will proceed by the earliest Government transportation to Iloilo and report to the collector of customs of that port.

Please exhibit this communication to the depot quartermaster and secure your transportation to Iloilo.

Very respectfully,

WM. SPURGIN,
Lieutenant-Colonel Sixteenth U. S. Infantry,
Collector of Customs of the Islands and of the Chief Port.

Mr. E. L. HAWKS,
Inspector, Customs Service, Manila, P. I.

Thereupon Mr. Hawks proceeded to Iloilo, and upon arrival there was dismissed from the service without transportation home and without money. He had been in the service two days, and I will ask to have inserted the papers that corroborate my statement in regard to that matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The papers referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Manila, P. I., June 11, 1900.

To the Secretary to the United States
Military Governor in the Philippine Islands.

(Through the collector of customs.)

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter of appointment to the position of inspector under the War Department, for duty in connection with the customs service in the Philippine Islands.

Under this order and the assignment of the collector of customs of the islands, I proceeded from Washington, D. C., to Manila, P. I., thence to Iloilo.

I have the honor to also inclose a copy of a cablegram from the War Department which reached me May 12. I left Iloilo for Manila by the first available transport.

I have been paid the salary stated in my letter of appointment to include April 30 last.

I have the honor to request that I may receive pay from May 1 to July 20, which will be the earliest date at which I will be able to reach Washington, at the rates established in my letter of appointment, and that I may receive transportation from Manila to San Francisco per transport, and from San Francisco to Washington, my home and the place at which I received my appointment.

Being desirous of leaving on the transport Hancock, I respectfully request an early and favorable consideration of this application.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. L. HAWKS, Inspector.

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Manila, P. I., June 11, 1900.

Hawks, E. L., late inspector, Philippines customs service, requests that he be paid salary under terms of his appointment from May 1 to July 20, 1900, and that he be furnished transportation from Manila, P. I., to San Francisco, and from San Francisco to Washington, D. C.

[First indorsement.]

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Manila, P. I., June 11, 1900.

Respectfully forwarded to the secretary to the United States military governor in the Philippine Islands, recommending approval.

WM. F. SPURGIN,
Lieutenant-Colonel Sixteenth United States Infantry,
Collector of Customs of the Islands and of the Chief Port.

[Second indorsement.]

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES
MILITARY GOVERNOR IN THE PHILIPPINES,
Manila, P. I., June 12, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the collector of customs of the islands and the chief port, Manila, P. I.

The military governor authorizes the payment of salary to the writer of the within communication up to and including July 13, which will be the date of his discharge from the service, and may be paid by you, inclusive, to that date.

Orders have been issued to the chief quartermaster to provide him with transportation from this port to San Francisco on next transport leaving Manila. Mr. Hawks may likewise be paid his traveling expenses from Iloilo to this point in the amount stated by you on the communication inclosed herewith.

No per diem allowance during the return travel from Manila to the United States will be allowed. No transportation beyond San Francisco will be granted, and Mr. Hawks will be expected to pay the expense of his own subsistence on board the transport en route to San Francisco.

Any claim which he may have for per diem and traveling expenses en route from Manila to the place of his appointment will be preferred by him upon his arrival at the latter point.

By command of Major-General MacArthur:

E. H. CROWDER,
Lieutenant-Colonel Thirty-ninth Infantry, U. S. V.,
Secretary.

WOTHERSPOON,
Captain, Twelfth Infantry, Collector of Customs.

No. 518 TENTH STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., August 1, 1900.

SIR: On March 1 I was appointed inspector of customs in the Philippine Islands. Left Washington on the 8th following, arriving at Manila, P. I., April 16, and reported for duty. Was assigned to the port of Iloilo, P. I., as chief inspector, and ordered to take the first available transport for that point. April 23 I sailed on the U. S. transport Indiana, arriving at Iloilo on May 7, and immediately reported for duty. On May 12 a copy of your order revoking my appointment was received, dated War Department, Washington, D. C., May 5, or two days before reaching my destination.

Your order simply revoked my appointment, without reference to pay or transportation. After much delay I succeeded in getting transportation to Manila, P. I., and there the commanding general passed on my case, allowing me pay to and including July 13 and transportation from Manila to San Francisco, Cal. After arriving there on July 14, I telegraphed the Assistant Secretary of War, asking that transportation be furnished to Washington, which was granted.

Up to the time of my arrival here I had no idea of the cause of my dismissal. On reporting to you, and asking to be informed as to the reasons for my removal, I gathered from your response that it was because of my former connection with a movement to organize a hemp company, which was abandoned.

I have suffered, as a consequence of the Department's action, financial loss and mortification, and I can not but feel that your sense of justice will prompt you to afford me an opportunity to present such facts for your consideration as will show that there exists no grounds for such complaints as may have been made against me, if any.

Very respectfully,

ERASTUS L. HAWKS.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War, War Department, Washington, D. C.

(Not answered August 13, 1900.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 13, 1900.

SIR: Not having heard from you in response to mine of August 1, 1900, asking for a statement of the cause of my removal as inspector in the customs service in the Philippine Islands, and no hearing, as requested, having been granted me, I beg to say that I now consider myself at liberty to take such steps in my own defense as may seem to me advisable.

Respectfully, yours,

ERASTUS L. HAWKS.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 27, 1900.

Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On March 1 last I was appointed to the customs service in the Philippine Islands, and on April 18 assigned to duty at the port of Iloilo, and on May 5 summarily removed, receiving notice of such removal on May 12. These and other pertinent facts will more fully appear by reference to letters to the Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of War, copies of which are sent herewith, and a perusal of such letters will show that I have repeatedly sought an explanation of the causes of my removal, and my applications in this respect, both verbally and written, have been silently ignored.

I feel it my duty, therefore, to submit these letters for your consideration to the end that I may obtain such information as to the causes of removal or charges against me as even the worst offender would be entitled to obtain.

I also send herewith copy of my order of appointment and of removal, as well as a letter from W. W. Wotherspoon, captain, Twelfth Infantry, collector of customs at Iloilo, showing that all duties assigned to me were performed promptly and to his entire satisfaction.

Believing that this application will appeal to your high sense of justice, and thanking you for the favor of an early response,

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ERASTUS L. HAWKS.

DUDLEY & MICHENER,
ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS AT LAW, PACIFIC BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to our conversation this afternoon we wired Major Heistand, advising that he pay $650 in full satisfaction of all demands, and asking that he have that amount put to our credit in bank here immediately. We also requested an immediate response.

We will give you notice as soon as we hear from him.

Very truly, yours,

DUDLEY & MICHENER.

DUDLEY & MICHENER,
ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS AT LAW, PACIFIC BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Major Heistand is away from Paris on leave, which accounts for his failure to answer our cablegram sooner.

We have received a cablegram from him this morning, saying that he will pay $500. Evidently he understands, as we have all understood from conversations with your client, that this will cover his actual outlay.

Very truly, yours,

DUDLEY & MICHENER.

Mr. WILLIAM C. MCINTIRE,
614 F street NW., Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Manila, P. I., June 12, 1900.

MY DEAR MAJOR: In the settlement made last winter my expense account was $885, and four months' service in organizing the Cordage Company, for which my charge was $250 per month, or $1,000, making in all $1,885. I was paid $650 and promised an appointment. After waiting one month, during which time the honorable Assistant Secretary of War was reminded of his promise several times, the appointment was made. (See copy of appointment.)

I left Washington for San Francisco March 8; sailed from San Francisco on the United States Army transport Meade March 17, and arrived in the harbor of Manila April 16, 1900, and on the 17th reported to the commanding general for duty; was ordered to report to the collector of customs for the Philippines, which I immediately did, and was assigned to duty at Iloilo, P. I., and given transportation on the United States transport Indiana, which sailed on the 21st instant, arriving at Iloilo on May 7; reported for duty the same day, and was placed in charge of the harbor. On May 12 received copy by mail of order from the Secretary of War revoking my appointment, dated Washington, D. C., May 5, two days before arriving at my destination. I had drawn my pay up to May 1, and sent all home except $50, all of which it took to pay my expenses at Iloilo. The collector of customs at Iloilo succeeded in getting me transportation to Manila, and on the 23d sailed from that port, arriving here June 5, since which time I have been trying to get my pay up to the time of my arrival here, and transportation home.

You will see by the copy of revocation of appointment inclosed herewith that it simply left me to do as I pleased, get back if I could, or stay in the Philippine Islands. Had I been ordered to report to Washington, it would have been plain sailing. I expect to sail on the 15th for San Francisco, and will probably get home about July 20, when I shall take the entire matter up and fight it to a finish. I have been badly treated, and nothing will satisfy me except a full settlement. Just what interest you have in the matter, having been informed, I suppose, through your great attorneys that the matter was settled, and that the original papers had all been turned in, you may feel comparatively safe, but for your edification I beg to inform you that certified copies of all correspondence and photographs of the most important letters were retained by me and are now in my possession. I did not think the settlement would be carried out in good faith, and my judgment has been confirmed.

Yours, very truly,

E. L. HAWKS.

Maj. H. O. S. HEISTAND,
Military Commissioner, United States Army,
Paris Exposition, Paris, France.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1901.

J. H. RALSTON, Esq.,
Counselor at Law, Washington, D. C.:

During the winter of 1899 and 1900 I was under employment by Maj. E. L. Hawks to secure a settlement between himself and several gentlemen connected with the War, Navy, and Department of Justice.

As a result of my labors a settlement was made in which a certain sum of money was paid to me as the representative of Major Hawks. This payment was made on January 31, 1900, and I was induced to recommend the acceptance of the sum offered by the circumstances that Major Hawks was promised an appointment in the civil department of the Government. In consequence of the understanding recited, I assisted and aided Major Hawks in securing the appointment, which was made on the 1st day of March, 1900, in the customs service in the Philippine Islands, and it was my understanding that said appointment was not to be revoked during the remainder of the then existing administration.

WM. C. MCINTIRE.

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Iloilo, P. I., May 26, 1900.

Mr. E. L. HAWKS,
Late Inspector of Customs, Iloilo, P. I.

SIR: In compliance with your request I have the honor to inform you that the records of this office show that in accordance with your orders you arrived at this port on the U. S. S. transport Indiana May 7, 1900, and reported for duty the same day; that you were on duty from that date until notice of revoking of your appointment was received, May 12, 1900. During this short period of service you were engaged in studying the duties of your position, and all duties assigned you were performed promptly and to my entire satisfaction.

Very respectfully,
(Signed) W. W. WOTHERSPOON,
Captain, Twelfth Infantry, Collector of Customs.

Order revoking my appointment was dated War Department, Washington, D. C., May 5, 1900, or two days before reaching my assignment.

E. L. HAWKS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then follows this:

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY GOVERNOR IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
Manila, P. I., May 7, 1900.

To the Collector of Customs of the Islands and of the Chief Port, Manila, P. I.

SIR: The following is a copy of a cablegram received this day and furnished for your information:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5, 1900.

"OTIS, Manila:

"Appointment E. L. Hawks inspector in customs service is revoked.

"ROOT, Secretary of War."

Very respectfully,
R. A. BROWN,
Major and Inspector-General, United States Volunteers.

In the meantime, Heistand had been promoted and sent over to the Orient. The last I heard of him he was in China. Since that I think he has returned to the Philippines.

Now, Hawks was appointed on March 1, 1900, and dismissed from the service May 2. He just had time to get there, and they had him so far out of the way, without money, that the natural supposition was that it would be a good while before he could come back to annoy them. In the meantime, Heistand had been well taken care of.

After these transactions comes Mr. Hawks's protest against being so shamefully treated and then discharged. He addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, dated August 1, 1900, which is as follows:

No. 518 TENTH STREET NW., WASHINGTON, D. C., August 1, 1900.

SIR: On March 1 I was appointed inspector of customs in the Philippine Islands. Left Washington on the 8th following, arriving at Manila, P. I., April 16, and reported for duty. Very respectfully,
ERASTUS L. HAWKS.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War, War Department, Washington, D. C.

Now, in the face of this, the Assistant Adjutant-General was sent out of the country also, but with a commission, and I understand that since the Senate convened we have confirmed him to a higher office than he held before. This man then is told he is discharged for helping to organize a hemp company in connection with other officers of the War Department. The pets of the War Department are promoted, while he is thrown out.

Then follows another letter to Mr. Root, insisting upon an answer, after which Mr. Hawks wrote a letter to the President. He then filed the following:

Charges and specifications preferred against H. O. S. Heistand, lieutenant-colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General, U. S. A., by Erastus L. Hawks.

Charge: Conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

Specifications: In this, that the said H. O. S. Heistand, on or about the 1st of May, 1900, did represent to me and to others that his superior officer, Adjutant-General H. C. Corbin, and also Assistant Secretary of War George D. Meiklejohn, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy Allen (now governor of Porto Rico), and former Assistant Attorney-General James E. Boyd (now United States district judge for North Carolina) were ready and willing and had agreed to enter a combination for the purpose of organizing a company to manufacture cordage at Manila, P. I., and to control the output of hemp from the Philippine Islands, stating that the said islands would be under military rule for at least ten years, and that by reason of their high official positions those named could procure for the company certain business advantages, including, among others, an arrangement of the tariff to meet its necessities, and further, after much money and several months of time had been spent on my part, Lieut. Col. H. O. S. Heistand represented that Assistant Secretary of the Navy Allen and Adjutant-General Corbin had withdrawn all connection with the proposed company, all of which associates and purposes have been denied by each and every one of the above-named parties.

ERASTUS L. HAWKS.

I understand that nothing whatever has been done about it. Hawks has been refused a hearing. Heistand still continues to bask in the smiles of the Administration. Was it these two franchises that were going to be protected by this amendment on the Army appropriation bill? Was it because of this that there was such anxiety expressed on the part of the Taft commission that they should be authorized to issue franchises? Is it because of this that such haste is made at the end of a session to furnish a form of civil government for that country so that these franchises can be granted? If these things occur among the immediate officers of the Government and nothing is done about it, what can the people of the Philippines expect from the people of the United States?

I am very glad, of course, that the amendment has been amended; but it still provides for the issue of franchises which are to be approved by the President. What does this provision mean? It means that the civil governor of the Philippines will issue and approve such franchises as he chooses, and the President will take his word for it that they are necessary and will give his indorsement. Government on the other side of the earth, and irresponsible government, is what we propose to give to these people under this amendment. We propose to allow our officers to exploit them with franchises and prey upon helpless millions subjected to their will. Everyone knows that this is to be. It is the history of all carpetbag government that the approval of the head of authority within the home government amounts to nothing, and that the protest of the governed people is never accepted if it comes in the form of charges against those who immediately rule over them. This was true in the Territories of the United States along our own border, inhabited by our own people, and it will be a thousand times more so in the distant Philippines, inhabited by a race of aliens.

Mr. President, what are we doing in the Philippines? The Government of the United States is engaged in destroying by its armed forces a government which protects the lives and property of the people of that country. The Government of the United States, by its military power, is crushing out, as far as it is able to do, a better government for those people than we ever can institute in its place. We have created the blackest page ever written in the history of the world in permitting it to become a matter of record that this great Republic is turning upon its allies and friends and is undertaking to rob them of their liberty.

What argument is made in favor of this proceeding? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], when the Army bill was under consideration, said that no nation could long survive that did not protect its trade. Commerce, he said, was the chief purpose of a nation, and that unless it protected and advanced its commerce it must disappear. He cited the League of Cambray, and said that that league was formed by the monarchs of Europe because of jealousy of Venice's growing commercial power. The seeds of Venice's destruction were sown when she abandoned commerce for empire. Venice's greatness as a commercial nation had reached its zenith long before the League of Cambray. Her wealth, won by commerce, had made her feared by the nations of the East, and she had begun the conquest of the islands that belonged to Turkey in the Grecian Sea.

At the battle of Sapienza, in 1499, the Turks destroyed the fleet of Venice, so that 1508, nine years thereafter, when the League of Cambray was formed, it was the design of the league to take from Venice her continental empire. Empire had sown the seeds of destruction for Venice. She had encroached upon the shore of Europe. She had taken state after state from the Pope of Rome. She had marched to the walls of Milan. She had conquered the territory of the Emperor of Austria. When her fleet was destroyed by the all-conquering Turk, Austria and France and the Pope of Rome formed the League of Cambray to strip Venice of her continental territory and take her empire and divide it among themselves; in other words, to reclaim that which they had previously possessed.

The Senator also called attention to the fact that it was the growing commercial importance of Holland that caused Louis XIV to march the armies of France into that country and undertake its subjection, and then he says Louis failed, the commercial importance of Holland continued, and the French Revolution followed.

Mr. President, the seeds of the French Revolution were sown in that unequal distribution of the wealth of France which gave to a few of her people a title to all the property and made slaves of the balance. They were the harvest of unequal opportunities afforded her people and the unequal distribution of wealth. It was not the growing jealousy of Holland or Holland's commercial success that gave the germs of revolution to France.

The causes which brought about the destruction of Venice and precipitated the French Revolution were those tendencies toward empire and plutocracy which have overthrown every free government that has heretofore had a place in the history of the world. The simple question with us is whether we shall follow the course of empire and see this Republic go down in shame and disgrace upon the ruins of free institutions, or whether we shall maintain the political, financial, and social equality without which free government can not long exist.

Mr. President, we claim that we have possessed ourselves of the Philippines that we may do its people good, but it is a matter of history that where the Anglo-Saxon has dominated other races it has been only to plunder them and do them harm. The Anglo-Saxon, when engaged in conquest, is still a savage. His brutal treatment of what he calls the inferior races is marked on every page of the history of our race where he has dealt with the Oriental. We are doing nothing new, I admit, in history. Back as far as history has been written the same pretense has invariably been put forth. Every conqueror declares it to be his purpose to benefit the conquered.

Eight hundred years before Christ Asshurbanipal, King of Assyria, marched into the country of the Elamites, and having conquered that people and killed their king, having burned their homes, filled up their wells, chopped down their trees, and destroyed their gardens, he issued the following proclamation. It has been translated in the last few years from a cylinder found in one of the excavated cities of that country.

The will of the King to the men of the coast, the sea, the sons of my servants. My peace to your hearts. May you be well. I am watching over you, and from the sin of your King, Nabubelzikri, I have separated you. Now I send you my servant, Belibni, to be my deputy over you. I have joined with you, keeping your good and your benefit in my sight.

One would almost think that when the President issued his proclamation to the Filipinos he had plagiarized the proclamation of the Assyrian king of eight centuries ago. Although Asshurbanipal extended the boundaries of Assyria and embraced Chaldea and almost all Asia, he, too, sowed the seeds of destruction as he expanded an empire, and a few years after this we find the Persians, under the lead of the great Cyrus, not only conquering Elam without resistance, but receiving the surrender of the city of Babylon and the lower Euphrates, glad to escape from the dominion of a monarchy which was destroying property and taking people into slavery and had sent a ruler over them under the pretense that he had only their good in his sight.

Mr. President, I do not care to go at length into this subject. Most of this question has been thoroughly discussed and, I think, is pretty generally known to the American people. Although a year ago it was almost impossible to secure information with regard to what we were doing in the Philippines, yet to-day the information has accumulated, coming to us in spite of a censored cable and of every effort to prevent it, until I think we have a fair idea of what is going on in that country.

This legislation is unnecessary, and unnecessary because a state of war exists over the islands to which we have laid claim. There is no peace except where our Army is not. General MacArthur, on the 25th of December, says: "Progress is so slow that it is almost undiscernible."

Mr. President, the war power alone enables us to remain in the domain of the Filipino. You can not set up a civil government in any portion of the Philippine Islands and maintain it for a day without the Army of the United States, and that Army is composed of American soldiers. Military power alone can exist, and that military power, if this legislation passes, will find itself in conflict with every effort at civil authority, which will produce greater disorder than already exists in that country.

Who are the people we are fighting? In December General MacArthur issued his proclamation insisting that the insurgents were not fighting as he wished they would, charging them with breaking the rules of modern war. He declared in that proclamation that he would treat as bandits all those Filipinos who were resisting our authority and did not belong to a regular organization. In other words, he insisted that they should fight us marching in bodies, acting in columns, we with machine guns and they with rifles, and if they did not do it he would treat them as bandits and as brigands. He invoked the laws of modern war. I am going to read the method by which he proceeded to enforce his civilized campaign against the people of that country.

I have here four copies of a paper published in Manila, not one single portion of which, so far as it relates to American occupation, escaped the censor. This paper is called The Progress, and is printed in Spanish, and I have had these dispatches translated. The Progress, on the 8th of December, contained what I shall read. The proclamation invoking the conduct of the war along the line of the rules of modern warfare had been issued previous to this date.

Major Galick four days ago defeated a guerrilla band of 300 revolutionists, causing them heavy losses. This captain, in his way, burned the suburb of Gato, where the Filipinos had their quarters.

They are burning villages and laying waste that country, destroying the homes of women and children. The Progress of the 11th of December says:

Gen. Bohol in the Visceyan Islands was burnt the suburb of Bugrok, in the town of Sierra Bullones, in order to prevent the revolutionists from concealing themselves, which they used to do in the said suburb according denounces. Also was burnt the village of Navas, in the Visceyan Islands, because they found in some houses uniforms of the Filipino army and they were suspicious that in the said village some revolutiony people had their homes.

The Progress of the 12th of December says:

Captain Wilhellin, commanding a force of the First Cavalry and the Eighth Infantry, belongs to the Lipa, Sto. Tomas, and Fananan detachments, attacked 200 revolutionists under Col. Nicolas Gouzales. In this engagement the Filipinos had 4 killed and 5 prisoners, and the Americans 1 killed and 2 wounded. Fifteen houses were burnt, with 10,200 pounds of rice.

The Progress on the 13th of December contains the following:

Lieut. William Blaney, of the Forty-ninth Infantry, commanding a force of 73 soldiers, burnt all the houses of the town of Dolores (in Fayallas province, about 40 miles from Manila). The lieutenant found shells, bombs, and a bayonet there. About 50 riflemen attacked him from some hills across the road, but were defeated without losses. The town of Dolores was a refuge of suspected people.

We have here, then, in four days, from the 8th to the 13th of last December, a sample of our method of waging warfare in that country. In those four days, published in a censored press at Manila, we find that our forces burned 1 whole town, 2 suburbs, a village, and 15 rice houses.

Mr. President, I doubt if Weyler in Cuba or Kitchener in South Africa could furnish humanity with a worse record. I doubt if in four days the operations of these butchers, Kitchener in South Africa and Weyler in Cuba, would make a more infamous record than our Army has made in the Philippines. Can there be any doubt of the truth of this statement? That I think is impossible, for the reason that every paper published in Manila is under strict supervision and are not allowed to publish anything which they think would be in any way detrimental to the interests of our commanding officer. General MacArthur says in this proclamation:

The newspapers and other periodicals of Manila are especially admonished that any article published in the midst of such martial environment which by any construction can be classed as seditious must be regarded as intended to injure the army of occupation, and as subjecting all connected with the publication to such punitive action as may be determined by the undersigned.

4. Men who participate in hostilities without being part of a regularly organized force, and without sharing continuously in its operations, but who do so with intermittent returns to their homes and avocations, divest themselves of the character of soldiers, and, if captured, are not entitled to the privileges of prisoners of war.

In other words, Mr. President, because these people will not stand up in rank and fight us with rifles while we play machine guns upon them, they are to be regarded as bandits. I have related how for four successive days immediately after the issuing of this proclamation we carried on our operations in the Philippine Islands.

Now, Mr. President, these people are not savages, and I read again from the Manila Times. The Times of last December says:

After the engagement it was noticed that there were missing Lieut. G. A. Cooper, Sergeants Fitzgerald and Howe, and six privates—whose bodies could not be found. But on Tuesday at 3 p. m. a body of Filipinos arrived in Siniloan carrying the bodies of the officer, sergeants, and men—an act worthy of the most sincere praise, for in addition thereto we have to chronicle the fact that all had with them the money, jewelry, and other properties belonging to them which they had on their persons in the engagement. Sergeant Howe had with him forty gold dollars, of which not one cent was taken.

In this statement of facts I, a foreigner, and therefore perfectly impartial on the Philippine question, recognize a vein of humanity and other traits of character which is indeed noteworthy. The turning over of the dead to their compatriots is in Europe and all civilized States regarded as an act of humanity calling for commendation, and the additional fact that neither the bearers nor anyone else took their properties—although they could easily have done so—proves conclusively a refined humanity and whole heartedness which is indeed rarely to be met in time of war in any State or under any circumstances.

Then the paper goes on to say:

Since we have briefly mentioned this important point of civic virtue, let us also ponder for a moment over other facts which prove in irrefutable manner the high degree of civilization of this country, which accounts for the generous and noble spirit evinced by the people from time to time. Firstly, then, let us cite certain occurrences in Lipa, Batangas Province, which were recorded at the time by all the papers of Manila. It demonstrates an act of justice worthy the highest praise, and gives evidence of fine culture and rectitude on the part of those who figured prominently in it. We refer to the incident of the seizure and liberation of an American merchant. Undoubtedly, when the Filipino soldiers came upon the American merchant, they took him for a soldier off duty, and therefore detained him. But once the Filipino commander, before whom he was brought, was satisfied that he was a noncombatant he caused him to be handed over to the commander of the nearest American post, with a guard bearing a letter—the contents of which are well known, reminding the United States officer of his duty as a military commander to offer protection for the lives and properties of every subject of his nation, stating in the letter that in future he should not allow any noncombatant to go out the American lines unless accompanied by an armed force for their protection, in order that a recurrence of this incident might be avoided.

Secondly, there should be noted the conduct of the Filipino force which threw a rope to two American soldiers who were drowning in the Pasig River and thereby helped them to save their lives, for they were in imminent danger of drowning when help was thus given them by Filipinos. This shows that in this country there is a code of honor—unwritten, but none the less strictly observed—providing that one's enemies are to be killed only in what is generally regarded as a strictly legal manner, at a moment of deadly combat, which even the women thoroughly understand. Thirdly, let us not forget the beneficent treatment of American prisoners of war held by the Filipinos, treatment which the prisoners themselves have time and again referred to in terms of glowing praise. Lastly, mention may be made of the decrees of Aguinaldo and Lukban, all inspired by motives of the highest order, breathing forth noble sentiments and giving proof of the good will of these great leaders toward all nations, documents, in fact, which have created a very favorable impression on the minds of foreigners resident in this fair Eastern land.

LOUIS CHEVALIEN.

MANILA, September 25, 1900.

Now, Mr. President, in this connection I am going to read about another incident which has occurred in the Philippines.

The following letter was written by Claude Harden:

MANILA, P. I., December 31, 1899.

DEAR GRACE: I received your last letter a few days ago; also the letters of recommendation, which were fine, and ought to be an incentive to greater efforts. It is now nearly 11 o'clock p. m., and I will see the old year out and the new year in while writing to you. It is hard to get much of any facts about the condition of affairs on the firing line and the actual progress of the war. Otis does not allow facts to be published, but we hear a great deal of the truth from discharged soldiers from the lines, who reenlist in our companies for the sake of the $500 bounty.

The real truth seems to be that the rebels are making things disagreeable by carrying on a guerrilla warfare. Occasionally they put up a pretty hot skirmish. Many more are killed and wounded on our side than you ever hear of at home. Six hundred dead were sent home to-day on one boat and nearly every boat takes home some dead and many sick, wounded, and discharged. I haven't a doubt but that we are able to cope with the insurgents, but we will at least have a good deal of respect for their abilities. The fear of an outbreak here in town is quite prevalent. The friars are in sympathy with the insurgents, as has been proven time and again by finding of military stores in their churches. The church across the road from the treasury, where I am on guard to-night, was searched one day and was found to contain a quantity of rifles, ammunition, and a hundred thousand dollars in Spanish gold, which last General Otis is said to have refunded.

On one night there was an outbreak of the niggers and signal lights were flashed in all directions. Our boys turned a Gatling gun on them and put a damper on it. On that night in particular the priests were known to have a hand in the signaling. There is a very strong provost guard in the city now, but it seems to me that the treasury here is a weak spot. I am sitting here now before the door of the treasury storeroom, and can look in and see millions in doby dollars and Spanish gold, all in wooden boxes stacked up as high as the ceiling, and only a couple of little old padlocks between it and the broad highway. It is funny that no man has nerve to come and take away a fortune, with only eight guards and myself to hinder, and most of them asleep. I make a tour of inspection of the locks every half hour, and Captain Wood comes round twice a day to see that things are all O. K.

Sometimes he adds ten or fifteen thousand, at another time he takes out three or four bags or boxes to pay off the workmen. He is the only man allowed inside the vaults. A few days ago three bull-cart loads of doby—pisos dollars—were brought in from the lines, captured from the insurgents. Poor fellows, they are losing all their money, rice, and tobacco, and Uncle Sam is getting it all.

Some of our boys brought in twenty prisoners to-day. They were a sorry-looking lot. Some of them didn't have clothes enough to flag a handcar. Our boys don't generally take any prisoners now if they can help it. What they get they take out in the woods and give them a shovel and let them dig their own graves. It seems terrible, but it is the truth, and in fact, I think, and so do all people here, that is the only way to put down the war. Otis has been bringing all prisoners here for a few days, feeding them up and turning them all loose again only to return to the lines. I think Lawton was killed by some of those very freed prisoners, for the work was done at the waterworks and eight of the boys went with him. Eighteen were killed in a skirmish a few days ago and thirty wounded.

I attended the funeral, which was quite grand.

Wheeler is disgusted with the way things are going and is going home on the Thomas. I suppose soldiers are inclined to be too ready to pass judgment on their superiors and to get impatient, but where there is so much smoke there must be some fire. It is all very strange to me, why things move so slowly.

January 1.—Had a fine New Year's dinner to-day. I am going out on the scene of the first battle of Manila at Malate some day soon. There was firing in that direction last night at midnight, but it did not last long. What the insurgents need most is a good thrashing like Anthony Wayne gave the Indians in the time of the colonies, and there are soldiers enough here to do it. I saw Otis pass the treasury this morning at 7 o'clock, saluting all the niggers that would recognize him. He is getting gray, and seems to put in long hours at the office. I think he works very hard himself, and does not let his generals to do much in the field.

Well, Grace, I guess I have written a lot of stuff that will not interest you much. Yes, I said I would not come home soon, but that was only a bluff to get you to coax me a little. Of course I am coming home as soon as I can. No one, I believe, ever left home with the intention of staying away. No, I am like the cat that came back, for he could not stay away. Well, a happy New Year to you all. Expect you are nearly covered up with snow now, while I can not get a single flake for love nor money, nor a piece of ice hardly, though Uncle Sam is building the largest ice factory in the world here. It is awful hot daytime, but we do not have much drill and get plenty to eat, so I guess we ought to be contented. We are all in good health.

Write soon.

CLAUDE HARDEN.

This is not the letter I desired to read, although it is exceedingly important and interesting. What I more especially want to read is from the Scripps-McRae correspondence, and is as follows:

MANILA, January 1.

The last body we encountered on the trail after we had taken Tilad Pass was that of Gen. Gregoria del Pilar. No one will ever know who killed him. There were two bullet holes, one through the head, the other through the back. He was among the last to leave the trenches, and was probably the last man killed that day.

Pilar was a type of the better class of insurgents, men of heart and education, a true, patriotic, and worthy disciple of the martyred Rizal.

Not satisfied with removing his insignia, silver spurs, and buttons, the ghoulish souvenir seekers rifled his pockets, took the scapula from his neck, then stole his clothing. When the last American passed the body he found it completely stripped. Verily, "they parted his garments among them; and upon his vesture did they cast lots."

When General Concepcion came in from Cayan to Cervantes afterwards, one of the lieutenants of the regiment who relieved him was at that very time wearing the trousers of the dead general. One got his watch, another his pocketbook, another his locket, another a dainty handkerchief bearing the name of his sweetheart, "Dolores Jose." In a diary, which was also found on his person, was a last entry made in pencil, evidently while he was in the trenches:

"I am holding this position against great odds, and fear the consequences. Still I glory in the danger, because I am enduring it for the sake of my beloved country."

He was next to the youngest general in the Filipino army, being but 23 years of age. Tino is the youngest, 21 years of age.

Pilar's body, rifled and dishonored, was buried by Igorrotes, sent back for that purpose. When we recrossed the trail returning to the coast, we found the spot indicated only by an upright sprig of bamboo stuck in the loose earth. No name, much less an epitaph. And the natives told us that when, five days after the fight, a detachment of our Macabebe soldiers passed that way, they jammed their bayonets into the grave with the imprecation, "Insurrecto, mucho Malo." Such was the ignominious end of the only Filipino general ever killed by our troops—and he a hero.

ED L. KEEN.

We propose, Mr. President, to enlist 12,000 of these Macabebes to fight the armed Filipinos. A comparison of those two methods ought to be a sufficient warning to the American people that they want no more of this effort at benevolent assimilation in the Philippines.

I shall ask leave to print without reading notes pertaining to the operations of an American gunboat in the provinces of Samar and Leyte, Visayan Islands. It is another chapter of brutality and barbarity almost unparalleled in the history of the world, only equaled by the operation of the Christian armies at Pekin, in China. I ask permission to print this without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). If there be no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Translation.]

NOTES PERTAINING TO THE OPERATIONS OF AMERICAN GUNBOATS IN THE PROVINCES OF SAMAR AND LEYTE, VISAYAN ISLANDS.

About the middle of last June a small boat came from the town of Caybiran on her way to Carigara, where the owner of the boat had a son to whose wedding he was journeying. His boat was surprised by the American gunboat Samar. When the owner of the small boat, whose name is Bibiano Maderazo, saw the American gunboat, he landed his boat with all its passengers, except a Chinaman, who remained in the boat in order to watch the money and jewels that were in the boat. The American gunboat then came ashore; took the money and jewels from Maderazo's boat. The value of the confiscated articles was $2,500. The Chinaman was thrown into the sea by the American sailors, and Maderazo's boat was burned. The Chinaman was not drowned, being rescued by natives in a canoe.

In the early part of last August the same gunboat, Samar, anchored in Matago Harbor, on the coast of Leyte, where the sailors took a bath within an inclosure of fishing nets owned by a Chinaman, whose residence is in Villa Hermosa. While the sailors were bathing three girls passed along the shore. The sailors took a canoe and went ashore in pursuit of the girls. They ran and escaped from their pursuers. The sailors became angry and went into the house of a Filipino workingman and threatened him, and finally took his only pig and carried it to the gunboat. The workingman then went to the gunboat to complain to the commanding officer. The officer gave him a bag of rice in payment for the pig. The Filipino found that the gunboat was the same boat that had, some days before, attacked a small boat at sea and robbed it of 30 bags of rice and $250 in money and then burned the boat. This was proven by the mark on the bag containing the rice given the Filipino for his pig. We had not previously known who had committed the outrage, as our boat was taken by surprise.

The Samar, a few days before the stealing of the pig, bombarded and burned in the sea a large sailing boat, whose owner was Senor Ciriaco de Lara. The sailboat came from Cebu, and its owner had taken his clearance papers from the American authorities. This gunboat committed many such violations of the rules of civilized nations, characteristic of the African savage.

Some women were imprisoned by some American sailors, and were afterwards assaulted and then abandoned on a small barren island named Kalumpijan, between the islands of Leyte Biliran. Two of the women died on the island and were buried there by some fishermen who accidentally passed that way. A month before, it is said, the sailors of the gunboat committed another offense of the same kind.

In the beginning of this month an American gunboat—it might have been the Samar—or some other gunboat passed through the anchoring grounds of Onakon, near the town of Villareal, and fired on a small ship and captured it. In the ship were five sailors and two women. The former were thrown in the water. The women were assaulted so cruelly that one of them died.

About the same date a sailboat, owned by Primitivo Oliva, was burned by this gunboat, with all her cargo.

On the 23d of last July an American vessel captured another boat near Sumarraga, owned by a Chinaman named Juancho. The boat and cargo of hemp were burned. In the boat was a safe, which was taken by the American vessel. The same thing happened to another boat, the Contento, owned by Mr. Hilario Villafior, which was burned, with her cargo.

This is the system adopted by those who feel themselves obliged to bring freedom and civilization to the Filipino nation.

[SEAL.] LUBAN,

Governor, Civil and Military, Samar.

Full name and title of the governor: "General Viscente Lukban, brigadier-general and governor of Samar and Leyte provinces."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, Mr. President, how about a civil government in that country? Let us see what steps were taken to produce it. I hold in my hand the original document in Spanish, signed by the barbarians whom we are fighting. They do not make their marks; they sign their names. These people are residents of the island of Cebu, about 500 miles from Manila, an island which we say we have completely pacified and given a civil government. I will read the translation from the original Spanish of the following document:

PROTEST.

The undersigned, members of the popular junta (municipal council) of Danao, of this province, declare that they objected to taking the required oath of allegiance to America. They state that for objecting to this they were thrown into prison and were obliged to work in an objectionable and mortifying way from the 9th day of August to the 25th of September. That they refused to take the oath at first because it was contrary to their inner belief, and thus perjury. But after great suffering and illtreatment they were obliged to take the oath under duress. They do not desire to take the oath, because they do not desire to undergo the same treatment as their mayor, Senor Victorino Buot, and the delegate of justice, Felix Batucan, who, having refused to sign, were taken from prison and sent to the capital of this island as prisoners.

Therefore, since the undersigned were forced to take the oath, they protest against the forces employed to compel them to do so and declare that they forswear that oath, which was against their will and honest convictions.

They protest against these acts of violence, which they declare is contrary to all honor and right. They also affirm that they were compelled to leave their town to avoid the acts of violence committed by the soldiers under a despotic American captain stationed in that town.

They sign this document of protest in order to make the facts known.

Done in the town of Danao, September 25, 1900.

VICTORINO TOLEDO,
GREGORIO RAMON,
PASCUAL FIANGCO,
DEMETRIO DURANDO,
TUAN ALMENDRAS,
CATALINO BUOT,
AUGUSTIN FITO,
JOSE LANDO.

Here is the original document, Mr. President, signed by these people, saying that they were arrested and thrown into prison because they refused to swear allegiance to the United States. I want to call your attention to the fact that they composed the municipal council, this town having a government, administering that government, and protecting the lives and the property of the people. Our Army is sent against them under the contemptible plea of benevolent assimilation. It arrests their officers and throws them into prison and puts them at hard labor until they consent to take the oath of allegiance; and then the Taft Commission sends back word that the Filipinos are coming in and taking the oath of allegiance and that the Federal party is growing.

Mr. President, there is no Federal party in the Philippines. A petition signed by 2,000 of the prominent people of Manila has been read in this body protesting against our occupation of that country. In response to that, a telegram was sent and read before us signed by 7 renegades. When our Revolution was at its height there were British sympathizers among our numbers. We had our Benedict Arnolds, and those people have theirs; but they are not so numerous, Mr. President, in the Philippines to-day in proportion to the population as they were in America in 1776.

Here is another protest signed by 32 of our barbarians, containing their original signatures—the original paper. These are the people we are trying to rob of their liberties.

Translation from Spanish of the following document:

The undersigned councilmen and citizens of the town of Danao, in the province of Cebu, assembled in extra session in the town hall—

They have a town hall—on July 29, 1900. The meeting was called to order by Senor Victorino Buot, who took the floor and spoke in substance as follows:

That we have reliable information that the American authorities intend to establish a new municipal régime in all the towns in the province of Cebu until the United States Congress decides upon a definite Philippine policy. In the organization of this new régime the townspeople would be compelled to take an oath of allegiance to America, thus forswearing their previous oath of allegiance made to preserve, protect, and defend the Filipino republican constitution. This last oath, that to the Filipino constitution, was a solemn act, in which God was invoked as a witness; it became thus sacred. To break it would be criminal, especially since the oath expressed their real sentiments. Anyone could not conscientiously forswear it to take a new and directly opposite oath, as if it was an article of merchandise easy to exchange.

The mayor brought these facts before the assembled body in order that they might resolve upon a course that would be to the best interests of the Filipino people. The concurrents, after deliberation, in order to be united in their stand, reached an agreement, as follows:

(1) That we agree entirely with the mayor's aforestated talk, and state that if we appear to be in agreement with the American authorities it is because we are doing so under duress.

(2) That our oath of allegiance to the Filipino constitution was spontaneous and reflected our real sentiments; so, therefore, we can not take any other oath as against our previous one.

(3) That as peaceful citizens we oppose all violence and bloodshed; we submit, but protesting with all the strength of our souls against the enforced oath, and state that it is against our will and honest convictions, and one which our conscience repels. An oath taken under duress is valueless.

(4) That since we, as peaceful people, are opposed to all bloodshed, we obeyed the orders of the American authorities; but it is against our will. The council is in session, but only in appearance, as it is contrary to the wishes of our constituents.

(5) That in our hearts we recognize only the Filipino constitution and the Filipino authorities elected by the people. We declare that we are opposed to all other leaders save the Filipinos, who are striving for the best interests of their people. These authorities are Gen. Arcadio Maxilon, commander in chief of the Cebuan forces, and Gen. Juan Olimaco, second in command and chief of staff. Up to this time we have recognized them. Now we make this recognition in express terms according to the dictates of our consciences and the observance of our oath.

(6) That under the duress of the Americans we will maintain the best order under the present circumstances, that of passive resistance; we will continue to recognize that national Filipino government at heart.

After debate and the ratification of these resolutions the session adjourned, and the councilmen and citizens signed them in the name of their constituents, and the delegate of justice, acting as secretary pro tempore, certified them.

This was signed with 35 signatures; no marks, but the actual signatures of these people, showing that they possess education even in the distant island of Cebu.

Here is a protest from the town of Danao, dated July 20, 1900:

[Translation from the Spanish of the following documents, describing practically identical procedure in three towns of the island of Cebu.]

PROTEST.

In the town of Pilar, dated July 20, 1900:

The undersigned citizens and councilmen of this town assembled in the city hall, called there by the mayor, Señor —— ——. The meeting having been called to order, he submitted the following resolution:

(1) We desire the blessings of happiness and prosperity obtained in liberty, and therefore desire the political and territorial independence of their country.

(2) We desire peace, order, and tranquillity, which are the fundamental principles of prosperity, and for this reason do not accept the implantation of the new municipal régime, which would not be in accord with our wishes. We are forced to take the oath of allegiance, which is most repulsive, not knowing the form of government to be granted them by Congress. Such an oath might be to give allegiance to a most unstable government, one that would cause much discord, one in which peace, order, and tranquillity would be a failure.

(3) We are desirous of a suspension of hostilities and of a reestablishment of peace, order, and tranquillity, but by honorable means. We want a civil government exclusively managed by Filipinos, in order that they could discuss governmental questions and exercise individual rights.

After discussion and ratification the councilmen and citizens signed a paper stating their views, which the delegate of justice, the secretary pro tempore, certified.

This paper contains 13 actual signatures.

A paper almost similar, which I have not had translated, was also adopted at a meeting of the people in the town of Quedela, on July 30, with 17 signatures. Another paper of the same import was adopted at a meeting on July 19, and signed by 14 people of the town of San Francisco.

These are the original documents. I ask unanimous consent to have them printed as a document with the signatures in fac simile.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the printing of certain papers as documents. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. What are they?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The papers I have just read, protests from several towns in the Philippine Islands, signed by the authorities of the town governments, against our effort at civil government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have the originals here of the proceedings of public meetings, signed by the citizens assembled and certified by the secretary and the mayor of the town of 23 towns in the same island of Cebu, which I propose to call the attention of the Senate to hereafter when I may say something on this matter. Perhaps the Senator will have those also included in the same document?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like very much to have them included in the same document with the fac similes of the signatures.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have at home in South Dakota a marriage certificate from the Philippine Islands, which contains the signatures of over a thousand people, and only two of them make their marks. Those are the people we are trying to conquer and deprive of their liberty in spite of the fact that they were our allies and helped us fight Spain.

I can not comprehend how any American Senator can look upon this act of ours as an act of right. I can not understand how, when the facts are known, any Senator of this great Republic can for one day justify the course we are pursuing in those islands.

It seems to me our duty is plain. We ought to say to the Filipinos: "Establish your government. That country belongs to you. Govern it as you have a right to do. Go on with your constitution, which you have already framed, modeled after ours, and we will be your defender; we will say to all the world, 'No one can conquer your country or deprive you of your liberty.'" [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

It seems to me that this Government can build no grander monument to the men who fell in the Spanish war than to grant liberty to the people whom we freed from Spanish dominion. How can we look with love and affection upon our flag returning home stained by the crimes we are committing in the Philippines? What man can gain glory by fighting in those distant islands to rob people who worship the same God we worship of their love of liberty and their desire to govern themselves? [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

I hope, Mr. President, that this Administration may see the infamy of its course and turn back upon a policy which has already covered our flag and our nation with shame and with disgrace and must end in covering us with an infamy never before acquired since history commenced by any despot, much less by any people who pretend to love liberty.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. MALLORY. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Deboe,	Kenney,	Proctor,
Allison,	Depew,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Bacon,	Dillingham,	Lodge,	Rawlins,
Bard,	Dolliver,	McCumber,	Scott,

Caffery,	Frye,	Martin,	Stewart,
Carter,	Hale,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Money,	Teller,
Chilton,	Harris,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hawley,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Clay,	Heitfeld,	Perkins,	Turley,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Culberson,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.	Wellington,
Cullom,	Kean,	Pritchard,	Wetmore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-eight Senators have responded to their names on the call of the roll. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, on account of the impatience of the Senate that there should be a vote upon the pending amendment, of course there is naturally some reluctance on my part to occupy the attention of the Senate at this time; but appreciating as I do the gravity of the question upon which we are to pass, I shall not regret the fact that I have the opportunity at this time to raise my voice, however feeble it may be, in opposition to the proposed measure.

Mr. President, I regard the amendment which has been proposed with reference to the Philippine Islands as the most pernicious and objectionable piece of legislation which has been proposed since I have had any connection with the American Congress. I do not think I am extravagant when I say that, so far as I have any familiarity with measures prior to that time, this is the most prenicious, the most vicious, and in its baleful influence the most far-reaching measure which has ever been proposed in the American Congress, certainly within the past thirty years. I say that because, in my estimate upon its influence upon the free institutions of this country, it is utterly revolutionary in its character.

I desire to say for myself—and I am satisfied that I reflect the sentiments of others—that there are no possible circumstances under which I would vote for the proposed measure. I want to say further that there is no bill to which this measure could be attached the enactment of which I would deem of sufficient importance to secure my vote for its passage. I will say further, Mr. President, that there is no measure in this Congress, and no measure of which I could conceive, which I would save from loss by voting for this amendment as the price of it. There is no pending measure so bad that I would secure its defeat by voting for this amendment; there is no pending measure so good that I would secure its passage by voting for this amendment.

Mr. President, the free institutions of this country and the constitutional principles upon which those institutions are based are not to be weighed in the balance against dollars. I am known to be opposed most earnestly to the ship-subsidy bill. I believe it to be wrong in principle; I believe the details of the bill, outside of the question of principle, are indefensible; but I would infinitely prefer to see the ship-subsidy bill pass rather than to see this amendment adopted. I would rather see ten ship-subsidy bills pass than this bill with this Philippine amendment ingrafted upon it; and I do not know of a measure that is pending in Congress to-day or that has ever been before Congress within the last thirty years that I would not rather see become the law than this amendment.

I know from the utterances of the public press that the idea has been given out that Senators on this side of the Chamber have been reconciled in a measure to the passage of this amendment; that their eyes have been dazzled with the benefits to come to them if they will lie down, and that the idea is given out that while they would vote against the bill, they are in fact no longer opposed to it. There never was a greater injustice done, and if there is any way that any Senator can suggest by which we can permanently defeat this measure, we are ready to pursue that way.

It is a mistake to suppose that the fear of an extra session can deter us in this matter. If an extra session could be had without the fear or the probability of the passage of the bill, that, so far from being a deterrent, would be an invitation to us. An extra session has no terrors for me. I want my convenience and my comfort, I presume, as other Senators do; but I would be willing to stay here, not simply in the short term of an extra session, but during the entire vacation until December next, if by so doing it were possible that the permanent defeat of this measure could be accomplished.

I desire to say for myself right here, although it is a little out of the particular matter in hand, that I think there ought to be an extra session. I think there ought to be an extra session, if for nothing else that we might consider the Chinese matter. I do not think it is any credit to the Congress of the United States that in the grave situation by which we are confronted there has been no word from Congress about the Chinese situation. I think it no credit to the majority in this House and in the other House, which has the power of legislation, which has the power to give official utterance, that in a condition so startling and so abnormal, and, I think, so illegal, as that which now exists in China, so far as the American Government is concerned, there has been no utterance.

Can there be any question about the fact that the American Government has been at war with China? Can there be any question about the fact that there is a condition of war there to-day? And is the American Congress to adjourn, is the Congress to expire, in the face of the fact that, with the power given to it, and exclusively to it, to declare war, war has existed in China, and not a word said by the American Congress relative to what has occurred, relative to the present conditions, and relative to what is to occur in the next nine months?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. With great pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator think that any war exists to-day between the United States and China?

Mr. BACON. I do, most undoubtedly; and I will proceed to give the Senator my reasons why I so think.

What constitutes war, Mr. President? Is it war to invade a foreign country with several thousand men under the command of a major-general and to remain with that invading army in hostile occupation of that country for nearly a year, after having fought battles and subjugated the armed forces of the country? Is it in the prosecution of war to issue to the Quartermaster's and Commissary's and Ordnance Departments orders for a year's supplies for the support and maintenance and the arming and equipping of that army in a foreign country, with special reference to the needs of the army in that foreign country and with the expressed design that they are to be used by that army in that foreign country? Is not this the recognition of the beginning of a regular war expected to extend through a protracted campaign? Is it war to maintain that army there for six or eight months in the attitude of a hostile invading army, and for it still to be there in that attitude with no present prospect for its withdrawal? While the armies of European governments are there in the undisguised prosecution of war in that country, is it war on the part of the United States when its army is there in practical cooperation with those armies in enforcing by violence compliance with punitive demands?

Is it war for the accredited representative of the United States, supported by the presence of the army of the United States, to sit in concert with the representatives of the European powers, to pronounce judgment, and to utter and announce an ultimatum to the Chinese Government, and say to it, "You must do so and so?" Is it war to have that tribunal surrounded by armed forces, and, among others, by the forces of the American Government, and to say to the Chinese Government, "You must comply with what we pronounce to be the judgment against you, or here stands an army ready to slay your people and ravage and desolate your country?" Is that war? If not, what is war?

Mr. President, I had occasion to allude to this point a few days ago, and I do not want to be misunderstood as to my position in reference to this matter. I had no intention to go into it now; but I will do so, as Senators invite it.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the honorable Senator if he thinks this country made war upon the Barbary States when Decatur rescued our sailors and prisoners?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator had postponed his question for a few moments I was coming to that direct point. I was saying, when interrupted, that a few days ago I had occasion to allude to this very question, and that I said then that I thought the President did right to rescue our minister and those who were associated with him; that, in other words, even if that involved the invasion of the country, there was an emergency upon him which did not permit him to wait to call Congress together, and that, therefore, he did right to proceed actively and promptly to effect that rescue.

I went further and said that if he had failed to do it he would have failed in his duty. But I said that when in the performance of that duty a condition was developed which was really war, while it was his duty to act in the emergency, it was, in my judgment, equally his duty to summon Congress immediately together to lay before them the facts in connection with the emergency that had led him to take action which really involved the country in war.

Mr. HOAR. That does not answer my question.

Mr. BACON. Very well, I am going on to answer it. When the action was taken to which the Senator alludes, it was accomplished just as the rescue of our minister in China was accomplished, but there was not a continuing condition which constituted in fact a continuing condition of war. In this instance there is a continuing condition of war in China.

I am not speaking of the original act necessary to effect the rescue. I am speaking of that condition of war which has resulted since. I am speaking of the condition of war which has continued since the rescue. I am discussing this simply in connection with the statement I make that so far from being alarmed by any prospect of an extra session it is proper that we should have an extra session of Congress in order that Congress, in the exercise of its constitutional functions, may give attention to our affairs in China.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me?

Mr. BACON. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to call his attention to my precise question. I am very glad to hear what the Senator has said, but my question was not whether the President did right in rescuing the Barbary prisoners and putting an end to the Barbary piracies, or whether lately the President did right in rescuing Mr. Conger. My question was whether, in the judgment of the Senator, what he did was war.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly, technically considered——

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me until I answer his question.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BACON. I was proceeding to say that undoubtedly, technically considered, the invasion of a country, the firing upon any fort, or upon any city, or upon any part of the territory of a foreign nation, is an act of war; but it frequently occurs that the Executive, in an emergency, is compelled to do that.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Then it is the opinion of the Senator, which is what I wanted to get at, that the President of the United States under some circumstances has done right in making what is technical war.

Mr. BACON. I thought the President did right in this particular instance.

Mr. HOAR. That was war.

Mr. BACON. I say he did right in this particular instance because it grows out of the necessities of the case. With our minister beleaguered in Pekin and with the lives of all those who were there associated with him in imminent jeopardy, certainly the President did not have time to assemble Congress before acting. But whenever it became necessary under the emergency to do a certain thing which involved a condition of war, then it was the proper time to see that Congress was assembled for the purpose of dealing with the question.

So far from that being the case, the time was permitted to lapse until the regular session of Congress. Congress has been in session for nearly three months and Congress itself has done nothing on the subject, has made no utterance on the subject, and we are about to adjourn upon the expiration of the Congress with a condition of war in China, with the actual fact, as stated by the papers this morning, that yesterday, as a result of that war, there has absolutely been, under a judgment pronounced by a board of ministers of which our minister was one, the execution of subjects of China under the demand of those foreign powers—an execution attended and guarded by troops of which American troops formed a part. It is no answer to say it was a just judgment. It may have been a just judgment. I am not prepared to say but that it was a just judgment if they were the guilty parties. I know nothing about the facts. But that is not the question.

A murderer may be shot by some one, and he may be a red-handed murderer deserving of death, and yet the law does not give the other man the power to execute the sentence. Neither does the law give to the Executive the power to adjudge or to execute the sentence in this case. If it was an incident of war Congress alone can declare war. If it was the result of a treaty, no treaty can be concluded and carried into execution without the concurrence of the Senate. For this war to be thus conducted without the participation of Congress, and for it to be continued without a word from Congress and with the practical acquiescence of Congress is another advance in the policy of imperialism which is surely revolutionizing the institutions of this country.

But I have been led off. I was discussing the question as to the attitude which we bore to this proposed amendment with reference to the Philippine Islands. I was presenting the fact that there is no possible consideration, either as to the defeat of any bill or as to the salvation of any bill, which could secure from this side of the Chamber a support of the Philippine amendment. I went further, and said that the threat of an extra session was not sufficient for that purpose, and then, speaking for myself, I went on to say that, so far from it having any terrors for me, I thought there ought to be an extra session.

There must be something very extraordinary in this bill—I speak of it as a bill because it was originally a bill, and when I speak of the bill of course everybody will understand I mean the original Spooner bill, which has now been put as an amendment on the appropriation bill—there must be something very extraordinary about this bill and about the influences which are behind it to press it to a passage, to present the most extraordinary condition with which we are confronted. There seems to have been some sudden influence developed. This bill was originally introduced on the 11th day of January, 1900. I regret very much that the distinguished author of the bill [Mr. SPOONER] is not present in the Chamber. I regret also that the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines [Mr. LODGE] is not present. This bill, as I say, was introduced on the 11th day of January, 1900; referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and in March reported back without amendment, with a recommendation that it should pass. I have here a copy of the bill. Without reading the title, I will read the bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That when all insurrection against the sovereignty and authority of the United States in the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, shall have been completely suppressed by the military and naval forces of the United States, all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the said islands shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

The amendment which it is proposed to put upon the Army appropriation bill is the same as that bill, with two variations. One is that it makes the law immediately applicable rather than postponing it until the end of the hostilities in those islands. The other is a provision in reference to the time when franchises shall continue to exist which may be granted under the government to be organized under that bill. So that so far as the substantial features of the bill and the amendment are concerned they are practically the same.

Mr. President, that bill, introduced in January, 1900, was made, when it was reported or soon after it was reported by the Philippines Committee, the regular order of business in the Senate, and from day to day it was laid aside at the instance of its friends and advocates. In June, when it was still the regular order, the Republicans, not only in this body but in the House, decided upon an adjournment of the session when it was entirely within their power to pass the bill. When we assembled in December the bill was still the regular order in the Senate. It was then laid aside without ceremony, and so far as could be judged by the actions of its friends it was intended to be put to final sleep.

I again express the regret that Senators who are responsible for the authorship of this bill and for its having been urged upon the Senate are not present, because I desire to say something in which they may be interested. This is the most far-reaching bill, I repeat, that has ever been proposed in the American Congress. It is a proposition that the government of ten or twelve million people shall be turned over to the unlimited, unbridled, uncontrolled, ultimate power of one man, and that in this Government professing republican institutions and acknowledging allegiance to constitutional restrictions and limitations.

Mr. President, I am coming to the important statement which I wish the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] were present to hear, and that statement is this: With this far-reaching bill, this revolutionary bill, this bill absolutely destructive of every principle upon which our Government rests, with this bill without a precedent, this bill without a line in our laws or in our history which would justify it—with such a bill there has never been in the Senate one line or one sentence uttered in its advocacy or in its defense. I appeal to the RECORD—for every word uttered here is taken down—when I say there has never been in the Senate, from the 11th day of January, 1900, to the present day, a single sentence uttered in advocacy or in justification or in defense of the bill.

Mr. President, when the bill was reported from the Committee on the Philippines the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made an elaborate speech in professed advocacy of it. It was a finished essay. It was faultless in its rhetoric. It was by his own request, then made in the Senate, carefully guarded from interruption during its delivery, in order that its symmetry might not be marred. But whatever other argument there might have been in that speech, the argument in advocacy and in defense of the particular measure was conspicuous by its utter absence.

I do not mean to say that the Senator failed to make a good argument in its defense. I mean to say that he attempted none in its defense. Here was a great proposition to set up civil government over ten or twelve million people, and not only to confide that government, but the question of what that government should be, to one man—certainly the gravest proposition which can ever be announced in a free government—and yet in a long speech, a most carefully prepared speech, a written speech, I repeat, the Senator from Massachusetts made no effort to defend the monstrosity of that proposition.

If I were speaking of the speech of the junior Senator from Massachusetts under circumstances where it was difficult to ascertain whether or not I represented him correctly, the direct and positive character of my assertions might be open to legitimate criticism; but there it is in the RECORD, to be read by anyone. Let anyone read that speech and say whether or not there is in it any discussion of the propriety of this proposed legislation or the propriety of the passage of the bill which had been reported by the Committee on the Philippines, of which the junior Senator from Massachusetts is chairman.

But, Mr. President, there is in the history of this proposed legislation a more remarkable thing than that. It is a much more remarkable thing that the learned Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the author of the bill, a distinguished lawyer, a seasoned debater, than whom there is no superior in this Chamber, and few, if any, elsewhere, should have made a speech of three days in the Senate, nominally upon the bill—a most carefully prepared speech, an able speech, a most interesting speech, an earnest speech—and that he should not have uttered a single line in that speech in justification or advocacy of that bill. He discussed the Philippine question. He discussed the question of our relations with the Filipino people. He discussed at some length our obligations or want of obligations to Aguinaldo. But on the question whether or not it was proper that the United States Government should pass a bill conferring upon the President of the United States absolute, unlimited, unrestrained power not only to make but to administer a government for 12,000,000 people, not a line is be found in his speech.

Mr. President, that is not all. We have been here for several days discussing this question. We have endeavored to show that this is not a proper bill to be passed, and not a word has been said on the other side of the Chamber in justification or in advocacy of it. This proposition of this enormity, this proposition so utterly revolutionary in its character, this proposition in its destructive influence so far-reaching in its character, has had on the other side of the Chamber no advocate, no defender, no justifier. We have endeavored to show to the Republican who proposed this measure that it is unconstitutional. We have submitted arguments here which are worthy of consideration. There has been no reply.

Mr. TILLMAN. Because there can be none.

Mr. BACON. The Senators on the other side have practically admitted that it is unconstitutional. As suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, they can not make any reply. The Senators on the other side of the Chamber say by their attitudes, "We admit it is unconstitutional, but what care we? What care we that it is unconstitutional? We have the votes to pass it. We are ready to pass it, if it is unconstitutional." Is that the attitude of Senators?

Not only have arguments been made here, but those arguments have been based upon and buttressed by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and still no word of reply from the Republican party, still nothing but a smile. "We care nothing for the Constitution of the United States. We admit that this measure is unconstitutional, but we have the votes and we intend to pass it, regardless of the fact that we can not deny that it is unconstitutional."

Now, Mr. President, we not only say to the Republicans in this Chamber that it is an unconstitutional bill, we not only prove it, they not only admit it, they not only say "We care nothing whether it is unconstitutional or not, so we have the votes to pass it," but we go further in the effort to evoke a reply, while that of itself ought to be sufficient to bring to their feet in this Chamber those who have sworn to support the Constitution of the United States and who could not take their seats in this body unless they had sworn to support it. We say to them that this imposition of this absolute government upon this helpless people is a great wrong. They reply not, and by their silence admit it and say they care not.

We say to them, as I say to them now, that to establish by act of Congress an absolute government within the jurisdiction of the United States in which every principle of free government is trampled under foot, is dangerous in its influence at home to the fundamental principles of free institutions and of personal liberty upon which our Government is based; that in its influence it is destructive of these free institutions; and the Republicans in this Chamber still are dumb. They admit it all and say, "It matters not; we care not for such things; we have the votes and we will establish this absolute, this imperial government regardless of all this."

Mr. President, is it not the most startling statement that ever was made in a deliberative body, especially in such a body as the United States Senate, that with a measure pending for over twelve months of so radical and so far-reaching a character there never has been found one man to stand in the Senate of the United States and to advocate it or to justify it? There has not been one.

Mr. President, in this great body, this high arena, devoted heretofore to high debate, where it has been understood that Senators were controlled by principle, where every man was ready to give a reason for the faith that was in him, where no man was ready to admit that he dared not advocate and defend in debate any measure to which he gave his support, has it come to this that at this time, in the presence of the greatest question, in its influence and in the power which it challenges the most far-reaching question, the one which is most liable to affect most radically the future of this country, Senators who favor the proposition here sit silent and absolutely dumb?

The Senators who are chiefly responsible for it absent themselves from the Chamber and say, "It matters not what may be right or what may be wrong, we have determined upon our course, and without attempting to justify it, without attempting to defend it, we refuse to discuss it; we plant ourselves upon the fact that we have the votes and care not whether it be right or wrong, whether it be constitutional or unconstitutional, we will ruthlessly put it through to the end that we desire."

Mr. President, if the Senators on the other side wish, let this debate close without any answer from them. We denounce this bill as unconstitutional. We say it absolutely violates every fundamental principle of this Government. We denounce it as at war with all the free institutions of this country. We denounce it as utterly subversive of the principles upon which this Government is based.

Sit silent if you will, utter no word of defense, and go before the American people with the statement that you care not whether it be right or wrong; that you have the votes and that you do not feel bound by a constitutional obligation; that you do not feel bound by any loyalty to the free institutions in this country; you owe no debt of loyalty to the fundamental principles of this Government; you will do what you think your party interest requires, regardless of constitutional obligation or of any obligation for the preservation of the great principles and the free institutions to which we have all acknowledged loyalty for more than a hundred years.

Now, Mr. President, I put it whether or not this is a remarkable position in which the advocates of this measure have placed themselves. I repeat it, and I challenge the contradiction, that since the 11th day of January, 1900, when this measure was first proposed to the American Senate, there has been no word uttered in defense of it, and we stand here and challenge them; we dare them to its defense.

Mr. President, it has come to be a sad day in the institutions of this country that in this high arena a proposition in its influence so far-reaching in its character can be challenged on the ground that it is unconstitutional and that those who should be the defenders of it, those who should be the advocates of it, the promoters of it, dare not answer the challenge, and that they proceed in the brute force of numerical majority to enact that which they can not defend in debate.

When we take into consideration the character of this proposition, the radical and ultra features of the proposition, when we take into consideration the further fact that in fourteen months there is no advocate of it who has ever had the face to stand up in the American Senate or advocate it or utter a single word in its defense, there is in this connection a most remarkable exhibition of the very radical and drastic methods which are adopted for the purpose of coercing its passage through the American Senate.

Am I using too strong a word when I say coercion? For what purpose was it put upon an appropriation bill in the closing days of the Congress, not simply of the session but of the Congress; for what purpose was it put upon the great Army appropriation bill known to be necessary for the support of our troops in the field, but for the purpose of coercing its passage?

They not only put it upon the appropriation bill in order that that which was admitted by them to be an unconstitutional measure, one they dared not attempt to defend, might be forced through the Senate, but they put it upon the bill in utter violation of the rules of the Senate. There is not a single Senator on the Republican side of the Chamber but what knows and will say, if he makes a candid answer, that it was in violation of the rule.

Mr. President, there are some things in the rules which may have some latitude of doubt. A question of relevancy, for instance, may be a question somewhat in doubt, and men might honestly differ as to whether the matter was relevant or not. It is for that reason that this part of the rule provides that upon the question of the relevancy of an amendment the Chair shall not undertake to decide it, but he shall submit it to the Senate. But, Mr. President, it was not on a question of relevancy. It was on a question that the rule imposes the duty upon the Chair to decide.

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

That is the rule, and that is all of it, which related to this matter. It was not a question of relevancy, I repeat, and I challenge reply when I say there was not a single Senator who voted to put that upon the appropriation bill but who knew when he voted for it that it was in violation of the rule.

The present distinguished occupant of the chair [Mr. FRYE], realizing the fact that, occupying the chair, he should not violate a rule, although it is his custom to vote upon all questions, declined to vote on that, because the occupant of the chair, clothed, as he is, with the obligation and duty to correctly administer the laws and rules in this high office, was unwilling to put himself in the position of saying that this was in accordance with the rule. He knew it was not in accordance with the rule. Every Senator who voted to put this amendment upon the bill knew at the time that it was in violation of the rule. If I am incorrect, I challenge any Senator to stand up on the other side and say that when he voted to put it upon the bill he believed it was in order under the rule.

Mr. President, none of them is going to say it—not one of them. There is no Senator on the other side who would stultify himself by saying it. There is no Senator on the other side who would write himself down an ignoramus by saying he believed it to be in order. It was a plain, direct, distinct, undeniable violation of the rule.

I say, Mr. President, with this far-reaching proposition, charged to be unconstitutional and nobody to deny it, charged to be subversive of the free institutions of this country and nobody to deny it, charged to be a violation of the fundamental principles upon which this Government is based and nobody to deny it, with no Senator daring to defend it in debate on these or any other grounds, it is a most remarkable thing that such a proposition should not only be presented and urged in the American Senate, but that it should be done so in utter violation of the rules of this body, and in the confessed violation of them.

Mr. President, there must be some tremendous influence behind a proposition which can command the support of Senators under such circumstances. It is not only a tremendous influence, but it is an influence of very sudden development. It is another illustration of the fact that, so far as concers the Republican party in general, there are influences outside of the Senate that are more potent than the influences inside of the Senate, and that Senators, speaking generally, are ready to abandon their own views and forsake their own policies to obey the command of others outside of the Senate.

Now, why do I say that? I might allude to other measures, because there are other measures which illustrate this proposition very strongly, but I will confine myself to this particular measure. Mr. President, when this measure was lying for twelve months, from the 11th day of January, 1900, until after the 11th day of January, 1901, and there was no sudden active influence to urge it upon this body and to endeavor to secure its passage in this body, why was it that after so long a lapse of time there should suddenly arise this prompt and eager and peremptory demand for its passage?

For whose benefit is it, I would ask the Republican Senators who do me the honor to be present? For whose benefit is it? Is it for the benefit of the Filipino people? Why, Mr. President, we had in this very year from the distinguished author of this amendment a statement of the method which he thought ought to be adopted in case we were endeavoring to legislate for the benefit of the Filipino people, and what he then said was a sufficient explanation of the fact that he had not advocated his own measure, a sufficient explanation of the fact that he has made no speech in justification of it, a sufficient explanation of the fact that he had not endeavored to present or to press it to a passage—a sufficient indication that in its introduction he had some other motive than its passage.

What he said upon that occasion, which I am going to read, is a sufficient explanation of the fact that when we met in December he permitted that bill to be displaced and another to take its place, because the words uttered by him on the 18th day of January in this year indicated that he thought that that bill would be utterly ineffective to accomplish anything for the good of the Filipino people.

This amendment, Mr. President, does not propose to accomplish anything for the benefit of the Filipino people, and the words of the distinguished and honorable Senator from Wisconsin, which I am going to read, show that he did not understand that we were in a condition to legislate for the benefit of the Filipino people. He thought it was necessary for us to do something else before we would be in a position to legislate for the benefit of the Filipinos. Now, what were those words? I read from the third volume of the Congressional Record of this session, on page 1291, from a colloquy between the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. Without going back in the colloquy, I will begin at the remark of the Senator from Wisconsin replying to a remark of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all. We have, no doubt, the power to pass the amendments. I think we have the power to pass any law that does not violate the social compact in relation to the Philippines. I stated directly to the contrary of what the Senator from Colorado supposed. But up to this time the responsibility of government there is left to the President. The source of that power need not be discussed. When Congress begins to legislate for the Philippines, to occupy that field which it may at any moment under the Constitution absorb, as I stated before, I think we ought to be prepared to legislate to a greater extent than is proposed by these amendments.

I will remark here that this colloquy grew out of the debate upon the proposition to regulate the liquor traffic in those islands.

We ought to be prepared to provide some sort of a government for the Philippine Archipelago. We are not prepared to do that now. I hope we will be some time.

Mr. TELLER. When?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator can answer that question as easily as he can ask it, perhaps. I can not. I can not undertake to say when we will be ready to legislate for the Philippines. I should say that we will not be ready to legislate for the Philippines until we shall have sent a joint committee from both Houses over there to investigate thoroughly the situation there, the people, the form of government which would be adapted to them. That we have not done.

And we have not done it yet, and yet we are proposing to legislate.

Mr. TELLER. Are we likely to do it?

Mr. SPOONER. I hope we will do it.

Mr. TELLER. When?

Mr. SPOONER. I hope we will provide for it before this session comes to an end.

Mr. TELLER. I see no signs of it.

Mr. SPOONER. I have intended to propose a resolution of that kind, and I shall endeavor to do so.

Mr. HALE. It ought to be done.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course it ought to be done. Congress ought to know the exact situation in the Philippines in every aspect, and it seems to me to be one of the first duties of Congress to provide itself with information upon which can be adopted a reasonable and sensible legislative policy of some kind as to government in the Philippines.

Mr. President——

This is the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], continuing:

Mr. President, above all other things we want to win the confidence and friendship of the Filipinos. We want to show to them that our purpose is in their interest; that it is a kindly purpose; that we propose to treat them certainly as we treat other portions of the territory under the sovereignty of the United States. I do not think the first legislation by Congress ought to be discriminatory legislation or legislation which deals simply with the habits of the 10,000,000 people in the archipelago.

Mr. President, a change has come over the views of the Senator from Wisconsin. That was less than two months ago when he said we ought not to legislate for the Filipinos until we had investigated as to the character and habits and needs and requirements of the Filipinos; it was less than two months ago when he said there ought to be no discriminatory legislation, but that we ought to legislate for them as we did as to all other people subject to the jurisdiction of the United States Government.

Mr. President, we know the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. He is not a fickle man; he is not a man who comes to hasty conclusions, but yet he has utterly changed in his view of the bill which he had allowed to slumber, and in support and advocacy of which to this day he has never uttered a word. He has heard it attacked; he has heard it denounced, and there has been not a word either in its advocacy or its defense from him. And yet the distinguished Senator thus expressing his views as to our duty has all of a sudden awaked to the fact that it is not true that we ought to know about the Filipinos before we legislate for them; that it is not true that there ought to be no discriminatory legislation; that it is not true that we ought to legislate for them as we did for Alaska or for Porto Rico or for Hawaii, but that we should discriminate against them; that we should pass a law for the government of those islands which not only has no precedent under our free government, but a parallel to which can not be found on the statute book of a civilized nation in the world.

Now, Mr. President, in all sincerity, I am a great friend and admirer of the Senator from Wisconsin, and what I say as to this change which has overtaken him is not for the purpose of disparaging him. There is no man in this Chamber for whom I have a higher personal regard; there is no man in this Chamber for whose intellectual power I have a greater admiration; there is no man in this Chamber whom I consider his superior, if his equal, as a lawyer and as a debater, and there is no man in this Chamber or out of it whom I would be less apt to voluntarily disparage or offend in any manner whatsoever.

But, Mr. President, I want to present to the Senate and to the American people the remarkable fact that there has been some overpowering influence to control the Senator from Wisconsin in an utter reversal of his attitude and to control the Republicans in the Senate to make them, with scarcely an exception, follow him without a word, and that in the absence of any defense by him of his proposition and with none of them to volunteer to do that which he omits to do. I say, Mr. President, it must be a most remarkable influence which can bring about a result so remarkable.

Mr. President, do we not need information about the Filipinos before we proceed to legislate about them? Does anybody believe that we know the conditions there? Does anybody believe that the censored reports which come from there tell us the truth? Does anybody fail to know that only those things which are favorable are allowed to come through? If anybody doubts it, I see in that press gallery now men who have been on duty in the Philippines as representatives of the press, men who are prepared to tell you, if you want to learn, as to what kind of reports are allowed to come from those islands. Do you want to know the truth? Form your committee, and you shall know the names of the men. They will tell you, Mr. President, not only that the truth has been suppressed and that they were not permitted to tell the truth, but that they were required to give partial and rose-colored accounts of occurrences there which would be pleasing to the American people.

Does anybody think for a minute that the American Congress is in possession of the facts which would enable them to correctly legislate as to the Philippine Islands? The Senator from Wisconsin said that it would be grossly improper for us to attempt to legislate, and he gave as a reason why he opposed any attempt at legislation, even of a partial character, that it was improper to attempt to legislate until we acquired the information through a regularly constituted committee of this body and of the other House.

Now, under whip and spur, and with the added speed of wings, lest some should pursue your lingering, you are rushing through this measure, and coercing the American Senate to pass it in an unusual way—a measure which its friends are afraid to discuss, and which they have never dared to attempt to defend or to justify.

Mr. President, what is that influence? It has come very suddenly. It is potent. There is no doubt about that. It is powerful; it is peremptory; it admits of no denial. What is it? I am not going to suggest; I am not going to guess at what it is; but I am going to see if I can not find it in the records which have been sent to us from the executive department.

As I have endeavored to show, it certainly is not in the interest of the Filipino people. It is not to their interest, because, confessedly on that side of the Chamber, we are not in a position to legislate properly for their benefit. But there has been a new light; there has been a new demand.

Mr. President, I want to say, before proceeding further, that this is not only a most pernicious piece of legislation proposed, a most vicious one, a piece of legislation utterly revolutionary, a piece of legislation in its influence and in its necessary tendency utterly destructive of our free institutions, but as it is at present constituted, a very unnecessary piece of legislation, so far as relates to the necessities of government in the Philippines, because the President under the war power now has the power to establish the civil government there that may be necessary for the temporary civil control required there. But to have Congress establish an absolute civil government there in the person of the President, while not necessary for the control of the Philippines, is necessary for the private interests of the exploiters.

The demand for the establishment of this absolute civil government is not to be judged by the present status of the measure as it has been amended, but by the original amendment as it came here and by the influences which brought it here. What was it? Up to the 18th of January, as I say—perhaps later, but there is the official RECORD of that date—there was the pronounced judgment of the author of this bill (now converted into this amendment) that this bill ought not to be pressed at that time. There was the statement made that we were not prepared to legislate for the Philippine Islands, and now here is an active, ardent demand that there shall be legislation.

What produced it? It had its origin in the Taft communication to the Secretary of War, in which the Secretary of War quotes that communication, stating that the necessity for the passage of the Spooner bill, which had slumbered for more than a year, grew out of the fact that there was a very large amount of public land there which could not be sold, that there were mines upon which claims could not be established, and franchises which could not be granted unless the Spooner bill was passed. That, Mr. President, no man can deny is at the bottom of this whole thing. Other considerations have doubtless been presented to Senators to induce them to move in this matter; but the influence which has originated this movement, and which has commanded the almost unanimous support of the Republican side of this Chamber, is the influence which was inspired by the interests and demands of the exploiters.

We admire the discipline of the Republican party in this Chamber, a discipline which brings them into serried ranks—unbroken ranks—whenever the outside influence demands as a party measure that they shall put through any piece of legislation. Can it be possible that all the Senators on the other side of the Chamber should all at once suddenly have melted into a homogeneous consensus of opinion as to this legislation, or is it the fact that, in response to party behests, they are ready to surrender individual judgment, to conform to the judgment of certain outside influences, and to comply with party behests, never mind how grave may be the proposition, regardless of the fact whether it meets with their individual indorsement and approval or not?

In this communication of Judge Taft to the Secretary of War he discloses the purpose. He says:

> Sale of public lands and allowance of mining claims impossible until Spooner bill. Hundreds of American miners on ground awaiting law to perfect claims. More coming.

There is the influence. It is that in those islands, with those natives unable to protect themselves, there are rich spoils, and that there are persons, not content that the American people as a nation shall be enriched by the conquest, but who propose to gorge themselves individually with the spoils. The Taft commission, sent over there as the representatives of the President with the idea that they would endeavor to conserve the interests of all the American people, allow themselves, inadvertently doubtless, to become the tools and instruments of speculators and plunderers who seek, like ravenous vultures, to prey upon a prostrate land.

That is what these exploiters propose; that is what they desire; and that has been the source from which has come this demand to which the Republicans in the Senate have so speedily responded. Oh! it is a rich prey, according to Taft—a rich prey. Let me show you what the Secretary of War says that Mr. Taft has reported:

> The report shows that the islands are estimated to contain about 73,000,000 acres of land, of which less than 5,000,000 are held in private ownership, leaving in public lands over 68,000,000 acres.

That is an extract from Taft's report, and then, continuing to state the substance of the report, the Secretary of War says:

> This land is for the most part exceedingly fertile, well watered, adapted to the raising of a great variety of useful crops, much of it covered by the most valuable timber, with extensive deposits of gold, of copper, of high-grade iron, and of excellent coal.

Ah! Mr. President, there is a rich quarry. I am not speaking of the present status of this bill, because it has been amended in a way which, if it passes here, will deprive these vultures of much of the prey; but I am speaking of the purpose which was had by those outsiders who inaugurated this legislation and who have commanded, I repeat, its support by the Republican party in this Chamber.

What did the Taft commission mean when they reported that to the Secretary of War? What did they mean, except that these vultures, these exploiters, these plunderers, should get this 68,000,000 acres of land; these rich gold fields, these rich deposits of coal, and copper, and iron, these fertile lands?

That is what it meant, Mr. President, and that it is which through its indirect influence has produced this sudden change which has resurrected the Spooner bill from the tomb where it has lain sleeping the sleep of death for a year, and now puts it to the forefront to such an extent, as I have said, that in violation of the rules of the Senate—in confessed violation of the rules of the Senate—it has been put upon the Army appropriation bill, and its passage thus coerced and assured.

Who can deny that that is the influence which has produced this sudden change? If there is anyone on the other side of the Chamber who can deny it, I hope he will do so for the credit of the American Senate. If there is a single Senator on the Republican side of this Chamber who can stand in his place and show that the influence which has suddenly resurrected the Spooner bill and put it to the forefront under these circumstances is not the influence which sought to plunder and to exploit the people of the Philippine Islands and their property, I say I hope for the credit of the American Senate that that Senator will rise in his place and show it.

Mr. President, I say here that it is no credit to the American Senate if, under such circumstances, the influences which press this remarkable bill, this far-reaching bill, this revolutionary bill to the forefront—under these circumstances it is no credit to the American Senate if these influences which accomplish this are the influences of those who seek to plunder and despoil that land. If there is a man to defend it, I hope he will not allow party behests to keep him silent. If there is a Senator on the other side who knows an argument that will free the American Senate from this scandal, he owes it to the Senate and to the American people to pronounce that argument, and not keep it hidden in his bosom.

I recognize the fact that the enormity of this proposition was one which caused the Republicans to revolt. I recognize the fact that they would not let it go through in the way those people intended it should. I recognize the fact that they put a most important amendment on it, which will deprive those plunderers and those vultures of much of the prey; but that does not change the fact that those were the influences which instigated it. Those were the influences coming from outsiders which, although not avowed to Senators who now favor it, resurrected this bill from what was practically the sleep of death, and put it forward as the most exacting and most absolute and peremptory of all measures now before the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator does not mean to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BACON. With very great pleasure.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator does not mean to say that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] was moved by such a motive, does he?

Mr. BACON. I certainly do not. I have given my estimate of the Senator from Wisconsin, and it is not necessary for me to repeat it; but I do say the Senator from Wisconsin is but one of fifty-five Republicans in the Senate, counting the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] as one of them—the Senator from Wisconsin is but one of fifty-five, and he and some fifty odd of them—I think there are a few very honorable and conspicuous exceptions, not but what all of those Senators are honorable and conspicuous; all those Senators are obeying the party programme; I am speaking generally of the party and not of individuals, and I say that the party, of which the Senator from South Dakota is now a conspicuous member, must necessarily plead guilty of having been moved by these influences whether the individual Senators approved them or not unless they can show to the contrary, and I appeal to them in the name of the American Senate to show to the contrary. Nobody will be more delighted than I will be if they can show that what I say is not so, and that the conclusion I draw is not justifiable. I am speaking of the outside influences in this case being urged upon Senators, in the same way that in the case of the ship subsidy bill those outside influences were spoken of in debate here. I am charging no unworthy motive on any Senator.

Mr. KYLE. I think the Senator misunderstands me. I merely wanted to know whether he included the Senator from Wisconsin as being among those influenced by such motives as those the Senator from Georgia was referring to.

Mr. BACON. I understood perfectly. I am very glad of the Senator's interruption, because it enables me to repeat and to emphasize all that I said about the Senator from Wisconsin. No one can possibly understand me as impugning in the slightest degree the personal motives of the Senator from Wisconsin, or of any other Senator. I utterly disavow any such purpose.

How is there any answer to this? The Secretary of War communicating to the President the statement of the Taft commission that there were these 68,000,000 acres of public land; that there is this fertile soil, this great timber, these gold mines, these copper mines, and minerals of all kinds, echoes and repeats and approves the request of the Taft commission that there shall be legislation which will enable them to sell this property, these mines, and the franchises of that land, and the President of the United States of whom I will say no word of disrespect either here or elsewhere, because, aside from the fact of the personal respect which I have for him, I have made it a rule never to speak disrespectfully of the President of the United States, because of his high office—the President of the United States transmitted to Congress the report of the Secretary of War, including, as he does, the telegram of the Taft commission.

Mr. President, we not only have these official documents, but we have others. I have a clipping from a paper, which shows how widespread this thing is. The vultures are not all American vultures. In this Philippine trouble we have undertaken this great task, and we have made this great sacrifice of treasure and blood; we have endangered our political institutions; we have put a burden of taxation, the end of which no man can see, upon the American people, not simply for the exploiters of this land, but for the exploiters of all lands.

The Spooner bill is not only known in America and the Philippines, but it is known in Europe, and not only the exploiters from this country, but the exploiters from Europe are anxious that the Spooner bill shall be passed, in order that they may flock with the other vultures and share a part of this rich prey.

I clipped the following press dispatch from Manila, dated January 29, which is certainly very interesting reading. It is at the end of the dispatch. It says this:

> Dr. Kruger, the German consul-general here, has cabled to the Berlin Government asking that the German ambassador at Washington be instructed to diplomatically urge the passage of the Spooner bill.
> Two mining corporations organized in Germany are anxious to begin operations in the Philippines, but can not do so until the status of mining claims is established by a permanent government. Similar action will probably be taken by the British consul.

Some more influences, Mr. President. Of course, I have not the slightest idea that either the German ambassador here or the British ambassador has had any part in this. I am confident they have had no communications from their Governments on the subject. It is impossible that they should have done so. I only read this because it shows the influences that are at work. Here is a rich prey, a rich quarry, and the vultures not only from America, but from Europe, are hovering over it that they may get their claws and beaks into it.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] calls my attention to some other matters which are included in that very interesting report sent by the Secretary of War, with the details of which I am not sufficiently familiar, without further examination, to properly present to the Senate. I hope, however, the Senator from South Carolina will take an opportunity to do so.

This brings me to the question of the character of this bill that I think Senators here ought to consider seriously.

Mr. President, there are some questions higher than party questions; there is some allegiance loftier in its demands than allegiance to party, and how any man who is familiar with our institutions, any man who has in his veins the blood of Revolutionary sires, can give his support to this Philippine amendment I can not see, whether he be Republican or Democrat.

I see sitting before me a distinguished son of New England. There are more than one of them. There is behind him the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but he needs no adjuration on this subject. I am talking now about the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. Some people do not altogether admire some New England traits, but there is no question that New England was the cradle of American liberty—the birthplace of the freest of the free institutions of America. Although the other colonies were equally devoted to liberty, circumstances gave to New England the honor of the first patriot blood shed in the struggle. As one who is in part of New England ancestry, I do not see how any man who has New England blood in his veins can be indifferent to the question of human liberty and free institutions.

It does seem to me that not only New Englanders, but all people in America, ought to prize institutions which give liberty to any people. I am not talking now about the question of the independence of the people. I am talking about the government of a people by free institutions. I do not see how it is possible for any man who prizes free institutions to give his assent to this bill; for what is the bill? It is a bill which puts absolutely under the control and domination of one man ten or twelve million people, and gives to that one man the absolute, unrestrained power not only to administer their government, but to prescribe their government and every feature and every detail of it.

This bill does not make this government the creature of Congress. It makes it the creature of the President of the United States. It gives to the President of the United States the unrestrained discretion, unlimited discretion, as to what shall be the form of that government. There is an amendment pending saying that he shall observe the restrictions of the Constitution in the formation of that government. That amendment is not going to be adopted. It is going to be voted down. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] smiles and shakes his head. I knew it before he said it.

So it is a fact that one man is empowered to conduct and to administer a government without any restraints whatever and without any responsibility to anybody whatsoever; and not only without restraints, but the express declaration on the part of those who seek to clothe him with this power is that there is no constitutional restraint there. It is not only the power to appoint officers, but it is the power to decide what officers there shall be; the power to decide what the form of the government shall be. There is no form of government he could devise which we could say was an abuse of the power. There is no form of government which the wit of man can devise that he is not authorized to set up in those islands if he sees fit.

Not only does he devise the form of government, but it is in his power to change that government at any time he sees proper. It is within his power to abolish any part of it and create a new part. It is within his power to designate offices of a character that nobody can question. It is a power to set up the officers in the offices which he shall thus create; a power to prescribe their duties; a power to remove them whenever he wishes; a power to abolish their offices whenever he wishes; a power to create new government and new offices whenever he wishes; a power to require, which he doubtless will require, every officer of that government, legislative, executive, and judicial, to perform the duties of his office subject to his approval.

Mr. President, when an office is performed subject to the approval of the other man, and that man has the power to abolish the office and to abolish the officer, he is but a pawn on the chessboard, and the President of the United States is at last the officer. He appoints, or provides the manner in which they shall be appointed, every legislative officer. He has the power to change the method by which any legislative officer is appointed. He has the power, after any legislative officer is appointed, to abolish his office and remove the officer. If so, he is in fact the legislator. He has the power, whenever a law is passed that he does not approve, either to say it shall not be law or to abolish the legislature and put in another which will pass a law as he may dictate.

The same thing is true of the judicial department of the government. Every judge is appointed by him. Every judge is subject to his removal. The office of every judge is subject to be abolished by him. The judgment of every judge is subject to his own judgment. So it is with the executive officers who shall be there. He designates each one of them; he creates their offices; he appoints the officers; he has the power to abolish the offices and remove the officers; and there is no act of the officer but that he himself can control.

So it is, Mr. President, that this monstrous law, which no man on the other side in more than thirteen months has dared to get up and defend and say he approved it, in this day, emanating from this Government of free institutions, this monstrous law makes the President of the United States the absolute ruler, the uncontrolled ruler, the irresponsible ruler, the imperial ruler, of ten or twelve million people.

According to the Constitution of the United States the President of the United States can not appoint even a second lieutenant in the Army without the consent of this body. He can not appoint a marshal or a postmaster without the consent of the Senate. Yet here is a proposition that there shall be a government where, over this vast territory of a hundred and fifty thousand square miles, with ten or twelve million people, one man shall be utterly, absolutely supreme and irresponsible over the lives, the liberty, and the property, the business and the prosperity of that vast population. Mr. President, the man never lived who was good enough and wise enough to exercise such imperial power, and the man never will live who ought to be intrusted with it.

Is it any answer to say that the President of the United States is a wise man and a just man? If that were the case, if that were a sufficient guarantee, the framers of our Constitution need not have gone to the extent which they did to hedge about and guard the people against the improper conduct of officials. But suppose that to be conceded; and I have no doubt he will do his best; I have no doubt he will act according to what he thinks is best. But it is not according to the genius of our institutions that any man shall be intrusted with such power. Again, we are not dealing simply with the present President of the United States.

Who is to be the next President of the United States? Does anybody know? What manner of man will he be? Shall he inherit this gigantic, this absolute, this imperial power? Shall we put upon the statute books this act without limitation of time, except to say that it shall continue until Congress shall adjudge otherwise? With such enormous power vested in the President of the United States, with the immense patronage—probably ten thousand different officers to be appointed, with this vast control, with this tremendous acquisition to his present great power, where will the time be found when Congress will be strong enough in opposition to his will to lay its hand upon this law and say it shall cease in its operation?

It is my opinion that when once we have conferred this power, so long as there shall not be a complete revolution, not only in the Presidential office but in each branch of Congress, that power will remain in the hands of the Executive of the Government.

Mr. President, we have heard a great deal about imperialism, and I shall not discuss that, but I want to ask Senators to answer for themselves one question. They say there is no such thing as imperialism in our relations with the Philippines, and there can not be such a thing as imperialism under the American Government.

There are two kinds of imperialism. One is the imperialism of Russia, which deals with its own citizens. That is not the kind of imperialism we are now talking about, although that will in the end surely come if we are faithless to our free institutions in denying their enjoyment to others. We are talking now, however, about the imperialism which holds subject colonies without their participation in the Government and without their consent. Does any man dispute that that is imperialism? If so, what is imperialism? Is not this the perfect fruit of imperialism? We had the first fruit of imperialism when we established the Porto Rican government, denying as we did that Porto Rico was a part of the United States, and denying that the Porto Ricans were citizens of the United States, and asserting that Congress had the power to legislate for them without constitutional restraint. That made Porto Rico an outside colony. They were, however, allowed some of the features of a free government. But this Philippine legislation establishes an absolute unlimited government of one man; and thus step by step we advance on the march to a fateful imperialism.

The question with the American people is a most grave and serious one. I am fond of quoting my friend, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], because he expresses himself so strongly and so clearly. Does anybody doubt that this is one of the gravest questions ever presented to the American people? Does anybody question the fact that this question, which is sought to be railroaded in the last hours of Congress, is the most serious question which has been presented to the American people possibly since the foundation of the Government? If there is such doubt, let me read what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] said about it.

In a speech delivered by him on the 2d of April, 1900, when the Porto Rican question was before the Senate, the Senator from Wisconsin used this language:

> I feel, for one, that never since the close of the war for the preservation of the Union, when there confronted our people and the Congress questions of the gravest complication and novelty, has either the President or the Congress been called upon to solve problems equal in difficulty to those which confront us.

Mr. President, if that is true ought those problems, ought perhaps the most serious problem of them all, to be passed upon in this way? Ought it be passed upon under this coercion? Ought it be passed upon with no word from the Republican side of the Chamber to help us in its solution, or in justification, or in defense of the measure which they propose? Again continuing, the Senator from Wisconsin said:

> It has been hitherto for a great many years a matter of comparatively trifling importance what constitutional relation the Territories sustain to the United States, because our Territories have been peopled by those of our own blood and kindred. Their habits and aspirations have been the same as ours, and it is true, as has been stated by the Supreme Court of the United States more than once, that all the Territories between the oceans have been regarded as in a state of pupilage or probation, looking ultimately to admission into the Union.
> But the result of the Spanish war, Mr. President, has placed under our control—I use the phrase advisedly—territory containing eleven or more millions of people, a sixth of the population of this country, strangers to us, strangers to our language, strangers to our institutions, strangers to our aspirations and to our race.

Yet, Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin who uttered those solemn words now advocates the passage of a bill without a single word from himself or his colleagues in support or in defense of the measure which he proposes for the solution of this great and tremendous question.

Nor will I stop there in quoting the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, because in a speech made by him on May 22 and 24, to which I have already alluded, the speech which he made upon the subject of the Spooner bill, but the speech in which he had nothing to say about the Spooner bill, but in which he discussed generally the Philippine question, he used the language I will read. I ask the Senators who do me the honor to be present to listen to this language because it has never before been more forcibly stated by anyone than it is here stated by the learned Senator from Wisconsin. It was on Tuesday, May 22, 1900, that he made the speech in this Chamber from which I quote:

> I suppose, Mr. President, it will be admitted that had there been no war with Spain and she had tendered to us "without money and without price" a cession of the Philippine Archipelago and a treaty accepting that cession had been transmitted to the Senate for its action it would have received hardly a vote in this body and would have proved entirely unattractive to the great body of our people. The suggestion in advocacy of it that we are "trustee" to lead the nations of the earth in the work of civilization would not have been at all persuasive.
> The quick and sufficient answer to that would have been that, while this is a missionary people, this is not and can not become a missionary Government, and that it is not our function, philanthropic as we may be and as this people is, that their Government shall police the world, seeking for people oppressed, living in the darkness of ignorance and half civilization, in order to uplift them.
>
> It would have been said that we have problems of our own to solve, some of them complicated, all of them important, and that the first duty of this Government, trustee of our people, is to subserve the interests of our people, to develop the illimitable resources of this continent, to spread the blessings of education among the people, to give to the country equal laws, and to lift up as far as may be all here who are oppressed. If it had been said that the islands are full of mineral wealth, of untold richness in soil, and of unspeakable beauty, that would have produced no effect in this Chamber.
> Our people would not have harbored the thought of going into distant seas and taking archipelagoes of alien people because of the richness of the islands. I can conceive of no argument in favor of the acceptance of such a proposition, which would have found much, if any, favor here or in the country.
> There would have been found no lust of empire among us; nor is there now, in my opinion, in the sense in which that term is now used in this body and in the country by certain distinguished gentlemen.

I could not state that more strongly, nor could I state it as strongly.

Is it not the fact that we have the same motives now to constrain us in some way that is just to that people, in some way that is just to ourselves to rid ourselves of this body of death?

Do not let me be misunderstood. I am not one of those who think that the United States Government under the present circumstances can summarily withdraw its Army and leave those people to themselves.

As I have had occasion to say before in this Chamber, we have overturned and destroyed whatever there was of government in those islands. Consequently the same duty and the same obligation now rest upon us to pacify the islands, and to see that a proper government is set up, which can assume its proper relations to other governments and which can maintain peace among its people, as rest upon us in the case of the people of Cuba, although that is a duty arising out of different circumstances.

But if we are able, as the Committee on Relations with Cuba seems to think we are able, to prescribe a method through which we can retire honorably from Cuba, is it not equally possible for us by a similar method to prescribe a way by which we can retire safely and honorably from the Philippine Islands, having due regard to every obligation, having due regard to the necessity that there shall be governmental control there before we do so, having due regard to all obligations to other people and to the people of the islands themselves?

Mr. President, we have entered upon a dark and devious road. We have entered upon one involving sacrifice beyond measure, and it is one which has been at last recognized by some of those who have favored this policy. There are Senators on the other side of the Chamber who say to me they are sick of this Philippine business and they wish we had never gotten into it. If so, the part of wisdom now is not to inaugurate legislation in order that the vultures and the harpies of the land may prey upon that country, but that we shall inaugurate legislation which shall lead to a termination, relieving us of this great burden and setting us right in our own estimation as regards our duties to others.

I hold in my hand—I hardly would undertake to say this myself—a clipping from the Washington Post, which is not a paper advocating the abandonment of the Philippine Islands, but the contrary. Here is what the Washington Post, last year, December 19, 1900, said. I will read it. It is discussing the situation in the Philippines, and the Washington Post editorially says:

> But, looking backward under the illumination of experience, is the New York Press, is any American newspaper, is the Administration, the Congress, or the country satisfied that the course pursued was best? Had the destructive war with the Filipinos been foreseen; had the long, sad lists of killed and wounded and victims of disease been anticipated; had it been believed that, in the last month of 1900, ship loads of corpses would have been coming home from the Philippines; had the present prospects of continued conflict, with its growing aggregate of loss of life, health, and cash loomed up before this nation in February, 1899; had all or even a tithe of that partial bill of particulars been discernible then, who imagines that we should have taken the sovereignty of the Philippines?

If we made a mistake—and I think we did make a most grievous mistake—if we have tied to us a very body of death, is it the part of wisdom to say that we shall always remain so, or is it the part of wisdom, is it our duty to our people, that we shall seek some way out which, I repeat, shall be honorable to ourselves, just to our interests, and at the same time fair and just to that people?

Mr. President, I can not elaborate the subject. I should like to talk, if I felt I could do so without unduly trespassing upon the Senate, about the question whether there is any material interest to us in this matter; whether there is any possibility that the much more than a hundred million dollars a year that the Philippine Islands are costing us can ever be restored to us.

I should like to discuss the question whether all the gold, and coal, and iron, and copper which are found in the Philippine Islands, if they are developed, are going to be to the interest of this country; whether they can be of any advantage to any of our people, except those who exploit them, reaping their rich harvests of wealth in the use of the cheap labor in those islands; whether it is to the interest of this people that China, which is looked forward to as the great market, shall be supplied from the Philippine Islands by the development which is to come from American capital with cheap Asiatic labor, or whether it is to the interest of ourselves that that market shall be supplied from our own mines and our own people, our own fields and factories, through the labor and industry of our own people.

What folly will it be, looking, as we now do, to the Chinese market to take from us our own products, to build up instead competition in every industry in the Philippines worked by American capital using the cheap Asiatic labor at 12 or 15 cents a day. But time will not permit. If we were to put this question upon the purest commercial basis, I do not believe it would be possible for anybody to say that it is to the interest of the American people to continue this condition of affairs.

The prospect in the future is not one of amelioration of conditions. I hold in my hand an Associated Press dispatch of December 30, 1900, less than two months ago, as to the condition of affairs in the Philippine Islands. Everybody knows that the Associated Press is an institution the correctness of whose reports is its capital. It can not afford to be otherwise than correct. This is headed:

[Correspondence of the Associated Press.]

MANILA, December 30.

The general situation in reference to efforts toward the pacification of the Philippines may be summed up in two words, namely, "slow progress." The fact that progress is being made is fully apparent, but that it is slow is equally undeniable. In taking stock on the threshold of the new century the conquest of the Philippines is found to be still very far from actual accomplishment, with no eyewitnesses of the conflict willing to hazard opinion as to a time when even an approximate general peace is to be established. Such is the consensus of the views gathered by the Associated Press from military and civil officials of high and lesser rank and from soldiers, sailors, and citizens.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask the Senator if he has noticed in the Evening Star an interview with the late consul, Mr. Wildman, with whose tragic death we are all familiar, given in Honolulu, in which he presents an entirely opposite view of the conditions in the Philippines. I wish the Senator would look at it.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt that is true as the Senator states it. I have not seen it. I will say, however, that I think the dispatch of the Associated Press from its man on the ground is very much more entitled to credence and to belief in its accuracy than the opinion of Mr. Wildman.

I am glad the Senator spoke about that. It reminds me of something I was about to forget that I want to read to the Senate. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] suggests to me a fact which I suppose was recognized, that Mr. Wildman's estimate was taken from views expressed to him at Hongkong and not at Manila, whereas this Associated Press dispatch is from Manila.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course we all know, if the Senator will permit me, that Consul Wildman kept in very close touch with affairs in the Philippine Islands. It is true that he was consul at Hongkong.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not recognize that fact when he voted for an army of 100,000 men under the statement of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] that seventy-odd thousand are still needed in the Philippine Islands and would be needed there for some time. That did not look as if the Senator from New Hampshire at that time thought that the contrary and opposite of this was correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition to get into a controversy as to that matter at all. I simply desired to call the Senator's attention to this matter, knowing him to be a very fair man always, and to express the hope, that was all, that matters were better than the Senator feared they were; that was all.

Mr. BACON. And I will reciprocate the hope, Mr. President, that as the Senator from New Hampshire now is prepared to give credence to what Mr. Wildman says, he will give full credit to the statements of Mr. Wildman to be found in Senate Document No. 62.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am familiar with them.

Mr. BACON. Now, I am going to refer to a matter that I passed over. I was speaking of the arbitrary character of the Government which is sought to be set up by this measure and which will be set up by this measure, and I have an illustration of it here in my hand. The Senator's reading a piece from the Star reminded me of it. I had forgotten it entirely.

Just to show how utterly arbitrary such a government is, to show how absolutely every interest of a people is under the control of an arbitrary ruler, I read an extract which I took from the Evening Star of April 21, 1900, from an interview with General Otis by Frank G. Carpenter, never denied, and I presume it is undoubtedly correct, in which General Otis was speaking of his powers there and how absolute he was; how he could do anything he wanted to do, and he gave this as an illustration. It is put in his language, not giving the substance, but professing to give his exact language:

We have, you know, the right to fix prices.

This is what General Otis says—

I can make meat cost $1 or 40 cents a pound with a scratch of my pen.

That is what General Otis said in an interview published in the Evening Star on the 21st of April, 1900, as to his power in this arbitrary government 7,000 miles away, where we can not reach it; and as an illustration of the power, he said: "I can with a scratch of my pen make meat worth a dollar a pound or forty cents a pound, as I may choose."

Mr. President, what is the government thus to be set up by this bill—for I presume, of course, that Senators who do not dare to defend it intend to vote it through? It will have control of every interest of that people. It will have the control, not only of the organization of the government and the appointment of all officers, the dictation of every law, the dictation of the judgment of every court, the dictation of the execution of every judgment, but it will have the power to regulate prices, to make a man rich or poor; and, Mr. President, how many of them will get rich?

Does any man doubt here that with that government set up there, with the revenues of that government subject to the absolute control of those who shall be in power; with the power to assess, levy, and collect taxes; the power to appropriate money; the power to disburse money; the power to assess revenue, to collect it, and disburse it; the power to give contracts; the power to inaugurate great enterprises; the power to give franchises; the power to start great public improvements; the power in a hundred ways to raise or depress values at will—does anybody doubt the cloud of harpies which will hover around and settle upon those islands and gorge themselves with plunder? We have had an illustration down here in Cuba of what irresponsible officers will do when they have the unrestrained control of the revenues of a people whom they dominate and to whom they are not responsible.

There was a resolution introduced in the Senate and adopted by the Senate instructing the Committee on Relations with Cuba to perform a certain duty—not only to find out what had been expended, but why it had been expended; by what authority it had been expended; what necessity there was for its expenditure—and the only reason I can surmise why the Committee on Relations with Cuba did not obey the order of the Senate was that the disclosure which would have resulted from that investigation would have been the deepest disgrace that has ever stained American honor.

Mr. President, who is going to investigate expenditures in the Philippine Islands? Who is going to have the opportunity to supervise and say how much of plunder there has been, how much of spoliation? Mr. President, those two great big books [exhibiting] are simply books of figures and nothing else to speak of, books of figures of money spent in Cuba in a little over a year.

Who has looked through them? Who is going to examine them? That is a people of about fifteen hundred thousand, and here is a people numbering 12,000,000. The Cuban people are 70 miles from our shores. The Filipinos are 7,000 miles away, where no eye can reach them, and the opportunity for plunder and spoliation is unlimited and the power for detection is almost nothing.

I have here a Manila newspaper. I have two of them, in fact, and I just want to show what a chance there is out there, even at present, under a government very similar to that which is to be set up but subordinated to the military control. I have here two newspapers, one is called the American and the other the Manila Times. They were sent from there to me by some one, among a number of other papers.

It gives an account of this wonderful legislative body we have over there now, in the shape of a commission—five men setting up to be the legislature of the Philippine Islands, and setting up to be not only the legislature, but, except so far as the military governor may have control—having themselves control of every part of the government—legislative, judicial, and executive; in one minute passing laws which assess duties, in the next minute appropriating the money, in the next minute letting the contracts, and then supervising the contracts, and then controlling the judge who is to pass upon them, and controlling the judgment which is to be pronounced concerning them.

I will give an illustration of the wholesale scale upon which they are proceeding there with this temporary government, and I commend to my honored friend from Massachusetts the danger in temporary government as well as permanent, because I think the amendment offered by him, while excellent so far as it goes, will not close the door to the plundering which will be had under a temporary government.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator does not for a moment suppose that I approve the amendment, even with the amendment.

Mr. BACON. No; I fully understand the Senator. I am only sorry that with the weight of his name and influence his amendment had not gone further. I fully understand the Senator's position and am very glad to do so.

I hold here a paper published in Manila containing a pretended legislative bill. These five men set themselves up as a legislature and they go through all the forms of legislatures. They introduce bills and they read them the first, second, and third time and pronounce them passed, just as if they were a legislative body, the only difference being that instead of being in the name of the Government of the United States, as is set out in the Taft report, they are all of them by authority of the President of the United States.

Here is a harbor bill which appropriates a million dollars in gold out of the revenues of the people of the Philippine Islands to improve the harbor of Manila—$1,000,000 at one time; and they set up and go through the form of legislating with a presiding officer and a man getting up and making a speech as if he were in a legislative body.

Now, Mr. President, I care not how honest the Taft Commission is, that million dollars is a part of the prey that these harpies will succeed in taking to themselves. I am told—I do not know whether it is a myth or not—that one of the old gray-back sharks will sight an Atlantic liner at Sandy Hook and follow it to Queenstown to take the plunder that may fall overboard. I have no doubt that when the Taft Commission sailed for Manila there were other sharks who sighted the prey and followed them there.

Mr. President, if the Philippine amendment to this bill had passed as it was introduced—as it was reported by the committee and before the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts had been attached to it—there would have been in the Philippine Islands the greatest orgie of plunder, of jobbery, and of spoliation that the world ever saw. With 68,000,000 acres of land, with rich mines, with fertile lands, with gold and copper and iron and coal, there would have been an inconceivable amount of plunder. Oh, Mr. President, plunder is not the word. It is loot. They would have looted the island, and they would have come away from there so heavily laden with prey that they could scarcely have borne the burden of their spoil.

Now, Mr. President, the Philippine amendment has been very much improved by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I do not think it goes far enough. I do not suggest it because it was offered by myself, but I think the amendment offered by myself goes further and is better adapted to the situation. It did not originate with me. I copied it from the Porto Rican law that this Congress passed in reference to franchises in Porto Rico. I quoted it literally, only changing it so as to make it adapted to the situation there instead of Porto Rico. I will read first the provision in the Porto Rican law:

Provided, however, That all laws enacted by the legislative assembly shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority, if deemed advisable to annul the same.

To that extent the amendment offered by me is a literal verbatim copy of the Porto Rican law. Then the other part of it in the Porto Rican law is as follows:

Provided, however, That all grants of franchises, rights, privileges, or concessions of a public or quasi-public nature shall be made by the executive council, with the approval of the governor, and all franchises granted in Porto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

As they have no executive council there I changed the additional proviso in my amendment so as to read as follows:

And provided further, That all laws enacted by any governmental authority created under the powers conferred by this act shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority, if deemed advisable, to annul the same.

I desire simply to call attention to this. Of course, if the Senate thinks the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts goes far enough, I have nothing more to say about it. I would be glad, however, to have him personally examine it.

Now, Mr. President, the point to which I want to call the attention of the Senate in this connection is this: When the original Porto Rican bill was presented to the Senate, it contained a provision in it exactly like that the Senator from Massachusetts has put in his amendment, to wit, that the franchises should be approved by the President, and after full examination and discussion the Senate struck out those words and put it, as the Senator will find it in the Porto Rican law, that they should be reported to Congress, which reserved the power to annul the same if they deemed it advisable.

It is true, as I say, the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is a vast improvement to the bill, and I anticipate that these harpies, these plunderers, these exploiters, who have already in imagination grown fat on 68,000,000 acres of public land and on all the mines and fertile lands, will lose much of their interest in this act when they find that to that extent they have been robbed of their prey.

Mr. President, I have but a few more words to say, and as there will not be time for me to speak separately as to the Cuban matter, I desire to say a word in reference to that without its discussion.

I can not vote for the Cuban amendment, and I will state my reason for it. I believe that the future of Cuba is necessarily identified with the future of the United States, and it is not in antagonism to that view that I decline to vote for this Cuban amendment. I do so on two grounds.

In the first place, I do not think that the amendment is in harmony with the pledge which we made when we went to war with Spain. I think that we are bound by that pledge, Mr. President. That pledge is not consistent with the pronunciation by us of an ultimatum to the people of Cuba, saying that we will not release them from military control until they comply with that ultimatum.

I know that it is common for people to disparage the action of the Senate in the adoption of the clause recognizing the independence of the people of Cuba in the resolution declaring war against Spain, which says:

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

I know that some who were not then members of this body are disposed to ridicule that resolution as a piece of silly sentiment. But, Mr. President, it was not a sentiment. That declaration was made under very solemn circumstances, at a time when we thought it was prudent and good policy to make the declaration. At the time we went to war with Spain we did not know but that we had entered upon a world's war. At the time when we stripped ourselves for the conflict, when we flung down the gage of battle, we did not know but that the whole of Europe would be at the back of Spain. That was then a serious apprehension.

Mr. President, I recollect very well the language to me of the President of the United States at the time when there was great travail, great doubt, great labor and trouble in the effort to determine upon what was a wise course then to be pursued. The President of the United States invited expressions of opinion not only from Republicans, but from Democrats; and I remember distinctly that on a day I received an invitation with another Democratic Senator to go to the White House and confer with the President about the then serious and difficult situation.

I am happy to do here what I have done, I think, heretofore in this presence; if not here, certainly elsewhere, on every occasion, to do the justice to say of the President that he was most earnestly opposed to war; that he most earnestly desired the preservation of peace; and I remember, distinctly as we parted in the Cabinet room, the last words he said to us were, "Senators, remember if we have war it may be a world's war."

Now, Mr. President, in the presence of such an emergency as that, in the presence of so great a danger as that, we deemed it proper to stand before the whole world, when we did not know but that we had challenged their hostility, and say to them, "We desire no aggrandizement by this war; we do not go to war for the purpose of acquiring Cuba; we want you to understand it is our desire that you shall hold your hands off, that our only desire is to do justice to these people and produce a peaceful situation in that country."

Therefore, under that solemn, under that serious condition of affairs, with the utmost good faith and for the purpose, not of high-flown sentiment, but for the purpose of our personal protection against a threatened danger which we apprehended, we said to all the world, "Our purpose is simply to produce a condition that is tolerable there, to stop this inhumanity, and to bring about peace in our own home sphere; and when we shall have done that, we pledge ourselves we will make no attempt to take this island; when we have pacified those people we will withdraw and leave their affairs to them alone. We declare solemnly before the world that they are, and of a right ought to be, free and independent, and we will be true to that declaration."

Now, I say that was not a matter of sentiment. It was a great and a solemn asseveration made for a high purpose, deemed essential to our own safety.

Mr. President, if I desired above all things the acquisition of Cuba I would do nothing which would be in conflict either with the letter or with the spirit of that asseveration which we then made under those trying circumstances. Therefore, Mr. President, while I have the utmost deference and respect for the committee which have brought in this amendment, according to my view the amendment is not consistent with the obligation which we then solemnly took in the presence of the world. Cuba can not be free and independent if we can enforce these restraints upon her. If we are determined to violate our pledge, why stop half way? In that case we should go the whole way and take the island without reservation.

Mr. President, I will state another reason why, with the utmost respect for the committee, I must decline to vote for the amendment. I believe, as I have already said, that the future of Cuba will certainly be identified with that of the United States. It may take a little longer time to bring about a proper understanding, but I think the future relations of the Cuban people with ours should be so carefully guarded that they will not be affected by any irritation which might result from an ultimatum presented by us to them at this time.

I am in favor of assisting them in the effort to bring about a condition of good government in their island. I am in favor of assisting them in all proper ways; but Mr. President, I am not in favor of irritating their spirit of love for independence by now flaunting in their faces the demand that they shall agree to that in the very inception which is the acknowledgment that they are not an independent people, but that they are a subject people, who must do whatever we demand of them.

There is one provision in the Cuban amendment in which my section is deeply interested. That is the provision to insure the sanitation of the island. That is of extreme importance, and I have no doubt that will be carefully guarded, whatever plan of settlement is adopted. I am confident that more can be accomplished through a plan which does not irritate the Cubans, for at last we must largely depend upon their willingness to make this sanitation effective.

Mr. President, this much I thought proper that I should say concerning Cuba.

To return to the question of the Philippine Islands, I want to repeat that I regard this as the most vicious and pernicious legislation which the country has ever known to be proposed in these legislative halls, for while, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, the question of union or disunion was a more serious one, it was not a legislative question. I want to repeat that there is no bill in this Senate, or which can come to the Senate, the passage of which I would be willing to secure by in any manner or in any degree withdrawing the slightest of all the opposition which I have to this bill.

I want to say further, Mr. President, that while there is no bill which I would secure the passage of by withdrawing my opposition to this bill, there is no bill to which I am so opposed that I would secure its defeat by withdrawing opposition to this bill. I repeat what I said before—that while I am utterly opposed to the subsidy bill, I would rather see ten subsidy bills passed than this bill. If Senators on the other side think that Senators on this side are relaxed in their opposition to it or in their desire to see its defeat, let me say to them that they will see in this vote a more unanimous Democratic party than has ever showed itself in any vote that has been cast in this Chamber in the present Congress.

Mr. President, I again repeat, an extra session has no terrors for me. I would be willing to resort to any of these devices if anybody could show me they would result in a permanent defeat of this amendment. I am ready to follow anybody or anything that will show that permanently we can defeat this measure, which, I think, in all respects is a most iniquitous measure.

I was speaking just now of the commercial question. I was trying to express the idea that there was something higher than commercial considerations in this great question; and in discussing that idea I want to read something from a man who, while he belongs to a different political party from myself, has my unbounded admiration as a man of ability, a man of integrity, a man of great learning, a man of unsurpassed patriotism, one who was once an honored member of this body, and who now, in dignified retirement, has the honor to be an ex-President of the United States.

Indiana not only should be proud of him, but the whole country; Republicans not only should be proud of him, but every true American citizen. In an article published in the North American Review of January of this year—a most instructive article, one of great logic and power—this great and good man concluded with these words:

> One who has retired from the service, but not from the love of his country, must be pardoned if he finds himself unable to rejoice in the acquisition of lands and forests and mines and commerce at the cost of the abandonment of the old American idea that a government of absolute powers is an intolerable thing, and under the Constitution of the United States an impossible thing. The view of the Constitution I have suggested will not limit the power of territorial expansion, but it will lead us to limit the use of that power to regions that may safely become a part of the United States and to peoples whose American citizenship may be allowed.
> It has been said that the flash of Dewey's guns in Manila Bay revealed to the American people a new mission. I like rather to think of them as revealing the same old mission that we read in the flash of Washington's guns at Yorktown.
>
> God forbid that the day should ever come when, in the American mind, the thought of a man as a "consumer" shall submerge the old American thought of man as a creature of God, endowed with "unalienable rights."
> BENJAMIN HARRISON.

Mr. President, I wish that those words and that sentiment might reach the ear and sink into the heart of every man in our land who loves liberty and who prizes the free institutions of our country.

APPENDIX.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following extract from the Reports of the Taft Philippine Commission, to be appended to Mr. BACON's speech:

NECESSITY FOR MINING LAWS AND FOR SETTLEMENT OF EXISTING CLAIMS.

There can be no question that it is to the interest of the inhabitants of this archipelago to have its mineral resources developed. It is equally certain that the men who have faced manifold dangers in locating valuable mineral properties, and who are ready and anxious to develop them, should be given an opportunity to do so at the earliest practicable time.

Although, as has been stated, the character of the prospectors and miners in the archipelago is above the average, the presence of a considerable body of such men who have found mineral deposits, but are forced to endure a long period of inactivity, pending the time when they can establish their claims and begin active operations, is not a desirable factor in the present situation. The reports which are being sent out are of such a character as to make it highly probable that the number of prospectors and miners will be greatly augmented in the near future. It seems, therefore, most important that immediate steps should be taken to make it possible for the government established in these islands to grant mining claims.

There is, furthermore, necessity for some tribunal empowered to decide questions arising in regard to Spanish mining grants and so-called "titles," although the word "title" is in this case a misnomer, for under Spanish law only concessions were granted, the title being continued in the Crown. The ownership of the concessionary was limited to a license of indeterminate length, allowing him to extract certain minerals and to dispose of the same and to convey to others his rights by deed. This "title" was at all times subject to eleven general conditions, and failure to comply with any one of them made it possible for the Crown to cancel the concession.

Endless questions are arising as to the status of concessions granted by the Spanish Government to which the titles had been perfected or were in process of perfection. For purposes of convenience claims are referred to as "first-class claims" where title has been perfected and as "second-class claims" where title was in process of perfection.

FIRST-CLASS CLAIMS (SPANISH GRANTS RECORDED).

Of such concessions there were recorded and uncanceled upon the records at the time the Philippine Islands were ceded by Spain to the United States no less than 481. These claims were embraced in 152 "expedientes" (or petitions); in other words, there were 152 different mines. They were distributed among the various minerals as follows:

	Claims.	Area.
		Square meters.
Gold	338	19,974,512.25
Coal	116	17,400,000
Copper	2	166,849.24
Iron	9	1,137,571.09
Sulphur	3	180,000
Marble	4	80,000
Petroleum	4	600,000
Kaolin	4	80,000
Guano	1	20,000
Total	491	39,638,932.58

Some of these grants are doubtless invalid because of long abandonment, but the formal entry of cancellation has not been made upon the records.

SECOND-CLASS CLAIMS (INCOMPLETE SPANISH GRANTS).

When the Philippine Islands were ceded to the United States there were proceedings pending in the department of mines for the survey and official demarcation of 113 claims, embracing 10,941,614.71 square meters, and contained in 37 petitions, and divided among the minerals as follows:

	Claims.	Area.
		Square meters.
Gold	61	3,531,614.71
Coal	49	7,350,000
Marble	1	20,000
Trachyte	2	40,000
Total	113	10,941,614.71

These claims had not yet reached a stage where they could be closed by a concession, since, by the terms of the Spanish law, the act of demarcation, based on a definite official survey by a public surveyor, was a condition precedent to the granting of a title, and was the only means by which the lands could be segregated from the public domain.

THIRD-CLASS CLAIMS.

There remains a third class of claims, viz, those which it was attempted to establish through the mining bureau at Manila by the filing of petitions there between May 4, 1898, and March 30, 1899. It would appear that there was no warrant of law for the filing of such petitions, and that they have no legal value.

Nevertheless, they number 1,618 and embrace 149,288,134.37 square meters. They are divided among the minerals as follows:

	Claims.	Area.
		Square meters.
Gold	1,006	60,348,134.37
Coal	467	70,050,000
Copper	108	15,160,000
Iron	16	2,400,000
Sulphur	3	450,000
Marble	10	200,000
Granite	4	80,000
Petroleum	4	600,000
Total	1,618	149,288,134.37

As already stated, it is of great importance that some tribunal should be established at the earliest possible date by which the legal status of these claims may be determined. In many if not all instances the disturbed conditions which have prevailed in the archipelago since 1896 have prevented the owners of claims of the first class from fulfilling all the conditions precedent to keeping their title clear. They desire to pay the taxes due on this property, if it be held that they are the rightful owners on the one hand, and on the other they can hardly be compelled to pay them unless their ownership is recognized. They also, and very naturally, desire to prevent others from squatting on their claims. Similarly, those who had begun to perfect titles to mining concessions prior to the change of sovereignty are anxious to learn what their rights are.

The island government is interested in the clearing up of titles to these mining properties on account of the revenue which would result. The owners, or would-be owners, are interested on account of the possible profit to themselves. The people at large are interested on account of the increased opportunities for the employment of labor which would accompany the active development of mineral deposits. There is every reason, therefore, why a mining code should be enacted for these islands at the earliest practicable time and suitable provision made for determining the rights of all claimants to mining properties.

It is believed that this whole matter should be dealt with here by the legislative body at present existing in the islands, but the commission has held that it can not determine questions arising as to existing claims nor consider applications for new concessions until duly authorized by Congress. In view of the importance of the interests involved, such authorization is urgently requested. (Taft Commission Reports, pp. 51-54.)

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall vote against the Cuban amendment to this bill for the reason that, it seems to me, there is a right to interfere in Cuban affairs reserved in certain of its paragraphs. For instance, in paragraph 3 the language is:

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

That seems to reserve the right to the United States to judge at all times what sort of a government the Republic of Cuba has, and to intervene whenever the government does not suit the purposes of the Government of the United States. In other words, it seems that there is an intention to reserve to the Government of the United States a supervision and control of the government of Cuba, which is directly in the face of our pledge that Cuba should have an independent government. That is one objection to the amendment.

Then, in paragraph 5, there is this provision:

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

By whom is this mutual agreement to be made? Evidently between the government of Cuba and the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States, it seems, must have reserved in this paragraph a right to direct what sort of sanitary arrangements shall be made in the cities of Cuba, reserving to the United States the right to control the domestic and internal affairs of that government. To this I am opposed.

For these reasons, and because of these features in this proposition, I shall vote against the Cuban amendment. But I join with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in the expression of surprise and gratification that the majority here are willing to put themselves in a much better position in this respect than I had hoped they would do. I think that this proposition is very much better than anything I expected or hoped for.

I confess that I have feared for months that it was the deliberate intention of the majority here to absolutely disregard our plighted faith to the world and to Cuba when we declared war against Spain, and to maintain a control and absolute supervision of the island. I am afraid that we are leaving enough of that in the amendment to make the pretext and excuse for undertaking to interfere in the affairs of that island hereafter, and for that reason I shall vote against that proposition.

I am more strongly opposed to the Philippine proposition than I am to the Cuban proposition, for I believe the Philippine proposition is absolutely indefensible in every respect. It is indefensible from every point of view, and while it is much less offensive and much less objectionable than it was before the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] offered his amendment, it is still so absolutely un-American and it so completely violates every idea of government which I have ever heard of that I am willing to do anything reasonable to defeat this proposition.

I am, however, Mr. President, not willing to resort to filibustering for the purpose of preventing the majority voting on these questions. If they choose to adopt these propositions, they have the responsibility and they have the power; let them take the responsibility and the accountability to the American people for what they do.

There are other important measures besides the pending bill which must be considered. All the general appropriation bills must be passed; and there are three yet to be disposed of. There is the river and harbor bill, involving an expenditure of millions of dollars, involving the good of many localities in this country, and affecting materially the commerce of the entire country. The sundry civil bill must be passed, and the general deficiency bill is yet to be considered. We have but three days more of time in which these great measures are to be taken up and disposed of. I am not willing to consume the time of the Senate in presenting at any length my opposition to these amendments, and I am not willing to resort to any methods of delay or to consume time to prevent a vote upon the pending question when these other great questions are waiting to be considered.

Mr. President, I confess I was amazed to see a statement in the Washington Post of this morning as absolutely devoid of foundation in fact as anything I have ever seen printed, except as to the statement as to my own position. I do not know who wrote that article. I hope that the gentleman who interviewed me and asked me what my position was on this question was not guilty of the execution of that infamy.

The statement is made in the headlines:

Minority will yield—Democratic opposition in the Senate withdrawn—Republicans score a victory.

I believe it is said in newspaper offices that nobody is responsible for headlines. But the article goes on to say:

The opposition to the Philippine amendment to the Army appropriation bill has melted away like snow under a warm sun.

I agree that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] stated the exact truth when he said that you will find a solid Democratic vote against this proposition. There has been no melting away of opposition to this amendment.

There is another item in this article stating that there has been some agreement for a vote. That is also absolutely without foundation. There has been no agreement to vote. Standing in my place last night at a quarter past eleven o'clock I said, when there was a proposition to go on with a speech, that I believed that at a reasonable hour to-day a vote could be had upon these propositions. We intended to state the reasons why they ought not to be on the statute book; but I for one am not willing to resort to filibustering methods to undertake to defeat the appropriation bills and to make an extra session an absolute certainty, for I know that the result of that extra session would be to pass measures more objectionable than those which are now pending here.

The fact is the want of time to pass these measures was the reason why an amendment came in here, and was accepted by the majority, preventing the sale of the public lands in the Philippines. The reason why there should not be unlimited power to the government to be established in the Philippines to grant franchises to run for all time to come, because of the fact that the majority knew that if that amendment was not accepted, in all human probability they would not be able to get a vote upon the appropriation bills.

When the most infamous features of this proposition are withdrawn we know that if the majority vote for the Spooner amendment as it now stands they are simply taking a part of the responsibility for doing what the President has been doing for two years anyway. It does not increase his power. It does not expand his power, but simply makes the Republican majority here share with the President the responsibility for what has been done and what we all know will be done whether this amendment shall be passed or not.

Under these circumstances, and for these reasons, I am willing that the majority shall take this responsibility and that there shall be a vote. I will not undertake to delay it. I believe that we have a right to discuss these questions and to show why they ought not to pass. I think that has been done in a way which will carry conviction to the minds and consciences of the people of the United States and that the majority will be held to a fearful accountability for passing measures of this kind.

But the statement made that there is an agreement, or that there has been any consent on the part of anybody here that these measures shall be passed, is absolutely without foundation. It is as false as anything that was ever uttered or written on the face of the earth. There is no shadow of foundation for it; there is absolutely no truth in it; there is not now, and there has not been from the beginning to this time. Simply because some of us are not willing, at the dictation of a handful of men who want an extra session for purposes of their own, to resort to extraordinary methods and filibustering to bring about an extra session—to have a statement of that sort made to justify an attempt to censure us—will not, I imagine, cause any Democrat to change the position he occupies or change his course of conduct here.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I only wish to speak for two or three minutes in order to state very briefly my own opinion and position in regard to this matter.

I believe—perhaps the wish may be father to the thought—that there is a great change going on in the minds of the American people and in the minds of the masses of the Republican party in regard to this Philippine policy. Evidences of it come to me in conversation with eminent and influential men—men who have been charged with public responsibilities all over the country—and in letters from persons who, whether eminent or influential or not, are the fair representatives and type of the great liberty-loving Republican party. When the light comes into the hearts of the American people, they will, in my judgment, adhere to the doctrines of the great Declaration. Our fathers did not penetrate a position their children can not hold. We shall not sink back again from the great heights we have gained.

I do not think, therefore, while this process seems to be going on, that it is wise to have the final debate or to have any more debate over these questions now before a Senate and a House that have so lately acted upon them, or within a few weeks have an extra session of a House and a Senate representing the prevalent tone of the last election. I think we had better adjourn what we have to say until the next six months shall have added their contribution to our knowledge and experience.

So, although I am opposed, and mostly for the reasons stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], to this declaration of a purpose and of a right to commit to five men despotic power over 12,000,000 men, and to give them all powers of legislation, of execution, of judgment over these 12,000,000 people; yet, as the same power is exercised now, and is to be exercised for the immediate future by one man, I do not think it wise for the present to bring upon the country the other mischiefs attending an extra session, by forcing one by an unavailing resistance to this measure.

The amendment which has been adopted, originally drawn by me, but improved by the suggestion of other Senators, and especially by one important suggestion, which I suppose I violate no confidence in saying came from the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], has somewhat modified and softened the features of this proposition. But still, however modified and softened, it is, in my judgment, a proposition at variance with the principles of the Declaration of Independence, with the principles of the American Constitution, with the principles of every State constitution and every State bill of rights, and with the principles by which and through which and in which the Republican party came to life and has lived from the beginning of its honorable and glorious history.

Mr. President, whatever we may have thought in the beginning, these 12,000,000 people with whom we are dealing are not savages; they are an intelligent, Christian, liberty-loving people. Every evidence, whether it came from the reluctant admission of military officers or from the picture of what takes place in this great struggle of theirs for their liberty, every evidence shows that people to be a race of men with whom our own Revolutionary fathers need not have blushed to be compared.

Among the great public documents in our own history of which I am proud are the resolutions and declarations of the Massachusetts and other New England towns in the beginning of the Revolutionary war, when the people from their simple homes conducted the great debate of liberty. Among those documents still preserved, collected largely by the industry of our illustrious historian George Bancroft, more than one bear the signatures and are the composition of my own ancestors and kindred; and I have a personal pride in that ancestry and kindred which I would not exchange for anything of wealth or of honor this world has to bestow.

I hold in my hand the originals of the actions of 23 towns, and another Senator has produced others. When, only a few weeks ago, the demand of our Philippine Commission and of our military officer was presented to the people of the island of Cebu—that is an island, I understand, of seven or eight hundred thousand people, 150 miles, or thereabouts, from Manila—and it is the island which General MacArthur tells us is the most absolutely pacified and reconciled of the whole Philippine Archipelago.

The people of these towns were gathered by their mayors in their town halls or in the public squares, and discussed this question, vital to them and vital to the history of public liberty on earth as was ever question debated by our Revolutionary fathers, and here [exhibiting] signed by the men who participated in the meeting, and drawn up in each case by the secretary of the meeting, are the records of their proceedings. Every document is in a different handwriting from the others; every one is in a handwriting which marks the scholar, the man of intelligence, the man fit for government, as surely as the countenance of a human being ever marked the character of the man or represented the soul which was behind it.

The resolution which was passed is the same in each of these 23 towns, although the Spanish engrossment and the signatures vary. I wish Senators would look at these papers; I wish anybody who has allowed himself to get up, in the height of political excitement, and say here or on the stump that these men were a race of ignorant savages would come and see whether he can name 23 towns in his own State at this moment the secretaries of which in public meeting could have made a document looking like these. I can not name them in Massachusetts. There are not 23 Massachusetts cities of our 35 the result of whose deliberations would bring any more honor, either in form or substance, to their people than the result of these deliberations brings to this people.

Mr. President, I desire the Secretary to read—it is very brief—the translation of this answer to the demand that they surrender their liberties and submit to this despotism, unchecked, unparalleled on the face of the earth, either by czar or emperor, which was proposed to them by the American commission and the American military commander.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Translation in English of the following document, describing practically identical procedure in the island of Cebu in 23 towns.]

On July 5, 1900, the members of the muncipal council and prominent citizens, who represented the best interests of the town in the different branches of production and capital, assembled in the city hall of the town of Carmen, in the province of Cebu. These were called together by the mayor, in order to obtain the views of the townspeople on important affairs. It was called together by the mayor (jefe local), Señor Victoriano Buot, who declared the session open and stated the object of the meeting.

It was to give an answer to the wishes of the American military governor of this province, who, in an address to the mayors, invited the people of Cebu to state their opinions concerning the establishment of the new municipal régime. He (the military governor) also invited the people to express their desires in order to lay them before the American civil commission when they visited that province. The mayor, therefore, asked all the councilmen and citizens who were present to meditate over this in order to be united, for it was of the greatest importance as affecting the future of the country. For this reason he expressed his confidence that the assembled citizens would put aside all prejudice and dishonest purposes in giving their opinions.

The councilmen were well informed of the object of the meeeting and, after considerable deliberation, reached an agreement in their opinion and wishes, which was similar to that of their constituents. They expressed their views as follows:

1. That we desire the blessings of liberty and for this reason we aspire to the territorial and political independence of our country.

2. That we desire peace, order, and tranquillity, which are the fundamental principles of prosperity and thus do not agree to the establishment of a new municipal system which is not satisfactory to the people, for to recognize a sovereignty which the conscience repels is repugnant to reason, because we do not know what the American Congress will establish. If the system of government established should be detrimental to our interests, if not in harmony with our ideals, we could not conscientiously support such a government, which would certainly create much discord and unhappiness and would not bring permanence, peace, order, and tranquillity.

(3) That we are not only willing, but anxious for the betterment of affairs, and are willing to accept any honorable form of government within the sphere of liberty. We first want a cessation of hostilities and an organization of civil government, all the offices of which, including the judicial branches, shall be elected by the people and shall be Filipinos. In this way only can the future be determined in peace and concord.

(4) That we are desirous of the friendship of the Americans, whom we admire, because they are a people essentially democratic and besides have a good system of government, by which they have obtained peace, prosperity, and happiness. That we are desirous of having the principles of the Declaration of Independence applied to the Filipinos and of having the Constitution become the regulator of justice. That we desire to follow in the footsteps of the Americans.

The mayor having received these opinions, and no more questions remaining to be considered, adjourned the meeting, expressing thanks to the councilmen and citizens for their attendance. Those present then signed the paper, and the secretary certified it.

Documents similar to this are received from the town of—

Twenty-three towns in Cebu.

Mr. HOAR. The people of Cebu have not arms in their hands. There is no occasion to tell them that you will not parley with these people until they stop fighting. Like the 2,000 principal citizens of Manila, bankers and lawyers and doctors, who sent their respectful petition here a few weeks ago, they are quiet and peaceful. Can you not tell them that you mean, not to give them good government, but to respect their liberties and independence, instead of sending to them this despotism, the worst and most unchecked ever proposed on the face of the earth?

You are to send out Mr. Worcester and Mr. Taft and the rest, giving them a power which, in the height of his glory, the American people never would have trusted to George Washington; giving them a power which, as an examination shows, the American people did not for a moment intrust to Thomas Jefferson when Louisiana was purchased, although Louisiana was not a people, but was only a great waste place on the face of the earth, save for a few Indian tribes and a few French settlements, whose inhabitants were largely proposing to return to France.

This act of yours is to wipe out, if it be adhered to, the last hope that the example of the United States hereafter is to continue to work out its great result in the ideas and aspirations of the downtrodden people of the rest of the world. Down to this year or last year everywhere the world over, in Russia, in Austria, in the far East, in the islands of the sea, even in this distant archipelago, every poor man, every downtrodden man, every brave man who had an impulse toward freedom in his heart had heard, directly or indirectly, of the great liberty-loving people, where all men were equal and where no government of despotism could be permitted.

You are going to vote, as far as you can, in about ten minutes to wipe all that out now. You may talk about benevolent assimulation, or giving good government, or use all the other fine phrases that your ingenuity can invent, but your act is pure, simple, undiluted, unchecked despotism.

> In vain you call old notions fudge,
> And match your morals to your feeling;
> The Ten Commandments will not budge,
> And stealing will continue stealing.

Mr. President, I do not know how others may feel. But this is the faith in which I was born, in which I was bred, which came to me from my ancestors in every drop of my blood. It is the faith in which I hope to die, and it is the faith for which I am willing to die. Whatever it may be called—it may be called Quixotism, it may be called extravagance, it may be called enthusiasm, it may be called illusion—whatever it is, it is the inmost purpose and faith of my soul.

As the greatest intellect that ever lived on the soil of New England, perhaps the greatest that ever lived on American soil—a mighty genius to which that of Dante alone can be compared—said in the dark time of his life, so say I now:

> If such things are enthusiasm and the results of a distempered brain, let my brain be ever more possessed of that happy distemper. If this be distraction, I pray God that the world of mankind may all be seized with this benign, beneficial, beautiful, glorious distraction.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I shall not intrude on the Senate except for a brief while, as everybody is so anxious to come to a vote. During the speech of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] I called his attention to some statements of fact in the report of the Taft Commission in regard to mines and other matters in the Philippine Islands, and he asked me to present them to the Senate, but seemed to object to it being done then. I think these facts are of sufficient importance to go into the RECORD, and I want to call attention to only two or three paragraphs. I will have the rest published, if the Senate will permit me, at the end of the speech of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], as an appendix. I will merely read one or two small extracts from another part of the report. In order that the people of the country and Senators—for I am afraid a great many Senators are not familiar with these things—may know just what we are doing in the Philippines, I wish to direct attention to one remarkable statement. Listen to this:

The commission—

This is on page 36 of the report—

> The commission has made one large appropriation of $1,000,000, gold, by your direction, for the building of roads under the supervision of the military governor, and another appropriation of $1,000,000, gold, for carrying on the improvements of the Manila Harbor works. The improvement of the harbor can probably not be completed without the expenditure of at least a million and a half more, gold. The appropriation which the general superintendent of public instruction has recommended for school purposes for the coming year from the insular treasury will amount to more than $1,500,000 in gold.
>
> There is now on hand in the Treasury, not covered by appropriations, $2,500,000 in gold, and this sum will increase for the present at the rate of not less than $300,000 a month, if only the ordinary appropriations are made.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, let us have order.

Mr. TILLMAN. Some Senators are so much in haste to perpetrate this infamy, they are so cowardly in their purpose to obey the orders they have received, that they are indecent enough not to listen or allow others to do so.

Now listen again. I desire to ask any Senator here who is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs or of Military Affairs if he has known before that this condition exists in the Philippines?

> One very serious question which we desire to present to you, and upon which we have already had some correspondence, is whether the policy should not now be adopted of spending nothing from the public civil funds for purely military or naval purposes.

I hope the Senator from Maine, who is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, will listen to this and corroborate what I say. I will repeat it:

> Whether the policy should not now be adopted of spending nothing from the public civil funds for purely military or naval purposes. The amount spent for purely military and naval purposes in these islands from the 1st of July to the 15th of September is approximately $800,000 Mexican, or about $160,000 gold, a month.

Now, that Senator knows, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that we have lavishly appropriated for every naval expenditure that the Department has sent to us, and this bill which we are considering for Army appropriations carries with it itemized statements of every possible want of the Army and of our troops; and yet here we have a statement from the Taft commission that the Army and Navy have been spending over there something like eighteen hundred thousand dollars a year or thereabouts for merely "military and naval purposes."

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield to the Senator to corroborate what I said. As a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I never knew there was a dollar being spent for naval purposes in that country.

Mr. HALE. What country?

Mr. TILLMAN. In the Philippines, of course.

Mr. HALE. I supposed the Senator knew—he does know, because he is a member of the Naval Committee and a very prominent and able and active member of the committee—that a large portion of the Navy of the United States has been now for a year and a half or two years in the waters of the Eastern seas, and that the expenditures upon that branch of the service are entirely incident to the conditions in the Philippine Islands, and more lately by reason of the Chinese imbroglio. There is no question about that. I had occasion the other day to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the military budget, which includes all expenses appertaining to the military, both Army and Navy, and pensions, is nearly double that of any other great European power, except perhaps Great Britain, which is engaged in war.

Now, I do not quite see what the Senator is driving at, although he is ordinarily very clear, in raising this question. There is no doubt about the expenses that the United States Government has been put to by reason of the Navy in the Philippine Islands in the last two years. It has been a very great expense.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I will try to enlighten him. I thought he caught the drift of my purpose.

Mr. HALE. I did not. It is my fault, undoubtedly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Possibly it is mine. I will try to make myself understood. I was reading from the report of the Taft Commission, in which information is conveyed to the Secretary of War that of the revenues of the island paid into the treasury of General MacArthur, because it has been spent under his orders, there have been these sums spent for purely military and naval purposes, not under any appropriation from this Congress, while we have been called on to appropriate for every possible expense of both, and I do it to call attention to the extravagant and unnecessary expenditure of money wrung from a conquered people.

Mr. HALE. Now the Senator has brought out what is a new feature, and that is, that in addition to all our expenditures a portion of the revenues that have been collected by our authorities in the Philippine Islands have been expended for naval purposes.

Mr. TILLMAN. And for Army purposes.

Mr. HALE. And for Army purposes. The existence of that I did not know, and that is a new matter, to my mind. I did not suppose that the expenses that are incident to our appropriation and our conduct of our fleet and our armies were being supplemented by the revenues drawn from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will remind the Senator that the Naval Committee of the Senate was requested urgently to put on an appropriation of $250,000 for the development of a naval station at Cavite. We were told they had no money, and needed this.

Mr. HALE. It was for an investigation as to the desirability of a site——

Mr. TILLMAN. No.

Mr. HALE. And the location of it and the development of the site. Undoubtedly we were called upon for that.

Mr. TILLMAN. We are called on for many things in the naval bill, and I bear witness to the Senator's desire to scrutinize and reduce those appropriations. We did the best we could with the light before us, in order to give all the Navy needed—every dollar the Department estimated for and a good deal that they sent down as supplementary. I am merely directing attention to this arbitrary form of government, this new despotism of five autocrats or dictators who have been selected by the President of the United States and sent to the Philippines to inaugurate a so-called civil government, hitherto under the war power. Now, after we have got to that point where we are told we need civil goverment, we are brought face to face with the fact that instead of Congress taking up the question of civil government and legislating to give those people some rights in accord with our Constitution and system of government, we turn the whole thing over, like a pack of cowards, to five men to be appointed by William McKinley.

If there is any peace in Cebu and around Manila, and if we are to hope to have it in the whole archipelago, in the name of common sense and honesty and patriotism why do we not establish a civil government for the archipelago and let the outlying provinces that are in insurrection be brought under it as fast as they are subjugated? Why do we not begin the process of giving these people the boasted benefits of our liberty and our humanity and our civilization? Why do we turn our backs, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] so eloquently said a moment ago, on all the traditions of our Republic, upon all the inherited feelings of love for our institutions, to enter upon this departure?

The question of mines and franchises and public lands undoubtedly inspired the proposed amendment. The Taft report proves that beyond dispute. The Republican party was driven to surrender its purpose to give the disposition of those things over into the hands of this oligarchy or this despotism of five by accepting the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, itself amended at the suggestions of Senators on this side; and now that we have pulled the teeth, so to speak, of the hyena that you proposed to turn loose upon the vitals of the Filipino people, by limiting the powers of the Taft Commission, this travesty upon civil government, in the name of God and of decency—and I have no impious thought in my mind when I speak of the Deity in that connection—why do you not vote down this proposition and leave the President to continue, under the war power, to rule that country and be responsible, instead of letting Congress abdicate its functions and turn it over to five men to be appointed by him—or even one, because there is no limitation in this amendment? You simply say he shall appoint whom he pleases, if it be one, five, or fifty, and that all of the civil powers to be exercised there shall be under those men, or that one man.

Senators can not afford, after they have agreed to the amendment, even to vote for it. The whole thing ought to be killed. The Spooner amendment ought to be voted down. The amendment, even after amendment, ought not to go in, because, while it has in large measure improved the original devilment, the sting is there still; that is, that we, the Congress of the United States, will, like cowards, surrender to the President the power vested in us to insure to those people civil government of the kind and type to which we have been accustomed, and we do not in any sense add anything to our reputations as public men or as public servants when we do it.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question, merely. He spoke of this amendment as saving the public lands and mines and franchises, which it does. But what does it do for the property of the people who are there?

Mr. TILLMAN. It does nothing. They are left to the tender mercies of the five commissioners, who are now collecting $20,000,000 in taxes, as their report shows, and as I will have it printed in the RECORD, to show that their revenues are $20,000,000 a year, Mexican silver dollars. These men are turned loose to legislate and appropriate that sum to whatever purpose they see fit.

If it is not time for us to legislate and inaugurate a system of civil government for the Philippines, then we ought to leave the President and General MacArthur alone, because, as I said yesterday, we now have the honor of the Army standing between us and the infamies that are proposed to be perpetrated; but whenever military power is supplanted, and you give these five men, although they may be considered immaculate, this power, the temptation and the impossibility of resisting it on the part of the men they select will inaugurate a scheme of carpetbaggery and thievery there beside which, as I said, the darkest days of reconstruction in the South will pale into insignificance.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment of the committee be laid on the table.

Mr. LINDSAY. I hope that motion will not be made just at this time.

Mr. CARTER. I assumed that the debate had closed on the amendment to the amendment, but if it will be convenient to the Senator from Kentucky I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I do not intend to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. If the Constitution of its own force extends to the Philippine country, then the amendment is unnecessary. If the Constitution of its own force does not extend to the Philippine country, to extend it now with all its limitations would, in my opinion, embarrass the Government in securing to those people good civil government at this time and stand in the way of their ultimate independence, if they are to be ultimately independent.

I do not intend to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], which is the amendment of the committee, but not because I believe that amendment is necessarily unconstitutional. That amendment, in my opinion, is no more unconstitutional than the second section of the act of October 31, 1803, providing for the temporary government by the President and his appointees of the Louisiana Territory. That Territory was acquired in a treaty which provided that the people should be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution. The treaty of Paris has no such provision, yet I have not heard any one intimate that this provisional statute that applied temporarily to Louisiana was unconstitutional.

My objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is that it adds nothing to the security of the Philippine people, but that it opens a door which may lead, and probably will lead, to the grossest abuses of power. Administering the government under his authority as Commander in Chief of the Army, we understand and appreciate, and the President understands and appreciates, the limitations upon his general power. For Congress to clothe him with power in this language and to continue it for an indefinite period, no man can tell nor can the President tell the line of demarcation between the power granted and the power that would have existed if no such amendment had been attached to this bill.

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Without that amendment we know the limitations upon the powers of the President; with that amendment no man knows what those limitations are. I do not object that occasions arise when for a short period we must resort to such measures as this, as was the case in regard to the Louisiana Territory and the Florida Territory, but we have been the owners of the Philippines, the sovereignty has resided in us for more than two years; and yet when Congress comes to act, Congress, instead of defining the civil powers to be conferred on the President, instead of limiting the civil powers to be conferred on the President, instead of undertaking to prepare and form a plan of government by which the Filipinos are to be pacified, a civil government established, and the rights that inhere in every man, whether the Constitution applies to it or not, protected, turns the whole matter over to the discretion of the President.

I am not one of those who believe that personal rights grow out of the Constitution. I am not one of those who believe that personal rights can be sacrificed or disregarded because not within the protecting clauses of the Constitution. The rights of the American citizen existed before we had a Constitution. The rights of the Filipinos as individuals exist whether they have a constitution or not. I do protest that this Government, whatever its powers may be, ought not to undertake to deal with those people by clothing the President of the United States with all the sovereign powers of the great Government he represents.

I object to the amendment and I shall vote against it, because I believe it deprives these people of certain limitations, of certain protections which they now have, and that it is not calculated to lead to peace in the islands, but rather to aggravate the conditions which now exist.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have such respect for the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] on constitutional questions that I desire to ask his attention a moment in order that I may have the benefit of a more elaborate statement from him upon the question as to whether or not the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is or is not a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

The Constitution declares—and this proposition has been discussed by others in this connection—that the Congress shall have power to pass all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States. The amendment under consideration, proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, declares, not that Congress shall pass such rules and regulations as may be necessary, but, in effect, that the President of the United States shall pass such rules and regulations respecting the territory of the Filipinos as in his judgment may be proper.

The Senator from Kentucky declares his opinion to be that such an act of Congress as that, by which Congress abdicates its power to pass such rules and regulations for the Territories as may be needful, is not in violation of the organic law, and the only reason which he gave was that it was no more violative of the Constitution than the act of 1803. I call his attention, not that he is not already aware of it, but to impress upon him the matter which is in my own mind, to the fact that in the act of 1803 the President was not permitted to make rules and regulations for the government of the territory of Louisiana, but he was clothed with the power to appoint officers to execute existing law in Louisiana, which was the the Code Napoleon.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, was not that also intended for only two or three months?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. While we were taking possession?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. And not as a permanent government.

Mr. TELLER. It lasted five months and fourteen days.

Mr. CULBERSON. It was not only temporary, but there was an existing code in Louisiana known, as everyone is aware, as the Code Napoleon, and the act of Congress simply provided that the President was authorized to execute existing laws in Louisiana by the appointment of officers and not that he should usurp powers vested by the Constitution in the Congress of the United States, as in the Spooner bill.

Now, Mr. President, I have said I have such respect for the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky on constitutional questions that I would be glad to have him, if he sees proper, to elaborate why, in his opinion, the Spooner bill is not in violation of the Constitution.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, when I announced my intention to vote with the Senator from Texas against this objectionable legislation, merely by way of parenthesis saying that I was voting against it not because it was necessarily unconstitutional, but because it was objectionable whether constitutional or not, I I did not suppose that I would be called upon to amplify the reason I did not argue and the reason I did not assign as a controlling reason with me.

Now, then, it is true the Spanish and the French code was in force in Louisiana in 1803. It is also true that under international law the Spanish code, which is substantially the same code that was in force in Louisiana in 1803, is in force in the Philippines today.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator will permit me, the Spooner amendment does not authorize or direct or require the President to enforce existing laws in the Philippines.

Mr. TELLER. But to create them.

Mr. LINDSAY. There is nothing in the Spooner amendment that authorizes or requires the President to enforce the civil law that is now in force in that country. The language of the act of 1803 and the language of the Spooner amendment is substantially the same in every particular, so far as that is concerned. I say that the act of 1803 would have been an outrage on free government, not that there was a lack of power in Congress to declare it, but for the fact that it was to be temporary and provisional.

The objection to the Spooner amendment is that the government is not to be temporary and provisional. It is to act indefinitely until Congress shall choose to intervene. Now, let us see the language of the two enactments:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all military, civil, and judicial powers, exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same, shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct.

There was not a law in force that the President could not have modified, abrogated, suspended, if he had chosen to do it. These laws were to be administered as the President might direct, and all the power that Spain and France had possessed in Louisiana passed to us under the treaty of 1803. So it is with the Philippines. Whatever authority, whatever sovereignty Spain possessed in the Philippines has been transferred to the United States. Therefore, so far as the constitutional question is concerned, it is impossible to defend the constitutionality of one act and attack the constitutionality of the other.

I agree that Congress must make all regulations for the government of the Territories of the United States. But we have given to the term "Territories" something more, something broader, something more comprehensive than the mere description of geographical domain. If the Philippines are part and parcel of the United States, if the Constitution extends to the Philippines, then Congress must make the laws to regulate the government of that territory. I agree to that. But the question whether or not the Philippines have become an integral portion of the United States is a question about which men differ who are honestly endeavoring to discover what the constitutional obligations of the United States are and what the constitutional powers of the United States are. I shall not enter into that discussion now.

If this territory is territory in the sense of Louisiana, then the Spooner amendment applies to it the very identical law that was temporarily applied to Louisiana. If without the action of Congress the Constitution extends to all the Territories of the United States, including domain under the sense of territory, then Congress must make these rules. But I take a broader ground than that. Whatever the Supreme Court may decide, whether the Philippines be in or out of the United States, whether the Philippines constitute an integral portion of the United States in its geographical and political sense or are a mere dependency held at our sovereign will, still the Philippine people are entitled to have administered for their benefit all the principles of free and constitutional government.

They are entitled to liberty regulated by law, and when Congress undertakes to deal with the Philippines at all it is the duty of Congress to undertake to furnish to those people a system of government that will secure them in their individual rights, that will secure them in the enjoyment of the natural right to liberty, and will work out a condition of affairs that will prepare those people for self-government if they have the capacity to govern themselves. For that reason I do not object to this amendment. It does not undertake to do it. It undertakes to shift the responsibility upon the President, and I am not willing to give my acquiescence or my indorsement to such a plan of government.

Mr. CULBERSON. I repeat, Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States declares that Congress shall have power to pass all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States. That power is exclusively in the Congress, and by well-known rules of constitutional interpretation it may not delegate that power to any other tribunal or to any person. So far as I am concerned, if I believed that the act of 1803 was in violation of the Constitution it would not cause me to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin; because if in 1803 the Constitution should have been violated it is no reason or argument why we should do so at this time.

But, as already indicated, it occurs to me that there is a distinction, and a wide distinction, between the two cases, and repeating myself somewhat, I say the distinction rests upon the broad ground that in 1803 existing laws in Louisiana were simply ordered to be executed by the President, whereas in this case the President is authorized himself, and by deputed officials, to make such rules and regulations as in his judgment may be proper.

Passing from that, I desire to call attention, because that matter has not been particularly discussed on this side of the Chamber, to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I believe the only Senator on this side of the Chamber who discussed it at all was the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. In my opinion, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut is not only at variance with the plighted faith of the United States expressed in the declaration of war with Spain, but it is not in accord with the decision of the Supreme Court where the relations between the United States and Cuba were passed upon, though I do not intend to enter into any elaborate discussion.

Congress declared that the "people of the island of Cuba are and of right ought to be free and independent;" and yet, sir, the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut strips that people of some of the sovereign rights which they might exercise after they form a stable government for the island. It declares that before the United States will remove its military forces from that island the people there must submit to conditions imposed upon them by the United States. And what are some of those conditions? The first is that the people of Cuba shall be controlled in their public debt by the United States. It proposes, in the second place, that the people of Cuba shall be controlled as to the Isle of Pines by the United States. It proposes, in the third place, that the people of Cuba shall be controlled in all of their sanitary regulations by the United States.

Now, Mr. President, when we have in such important particulars as this declared that our Army and Navy shall not be withdrawn from that island until those people submit to our dictation in that respect, will they be a free and independent people, as the Congress of the United States has asserted they are and of right ought to be, if they accept the terms proposed?

Mr. President, we not only declare by threat of continued military occupation that they shall submit to be dependent upon us in some essentials of sovereignty instead of being a free and independent people, but in my opinion this amendment is at variance with the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Neely vs. Henkel, decided in January, 1901. I call attention to that case not with any hope that what I may say will influence anyone here, but to make this record more complete as to our views upon this particular question. In the opinion of the court, delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, he uses this language:

The legislative and executive branches of the Government, by the joint resolution of April 20, 1898, expressly disclaimed any purpose to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over Cuba, "except for the pacification thereof," and asserted the determination of the United States, that object being accomplished, to leave the government and control of Cuba to its own people. All that has been done in relation to Cuba has had that end in view, and so far as the court is informed by the public history of the relations of this country with that island, nothing has been done inconsistent with the declared object of the war with Spain.

Cuba is none the less foreign territory, within the meaning of the act of Congress, because it is under a military governor appointed by and representing the President in the work of assisting the inhabitants of that island to establish a government of their own, under which, as a free and independent people, they may control their own affairs without interference by other nations. The occupancy of the island by troops of the United States was the necessary result of the war. That result could not have been avoided by the United States consistently with the principles of international law or with its obligations to the people of Cuba.

It is true that as between Spain and the United States—indeed, as between the United States and all foreign nations—Cuba, upon the cessation of hostilities with Spain and after the treaty of Paris, was to be treated as if it were conquered territory. But—as between the United States and Cuba, that island is territory held in trust for the inhabitants of Cuba, to whom it rightfully belongs and to whose exclusive control it will be surrendered when a stable government shall have been established by their voluntary action.

And to this I particularly invite the attention of the Senate—

In the opinion of the Supreme Court, to epitomize this decision, it is declared that we have no business in the island of Cuba except for its pacification. It is said that after it is pacified it should pass into the exclusive control of the people of Cuba under a government which they may volutarily establish, not a government dictated by the United States by holding the Army and Navy there, under which circumstances the people of that island scarcely have a discretion, and under the provisions of a law by which the United States, after the government is established, would take part in the control of the affairs of the island.

Not only will we by the Spooner amendment undertake to destroy the liberties of the people of the Philippine Islands by placing them under a despotism, but by the amendment under discussion we propose a dishonorable seizure, finally, in my judgment, of the Island of Cuba, contrary to the plighted faith of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I desire to offer an amendment, which I ask may be read for information. I do not know whether it is in order now, but I desire to offer it, that it may be presented when in order. I ask the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to it, and I hope he will accept it. The purpose of the amendment is to limit this law until the 4th of March, 1903. In the meantime a Republican Congress may come in and again renew it if it sees proper. I see no possible objection there can be to the limitation. The amendment limits the operation of this law to the 9th of March, 1803, leaving in the words "until otherwise provided for."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 7, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert "until the 4th day of March, 1903;" so that the paragraph, if amended, will read:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until the 4th day of March, 1903, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct.

Mr. BACON. I hope the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I propose for a few moments to give a brief expression of the reasons why I can not support the pending amendment to the Army appropriation bill or the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in regard to Cuba. The proposition which has attracted most attention in this body is the one relating to the government for the Philippine Islands, and at the risk of being charged with unnecessary iteration, I will read the provision of the proposed amendment, because I believe that the provision can not too often be placed in the RECORD. It is in the following language, or at least so much of it as I consider pertinent to this discussion is:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Amendments which qualify some of the features of that proposition to some extent have been proposed and, I believe, have been accepted, but the main features of that proposition stand as I have read them.

What is the meaning of that language, Mr. President?

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands * * * shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct.

It means simply that the Congress of the United States is about to vest in the President a degree of power, military and civil, greater, probably, than that exercised by any other ruler—if I may apply such an expression to the President of the United States—of a civilized people, not even excepting the Czar of Russia.

Opposition to this proposition has been urged principally because the proposition is in itself unconstitutional and also because the policy which is there indicated is contrary to the principles and policy heretofore adhered to by the people of the United States.

I was surprised, Mr. President, to hear the very able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] a few moments ago give it as his opinion that there was no distinction to be drawn between this proposed enactment of Congress and that which has been referred to here so often, the act of 1803, whereby the President was empowered to enforce civil government in the Territory of Louisiana. I have great respect for the ability, the learning, and the capacity of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky; and I would hesitate with much diffidence to question any conclusion which that very able gentleman should reach on a question of law; but it appears to me that a very casual reading and comparison of the two propositions will demonstrate that they are not within the same sphere, that they are not at all analogous, and that a distinction very patent is borne upon the face of the two propositions.

The act of 1803, a portion of the language of which has been carefully copied in the proposed amendment to the Army bill, provides that—

Until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mr. President, it will be observed that there are very clearly indicated certain duties which these officers who are to be appointed by the President shall perform, namely, the duties and official powers which at that time were being exercised by the officers of the then existing government, and the President's power conferred by this enactment contains the limitation that he should appoint them for the express purpose of carrying out the law as it then stood in the Louisiana Territory. That was in keeping with that provision of the fourth article of the Constitution which declares that:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

Congress there makes the rules and regulations by adopting the laws which were then in existence in the Louisiana Territory, and simply authorizes the President to exercise the executive function of naming the men who are to perform the functions attached to those offices. That is not the case in this proposed amendment to the Army bill. There is here no limitation whatever upon the powers of the President. He is authorized to name all officers, civil and judicial, if we can accept the distinction that is here sought to be drawn between a civil and a judicial officer. He not only may name the officers, but he has the power under the grant given in this enactment to prescribe their powers, to prescribe their salaries and emoluments, to prescribe the jurisdiction of the courts, to prescribe the powers and duties of the various officers connected with the courts, and, in fact, to do all things which heretofore under our institutions have been prescribed and provided by the legislature.

If it is contended or claimed for an instant that the act of 1803 with regard to the Territory of Louisiana is any justification for such a proposition as the one to which I am referring, no one who will examine the two acts can for an instant be deluded into believing, if the act of 1803 was constitutional—and I believe it was in strict accordance with the provisions of the Constitution—that it can furnish any precedent whatever for such a proposition as this.

I shall not undertake to go into a discussion of the constitutional points involved in this question. They have been already very ably and exhaustively discussed, and I do not propose to consume any more time of the Senate than I can possibly help, referring to this very important matter, but, Mr. President, I come from a part of the country where men who are over 35 years of age have by hard experience learned to apprehend great danger from the exercise of irresponsible power.

It was our misfortune for ten years to have our State governments subjected to the will of irresponsible men; and to-day some of us are still striving to pay the burden of indebtedness which irresponsible power imposed upon the shoulders of a groaning people. It is with pain I refer to the memories of those days between 1865 and 1876; but the circumstances under which those wrongs—and there were many of them—were perpetrated were different from those under which this piece of proposed legislation will crush and trample under foot a defenseless and helpless people.

The people of the South in the days of reconstruction were an intelligent and capable and ambitious people; they were the brethren of the people of the North, and when the heat of anger, inspired by the great tragedy of 1861–1865 had passed away, the better feeling, the better sentiment of our brethren at the North asserted itself; and we were relieved, with the assent of a majority of the people of the North, from the condition in which reconstruction had placed us.

But here we were on the same continent, in juxtaposition to a people with whom we were connected by ties of kinship. But how is it in the case of the unfortunate people of the Philippine Islands? I do not pretend to say that those people are at this time capable of self-government. I am not sufficiently informed to say whether it would be wise to turn over to them the management of their own local affairs, but I do say that it would be a great wrong; it would be an injustice that the people of this country should be ashamed of, to deliberately, in cold blood, turn the millions of unfortunates in those islands over to the tender mercies of a horde of carpetbaggers from this country.

I do not wish to reflect upon the integrity of the Executive, or his wish or willingness to do anything else than what is strictly right, but, Mr. President, those islands are 10,000 miles distant from this Capitol; they are 7,000 miles distant from the nearest shores of the United States; it requires a month or more for communication by mail to pass between them and this country; and with an irresponsible government, with men who hold their positions, not according to law, not according to precedent, or principle, or republican government, but who hold their positions because of influence which they may be able to bring upon the Executive, and whose duties are prescribed by the Executive and those whom he chooses to designate for that purpose, the temptation for wrongdoing will, in my estimation, be so great that human nature itself will scarcely be able to resist.

The Taft Commission evidently anticipates some such possibility, because in its report to the Secretary of War it calls attention to the fact that much apprehension ought to exist as to the result of unlicensed and unrestrained power in those islands. After showing that, to a great extent, the officials heretofore holding office in the Philippine Islands were venal and easily led into corruption the report turns to the contemplation of the Americans who may go there, and uses this language:

> On the other hand, the Americans who come to these islands come eight or ten thousand miles, come with a venturesome spirit, come with the idea of amassing a competence by their stay in the islands. They are exposed in any important official position where there is opportunity for defeating the rights of the Government to constant temptations offered them by interested persons seeking to escape lawful burdens or to obtain fraudulent advantage, and who have no other conception of a public officer than of one who is to be reached by bribery if the sum offered be large enough.
> Men may leave the United States honest, but with the weakening of moral restraints of home associations and with the anxious desire to make so long a trip result successfully in a pecuniary way, demoralization and dishonesty are much more likely to follow than at home.

Surely, Mr. President, the experience of mankind from the days of the Roman Empire to the present time will justify that apprehension; surely the experience that we have had in this country in comparatively recent years is sufficient to put us on our guard against placing such absolutely irresponsible power in the hands of irresponsible men.

Yet it is our mission, so we are told, and it is our purpose to carry the blessings of religion, of civilization, and all the blessings of our republican system of government into those benighted islands. I sadly fear that if this bill becomes a law the unhappy people of those islands will have even a stronger reason to look upon the American—not merely the American soldier but the American citizen—as an enemy.

The proposition which I understand has been accepted, and which will constitute a part of this proposition when it becomes a law, to the effect that there is a restriction upon the alienation of public lands and upon the sale of franchises and mining rights, if adopted will, to a great extent, undoubtedly relieve the measure of some of its objectionable features, as has already been said upon this floor. But there remains the fact that the people of the United States, acting through Congress, unsatisfied with the management of affairs through the power exercised by the President as the military chief of the country, deliberately transfers to him in an extra constitutional form a power which heretofore has never been enjoyed by any President of the United States—a power which, in the opinion of a very large element of the legal fraternity of this country, is absolutely and unqualifiedly unconstitutional.

The legislative power is vested in the Congress of the United States, and the Congress of the United States acquires that legislative power from the Constitution of the United States; and yet we are called upon here, for the purpose of conferring upon the President a power which the Constitution confines exclusively to the Congress of the United States, to surrender without a protest, almost in the closing hours of a short session of Congress, the great right of legislation.

Mr. President, were it in my power I would oppose the enactment of this proposition into law so long as I was able to stand upon my feet in this body. That, however, I take it, would accomplish but little, because we have already had a sufficient earnest of the disposition of the majority of this body to pass this measure by the action which it took two days ago with regard to the question of order which was raised as to the proposition. It has been by a party vote of the Senate declared a piece of legislation which it is competent to pass in connection with this bill; and I take it, Mr. President, that if the opponents of the measure should resort to an extraordinary effort to talk it to death it ultimately would nevertheless become a law.

At all events, viewing it that way, I desire to say that I shall content myself with thus putting in my protest against it. As a piece of legislation it is certainly very extraordinary, and I do not think there is any question that it has been attached to this amendment, or at least it has been placed in a position where it can be considered as a possible amendment, in the face of one of the standing rules of the Senate, which has been overthrown for that purpose. I greatly fear that, having reached that point in its progress, it will be carried on and attached to this bill and become an enactment of the Congress of the United States in spite of the Constitution and the principles of our Government.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Relations with Cuba, and as a member of the subcommittee of four which drew the amendment that was presented by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], I consider it my duty to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, as well as to the public, to give the reasons why I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut to the pending bill.

Preliminary to my reasons for so acting, I desire to say that I do not believe there is a member of this Senate who has worked harder and done more for the cause of Cuban independence than myself. This is no boast nor vaunt, but the simple fact, as I believe. Four years ago I wrote a magazine article, in which I argued that the right and duty of the United States existed for an armed intervention in the affairs of Cuba. I proved to my own satisfaction, at least, that the laws of the United States permitted us by an armed intervention to protect the property of American citizens, being destroyed at that time by the Spaniards, and also the enormous business which was enjoyed there and which was being demolished.

Later on I visited Cuba more than once. I went its length and breadth. I visited the camps of the reconcentrados and the hospitals. I saw the infinite distress and unspeakable misery of that people, and I changed my base and I declared war in my own heart against the power of Spain because of humanity. No man was more anxious to secure the entire independence of Cuba than myself. I have never omitted a proper occasion to make that statement here and elsewhere, and I never shall. I recollect a Spanish proverb, Mr. President, which says, "If you can not have what you like, try to like what you have."

The subcommittee met with very, very diverse views, but there was a spirit of concession and moderation manifested on both sides because the extreme necessity for some action was apparent to all. Above everything I did not desire that that island should remain until next December in the hands of the United States. I wanted the troops withdrawn from the garrison towns of the island of Cuba. I desired the people should begin the experiment of self-government in their own way.

I have had a good deal of correspondence with people in Cuba, people who have had opportunities and have had the sagacity to entertain and form opinions. I have long since felt—while I have never doubted the capacity of any people to govern themselves in their own way, either good or ill, not considering myself responsible for good government or ill government anywhere, not for good or bad religion anywhere, or good or bad philosophy, or true or untrue ideas anywhere, except for myself and those I represent in part—I have felt growing upon me all the time that to withdraw the United States from the island might lead to conflicts there which would in the beginning of the new republic shake it to its foundations.

I recognize also that our own country, born in the throes of a revolution, and all other countries that have had their origin by the sword, have been subject to the same experience and have experienced the same danger, some with capacity to overcome all obstacles, to assert the power of self-government and to maintain it, and others that have been constantly in a state of revolution and conflict. I believe that Venezuela has had 82 revolutions in eighty years, and there is not a Spanish-American colony from the Rio Grande to Patagonia that has not been afflicted with revolutions and their pronunciamentos. The people of Cuba are, in my opinion, more competent than any of the Spanish-American colonists on this continent, and I hope at least for them a good and prosperous future.

Now, with these preliminary remarks I am going to examine the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and let us see to what objections it is amenable. The first one goes on to recite what is well known as the Teller amendment, declaring that Cuba is and of right ought to be free and independent. The first thing is this—and mind you, this is a suggestion to the Cuban convention now in session—that they either incorporate in their constitution or put in an ordinance to be appended thereto, certain provisions which are declared by us to be necessary for the good of both countries and to secure the independence, ultimate and continuous, of Cuba. The first provision is:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

Will any gentleman who undertakes to vote against this amendment say he objects to that? It carries with it, in short space, the only two points in the Monroe doctrine as declared by Monroe in 1822. Furthermore, in 1852, when Great Britain and France invited the United States into a convention to secure the peace and tranquillity of this island and to secure in perpetuity its possession by Spain, the United States promptly declined any such convention, declaring that those two countries were not to be admitted into the settlement of a purely American question, and furthermore saying the time might arrive when the United States themselves might deem it to their best interest and the interest of Cuba to bring that island within our territory.

The second clause is:

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government shall be inadequate.

That proviso, I think, if understood would not be objected to, not even by the Cubans themselves. We had the spectacle before us of Mexico held to-day in the grip of Great Britain because of the fifty millions loaned way back in 1826, by which to-day the import duties of the port of Vera Cruz and the ports on the Pacific are held by the British Government as security—hypothecated for the payment of the interest upon that fifty million loan. We could not permit any Government to hold up Cuba in that manner. We have the example of Egypt, which to-day is under the fiscal control of Great Britain because of her great indebtedness to that country.

It is not necessary to say that when a country endeavors to secure its debt it will not scruple at the ways and means of doing it, and a threat from the United States probably would lead to more than that. If a country like Great Britain or Germany had loaned money for improvements, for everything that would go to the betterment of the island, and then the island was unable to pay its indebtedness, they would seize its ports and customs in order to secure the interest upon the debt, and our intimate relations, to be more intimate hereafter, having given us almost the total trade of Cuba, we are not willing to have it taken from us. I do not believe a Senator present who will vote upon this proposition will object to that clause.

The next is:

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

That proposition, I want to say frankly, I did not like; but it was the best that could be done, and I would rather have this amendment passed, to be considered by the Cuban convention and to be afterwards made permanent by treaties, than to see the United States continue to be the possessor of Cuba, holding her people in a state under which they are already chafing. If I had my way, and I so advised the Executive, three months after the late war there would not have been an American soldier upon the island of Cuba. I do not believe matters have been bettered by their stay there. The conflict would have been over. The several political parties, among which the Cuban people are divided, would have gone into the cutting of throats, and there would have been a bloody time for two or three years, and then a settlement by the help of the United States, which in any case must be invoked. We all very well know that we would not submit to a continued war in Cuba, that would devastate her cane fields and her tobacco fields and destroy our business with her.

In 1826 the United States of Colombia and the United States of Mexico proposed to the American Government (Mr. Clay then being Secretary of State) that they two should fit out an expedition to raise the standard of revolt in Cuba against Spain, as other colonies had done under the yoke of Spain, and Mr. Clay remarked that this country would not permit it; that our business was too great to be interrupted by a devastating war; and the two countries since then have charged us with being an obstruction in the way of Cuban liberty.

The next one is:

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

I do not know that there is any objection to that; at least I see none whatever. There have been concessions, perhaps, we know not of, but as far as I am informed they have been made by the military governor with circumspection. There are contracts there, however, that were let out by the Secretary of War, which are not mentioned in this instrument and to which I would most seriously object. They are matters that should have been investigated and brought to public attention. I think when they are, or if they ever are, they will be found to be about the biggest job ever perpetrated anywhere. The fifth article says:

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised, or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the Southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator passed over the third clause of the amendment, which has reference to Cuba.

Mr. MONEY. No; I did not.

Mr. CLAY. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, no. I commented on it at length.

Mr. CLAY. I was going to say the Senator had passed from it.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; I have passed from it.

Mr. CLAY. Take the amendment, in clauses 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and I have no objections to those subdivisions. I am willing to support them: but you take the third——

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator did not hear me, I will just tell him that I did take the third, and object to it.

Mr. CLAY. That is all right. I did not hear him.

Mr. MONEY. There is nothing like hearing what a man says.

Mr. SPOONER. What did the Senator from Mississippi say? I did not hear it.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator said he objected to the third clause.

Mr. MONEY. I said I objected to the third clause because it did not give, as I thought, unlimited independence to Cuba; but that I took it as the best that could be had, and that it was very much better than allowing the United States troops to stay there another year, and that I would vote for it if I had a vote. I am paired.

Mr. SPOONER. I could not hear the Senator. That is the only reason I asked him.

Mr. MONEY. I do not mind interruptions. I would rather be interrupted than not.

This provision with respect to sanitation is a matter about which the people of my State are very much concerned. I have had them over and over again tell me that the Teller resolution was a mistake; that we ought to have taken possession of Cuba as a war indemnity, for the purpose of protecting the people of the Southern States from the infection of yellow fever.

I desire to say that it is possible by sanitary regulations to make these yellow-fever plague spots innocuous. During the whole of the last century there was not a single epidemic of yellow fever in Cuba, although we had it in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, and Charleston, where it raged with great virulence, because they happened to have a series of captain-generals who had devoted themselves to the betterment of the cities on the south side, which are the homes of yellow fever. Yellow fever is not a Cuban disease. It is an African disease, brought there by slave traders, and is not indigenous to Cuba by any means. I suppose that this clause will not be objected to by any man in the Cuban convention. They are anxious that sanitation shall be had. Without it yellow fever will continue to infest the people of the United States, and we will be powerless, without some arrangement with the Cuban people on this point, to protect ourselves.

I have been along the first yellow-fever district, so called, in the city of Habana. The houses are six or seven steps below the street. The streets have risen by the continued accumulation of nearly one hundred years of offal, with no pavements; grimy, green cesspools all over it everywhere, and the people cadaverous and pale, looking underfed and underkept. There yellow fever does manifest itself. I have been along the second district, the great quarries, fronting the Gulf, and the great Gulf stream flowing at the rate of 4 miles an hour, where the offal of the city has been dumped in these quarries to fill them up and after a while the city extended over them. That is the second yellow-fever plague spot; and these places can be intelligently dealt with, and proper sanitary regulations will make them no longer the home of yellow fever.

Plans have been devised by American engineers, and I understand it will take about $28,000,000 to complete them, but whether or not they are adopted, this should be a matter of mutual agreement, because we are just as deeply concerned in it as the people of Cuba themselves. As a matter of fact, the people of Cuba are very little concerned about yellow fever. They do not have it in the country districts. In the cities it is endemic, but not epidemic, and it does not every year become an epidemic.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to make a single remark?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] this afternoon objected to these words:

Or other plans to be mutually agreed upon—

As exercising some sort of control on the part of the United States. I want to say that that clause was put there especially for the benefit of the people of Cuba. Plans have already been devised, and they are very expensive and very thorough, and we thought in committee that we ought scarcely to hold them up to the execution of these expensive plans if other plans, which they might suggest, could be devised which would be less expensive. That clause was put there for the benefit of the people of Cuba.

Mr. MONEY. That is true.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague is not present, but as I understood him, the clause to which he especially objected was clause 3.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This was one of them.

Mr. BERRY. I know he stated he was going to move to strike out clause 3, and his principal objection was based upon clause 3. He may have objected to others.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Connecticut has given the explanation of the argument around the committee board, and which prevailed, because the plans were considered a little too expensive for the revenues of a new government just beginning its career, and therefore "plans to be mutually agreed upon" was inserted instead; and it is because the United States has more interest in this question than Cuba has that we have asked them to allow us to participate in a plan to be devised for the protection of both countries against yellow fever.

You may go in all the three western provinces of Cuba and you will not find a case of yellow fever in twenty years. If you go into the cities you will find it. There is not a healthier country on earth than Pinar del Rio, Matanzas, and Habana provinces, and you might say the same perhaps of Principe, which is a cattle country. This clause is the last one to which, I think, a man living in a country subject to yellow fever should object.

I want to say now, by way of explanation, betraying no secrets, that I was permitted to consult certain gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, and I never heard a single objection from one of them until the matter came up for discussion. They all agreed to it—every solitary man of them with whom I talked.

Mr. BERRY. Every one with whom the Senator consulted.

Mr. MONEY. I said that. It does not apply to those I did not consult.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state that I was not one of those consulted, and I objected to clause 3 specifically when I first saw it.

Mr. MONEY. Of course, my remark was not intended for the Senator from Arkansas, but to those with whom I did consult. A few were named who were to be consulted, and I was asked to do so, and I did so, and I had their consent to all these clauses. I do not reflect upon those gentlemen. They have a right to change their minds when they examine further into these things. That is a liberty I take myself, even with my own work—to revise it. I do not blame them at all for it. But I am trying to give the reasons which will actuate me in supporting the amendment to which I was a party and to the reporting of which I consented. I can do that, at any rate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me to say that he did not consult with me; but I agree with a great deal that is in the report.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to say to the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Arkansas that I should have been very glad to have consulted both of them, but the time was exceedingly short.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator was not under any obligation to consult anybody except his colleagues on the committee.

Mr. MONEY. I consulted my colleague, and there were one or two others I did consult, and they all agreed. As I said before, all are at liberty to change their minds as often as they please, men as well as women.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not changed my mind, because I had not an opportunity to make it up until the report came in.

Mr. MONEY. If I had consulted the Senator from South Carolina and he had agreed to it and had changed his mind, that would be his business, and I would not find fault with him.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not change my mind that quick, Mr. President.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me? While we are all here at the confessional table I want to say that I did not approve of the amendment, and I do not approve of anything that is in it which trenches on the independence of Cuba. We promised to make them free and independent; that is the amount of it, and we are not doing it.

Mr. MONEY. That is just exactly the feeling I have entertained all the time. I have changed my mind; not that I have changed my feelings, but I must get something for their relief.

Now, the question is whether it is better to have this or to permit the occupation of Cuba by military force any longer, certainly as long as next winter, and we do not know how much longer. In the meanwhile, the constitutional convention having framed their organic law, and in great part in accordance with suggestions from this country, from people in authority, what will they think of us if something is not done here? I could not get all I wanted; the gentlemen on the other side could not get all they wanted; and we met each other in a spirit of concession, feeling that something must be done, and we have done the best we could under the circumstances. We can all have opinions about Cuba, and I am as stout as the Senator from Alabama, who, I know, never gives way an inch under any circumstances, in saying I most devoutly hope that some day Cuba will find herself as independent in every respect as she is intended to be in this respect.

Who has been sovereign in Cuba in the last two years, according to the law of nations and the practice of nations? The Government of the United States of America. The consuls of foreign countries to Cuban ports are accredited here and get their exequaturs from the Secretary of State. So the United States Government has been, according to the law of nations, the de facto sovereign. The de jure sovereign is the great body of the population of the island of Cuba. The real sovereign de facto has been the President of the United States.

I did not want that to go on any more. I did not believe it was a responsibility he ought to be permitted or suffered to carry any longer. He has shown a disposition to put the matter before Congress and have them act upon it in order that he might be relieved, and I am willing that he shall be, and I am willing to take my part of the responsibility of relieving him. The sixth clause is:

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

The constitution of the Cuban republic recites that the limits of the territory shall be Cuba and the islands that surround it, not mentioning the Isle of Pines, which is 40 miles to the nearest land and 60 miles to the nearest port. The United States some months ago declared that the Isle of Pines belonged to us by the treaty of Paris. Whether it does or not, it is of very little worth to either of us.

The Isle of Pines, 1,200 acres, one half of which is an impassable bog and the other rolling lands, running up to 1,500 feet; of barren sands and pines, with magnificent mineral waters, is the healthiest island in the world, but it is not productive. When all the other islands in the West Indies had been occupied by Europeans that remained unoccupied, the home of the buccaneer and the pirate of the Spanish Main until driven off, when the island came under the control of the Captain-General of Cuba, and they made it a penal colony for political offenders and after a while for offenders of another character. So it is to-day—a penal colony.

Why should we treat with them about that? Because that is the nearest island to the mouth of the Nicaragua Canal. Jamaica is only 450 miles. The Isle of Pines is a little farther. It can not be said to be a base of supplies, but it can be a depot of supplies, and in any occupation of the waters of the Caribbean by our fleet or by other fleets of the world in contesting for supremacy over that canal this island will be found very valuable to the United States and of very little worth to the island of Cuba. Cuba no longer needs a penal colony, because banishment is not a punishment known to modern republics.

The seventh is:

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

We have spent a great deal of blood and treasure in the war to redeem Cuba from Spain. We need above everything else, perhaps, harbors and coaling stations to a limited number on the coast of Cuba on both sides. Thomas Jefferson once said that he was opposed to any extension of the territory of the United States to islands, because they would require a great navy to protect them, and he did not want that, but he said: "I except from that the island of Cuba, which rounds out well our country and supplies us with harbors which we lack on the Gulf coast, and because it commands the great commerce of the Mississippi Valley; but on its farther shore I would put up a stone and engrave thereon 'Ne plus ultra.'"

The last clause is as follows:

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

It would be worthless without that.

Now, Senators, I have read this amendment, paragraph by paragraph, and I have stated my objections to it, and yet my determination to support it, because it is the best I can do, and nobody can do better. I appeal to Senators on this side, Is it better or worse than the occupation of the island until next winter, at least, by the Army of the United States and the Navy of the United States and to have the constitution of a people whom we have invited to make a constitution, when they have made it, stand in abeyance and the people still be subject to the military occupation and rule of the United States?

As to civil administration, that seems to be going on fairly well, but still it is under military rule, subject to it in every respect. Now, these are my reasons for supporting this amendment. I do not know that I will support the bill if the amendment prevails.

Mr. President, I wish to address myself very briefly, and unexpectedly, I will state, to the other amendment, called the Spooner amendment, concerning the Philippine Islands. I had no intention of speaking to that point, but there has been such a continual and concerted attempt to make out a resemblance, in fact a replication of the treaty of 1803, that gave us Louisiana Territory, that I want to point out, if I can, a little more fully than has been done yet the difference between the two.

During the last campaign I had Democrats come to me and say, "Here, Mr. So-and-so made a speech the other day, and he said it was exactly a copy of the law of Congress authorizing the President to take possession of and govern the Territory of Louisiana." "Well," I said, "it is not true." Then some one would meet me with a newspaper which said it was exactly the same thing. I would say this is certainly one of the mendacities of the campaign or the product of crude, crass ignorance on this subject.

As a matter of fact, they are nothing alike, for the reasons which have been pointed out, and for another reason which has not yet been given, I believe. It is unpleasant for me to thrash over old straw and go over ground that other gentlemen have gone over much more fully and ably and learnedly than I can do, but one of the substantial differences is the circumstances that surround the two propositions.

In the treaty with Napoleon the President of the United States was authorized to appoint certain men to offices already established, with a civil code—not the Napoleon code, but a civil code—that had been established for sixty-five years. The offices were already established, the salaries fixed, the duties were fully and clearly defined, and the responsibilities were fixed and bond had to be given. Every check and guard that could be devised were placed around them, because the English common law and the statutory law of the several States and the United States are not so strict as the laws of Spain. That is one difference.

Another difference is this. When we ratified the Spanish treaty a resolution was presented and voted on and carried by the dominant party which declared that the land of the Filipinos, the archipelago, was not and should not become a part of the United States, and the people living therein were not and should not become citizens of the United States. With respect to the cession of Louisiana Mr. Jefferson, in his message to Congress congratulating them upon their acquisition, used these words:

> On this important acquisition, so favorable to the immediate interests of our Western citizens, so auspicious to the peace and security of the nation in general, which adds to our country territories so extensive and fertile and to our citizens new brethren to partake of the blessings of freedom and self-government, I offer to Congress and our country my sincere congratulations.

There is the vital difference. Not only that, but this power to appoint officers was limited to that session of Congress, unless sooner provision was made, and sooner provision was made. In four and a half months laws were provided dividing the territory into the District of Orleans and the Territory of Louisiana, and provision was made a year later by which the two could come into the Union when they had 60,000 inhabitants. They exercised from the very beginning of their allegiance to the United States all the rights of any citizen of the United States, wherever he might be in a State or Territory.

These were the facts that surrounded the two people. How was it as to the Philippines? Just as I stated a while ago, the two propositions are so antagonistic that it is impossible for me to see how a man can compare them at all. Never before in the history of this country has an attempt been made to subject people to the sway of the United States without at the same time investing them with the privileges and the rights and the liberties enjoyed by the citizens of the United States. We have paid no regard to the Filipinos. We have declared that the Constitution does not exist there. If it does not exist there, then we have no army there, and they are a mob of freebooters. Every commission carried by any officer is after swearing true allegiance to the Constitution of the United States. Some one said to-night that the Constitution was not there, and it was argued by my able friend from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] that there were certain rights that people have inherently and inalienably.

Now, I want to say that the Constitution of the United States, which is the Government of the United States, or the creator of the Government of the United States, did not contain a bill of rights when it was passed by the convention, and such men as Sam Adams, of Massachusetts, and Richard Henry Lee, Patrick Henry, and Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, and other great heroes of the Revolution declared their unalterable opposition to that instrument for the reason, to use Jefferson's words, that it had a vital lack of a bill of rights, and the several States proposed the ten amendments, which were adopted, and which contain the bill of rights.

Of course it might be said that the people in every country have certain inalienable rights; but they are not governed by inalienable rights, but by government. This nation can do what another nation can do, it is true, but it does it in a prescribed way. That way is prescribed through a Constitution, and its provisions and its limitations. Then, if one of these inherent powers choose to do something else not consonant with that Constitution, they are allowed by provision engrafted therein by their own power to do it if they change it in the manner prescribed. So the nation, whatever may be its inherent right as such, can change the Constitution; and that is the only mode of governing itself and of governing others.

No provision is made anywhere in the Constitution that we are to govern any but ourselves. It was made for the people of the United States. It says that it is the law of the land:

> This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.

What land? Any land where the United States has authority; on the deck of ships at sea, in foreign capitals, in any land where the United States holds up the ensign of authority. That is the place where the Constitution prevails, and the proposition that we can carry it there by an act of Congress is, to my mind, one of those legal absurdities not to be entertained at all. Congress does not exist but by the Constitution, and that the creature can be greater than the creator, that the creator will not exist without the permission of the creature, is something preposterous.

Now, what do we propose to these people in the Philippines? It has been stated here over and over again in this discussion, and I have no desire to repeat it or to detain the Senate. It has been repeated here over and over again. There is no proposition here for the benefit of the people of the Philippines. The proposition is for somebody else, always somebody else, and the Constitution is set at naught that somebody else may profit by the sort of government that will prevail under this amendment, or what is called the Spooner bill.

Human nature is the same everywhere. We recollect the example of Crossus in Asia Minor, Varres in Sicily and we recollect the more recent example of Clive and of Warren Hastings in India. Every colonizing country on earth, or country that has had other nations in subjection that we know of, if history can tell the truth, shows that it has been the fountain and source of all corruption and that it destroyed the ancient republics of the world. Greece existed in unmitigated splendor, and she colonized as much as any nation that ever lived, but never in any instance did she attempt to retain rule over her colonies, for she was as careless of them when they left her swarming country as the mother hive is of a swarm of bees that leaves. That was because the Greek was individual. But Rome was not individual. She undertook to extend her dominion over all of her colonies. The result was that corruption overthrew the mighty power of Rome.

Now, Mr. President, with this amendment called the Spooner amendment, even with this modification upon the bill, it will be impossible for me to vote for it, having due regard to my conscience and my oath. Of course the measure will pass. You have the majority to pass it. But I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], because I believe that is the very best thing that can be done under the circumstances. It is not as good, probably, as it should be. I want to say, also, that I believe the Cuban convention will consider it just as we have, and will agree to every one of its provisions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8068) authorizing the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., to issue fifty-year 5 per cent bonds of Pima County, Ariz., to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13705) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 8, 9, 10, 24, 25, 26, 39, 40, 42, 60, 61, 65, 67, 79, 80, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, and 89; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. CUMMINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9829) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, and manufactures and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. STEELE, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902; further insists upon its disagreement to amendments numbered 2 and 3, upon which the committee of conference were unable to agree; agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. SWANSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 3205) for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 5978) authorizing the Attorney-General, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to appear in suits brought by States relative to school lands;

A bill (H. R. 6146) for the relief of the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased, and of Lebbeus H. Rogers;

A bill (H. R. 6204) for the relief of Olivia M. Clifford;

A bill (H. R. 11820) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 11821) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (S. R. 163) regulating licenses to proprietors of theaters in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 74) authorizing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the San Antonio International Fair and at the Texas State Fair and Dallas Exposition, to be held in the cities of San Antonio, Tex., and Dallas, Tex., to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

OLIVIA M. CLIFFORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 2471) for the relief of Olivia M. Clifford returned by the House to the Senate at its request.

Mr. TELLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs as amended.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This afternoon when I was addressing the Senate I asked unanimous consent to have certain papers printed as a document. I supposed the request was granted, but as there is some doubt about it I now renew it. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] also asked that certain similar papers which he had should be made a part of the document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota that the papers he referred to and the papers referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts shall be printed as a document?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not object except where there are 20 or 30 papers all in the same language. There is no need of reprinting them if one is printed and the signatures. I suppose that is all the Senators desire. I do not know whether they are translated or not, but I notice that they are all the same.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the translation printed. Where they are alike one of the documents will answer, of course. I do not want to have them repeated in the print.

Mr. PETTIGREW. All those I presented were different. I presented six or seven, all different in the statement and in the matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I only make the suggestion that duplicates should not be printed, if that course is agreeable.

Mr. PETTIGREW. But the signatures shall be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. The signatures, in all cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from South Dakota now is that the papers presented by him, and also those presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, duplicates not being printed, shall be printed as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. All in one document?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In one document.

Mr. CULLOM. With the signatures?

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the signatures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The motion was reduced to writing in the form of a resolution, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the municipal governments of the island of Cebu, Philippine Islands, protesting against the establishment of American civil government therein, be translated into English and printed as a document, together with a facsimile of all the signatures thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the amendment to the amendment read.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read, and then let us have the yeas and nays on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I think the motion to lay it on the table has been withdrawn.

Mr. BERRY. That motion has been withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 15, after the word "same," insert:

And provided further, That no judgment, order, nor act by any of said officials so appointed shall conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] demands the yeas and nays on this vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not see him present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer that to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER], and I ask that that pair may remain on all votes on this bill. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. We have transferred those pairs so that we can both vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is agreeable. I vote "nay."

Mr. RAWLINS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is temporarily absent, and that he is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "yea."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. WETMORE] is detained from the Senate. I supposed he was paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I was just about to announce my pair. I did not know until I heard the recapitulation of the vote that he had not voted. In the absence of the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], I withdraw my vote and announce my pair with him.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bate,	Culberson,	McLaurin,	Teller,
Berry,	Harris,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Turley,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,
Clay,	Kenney,	Rawlins,
Cockrell,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,

NAYS—45.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Scott,
Allison,	Foraker,	McComas,	Sewell,
Bard,	Foster,	McCumber,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Frye,	McMillan,	Simon,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.	Warren,
Cullom,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Kearns,	Pritchard,
Dillingham,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Dolliver,	Lindsay,	Quarles,

NOT VOTING—18.

Allen,	Depew,	Mason,	Vest,
Bacon,	Elkins,	Money,	Wellington,
Baker,	Hale,	Morgan,	Wetmore.
Clapp,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Daniel,	McBride,	Sullivan.

So Mr. VEST's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAWLINS. I offer an amendment to come in after the last proviso of the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after the amendment of the committee, known as the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], add the following:

Provided further, That the Government of the United States declares that it is its purpose and intention not to retain or exercise permanent control or sovereignty over the Philippine Islands, but only to the extent necessary to secure their pacification and the establishment of a stable government therein by their people; and upon the accomplishment of these ends, and after securing by amicable arrangement suitable naval, military, and coaling stations, and proper guaranties for the safety of those who have adhered to the United States and for the performance of the treaty obligations of the United States to other nations, the Government of the United States intends to withdraw from the said islands and leave the government and control thereof to their own people, and the powers hereinbefore conferred upon the President and the persons selected by him are to be exercised to the ends herein provided.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RAWLINS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement already stated between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and myself I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. I make that announcement on this and also make it on all other votes on these amendments.

Mr. RAWLINS (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] desired me to announce that he is unable to be present, but that he is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and withdraw my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] is still absent, and I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. SCOTT. My colleague [Mr. ELKINS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. If he were here, he would vote "nay" on this proposition. By the transfer of pairs he stands paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] if he has voted?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; I made the announcement of the transfer of our pairs.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allen,	Clay,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,
Bate,	Cockrell,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Culberson,	Mallory,	Teller,
Butler,	Harris,	Martin,	Tillman,
Caffery,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Turley,
Chilton,	Hoar,	Pettus,	Turner.

NAYS—45.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Scott,
Allison,	Foraker,	McComas,	Sewell,
Bard,	Foster,	McCumber,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Simon,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.	Warren,
Cullom,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Kearns,	Pritchard,
Dillingham,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Dolliver,	Lindsay,	Quarles,

NOT VOTING—19.

Bacon,	Elkins,	Mason,	Sullivan,
Baker,	Hale,	Money,	Vest,
Clapp,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Wellington,
Daniel,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Depew,	McBride,	Quay,

So Mr. RAWLINS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTUS. I propose an amendment to the bill and I ask for a vote on it by yeas and nays, unless it is accepted by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, strike out all that part of the bill from line 3 to line 15, both inclusive, and insert the following section:

SEC. —. That the Constitution of the United States is hereby extended over and declared to be in force in the Philippine Islands so far as the same or any provision thereof may be applicable.

Mr. PETTUS. That is not the amendment. It is the amendment to support the Constitution of the United States, simply and alone.

Mr. HOAR. Is that amendment amendable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama has not yet found the amendment he desires to offer.

Mr. BACON. Pending that, there is an amendment to the amendment on the table, offered by myself, that I should like to have considered.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 7, after the word "shall," insert "until the 4th day of March, 1903;" so that if amended the clause will read:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until the 4th day of March, 1903, or until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BACON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement stated of a transfer of pairs between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and myself I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allen,	Cockrell,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Culberson,	McLaurin,	Teller,
Berry,	Harris,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Turley,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,
Clay,	Lindsay,	Rawlins,

NAYS—43.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Scott,
Bard,	Foraker,	McComas,	Sewell,
Beveridge,	Foster,	McCumber,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Simon,
Carter,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hanna,	Perkins,	Stewart,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.	Thurston,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.	Warren,
Deboe,	Kean,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—19.

Bacon,	Elkins,	Mason,	Sullivan,
Baker,	Hale,	Money,	Vest,
Clapp,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Wellington,
Daniel,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Depew,	McBride,	Quay,

So Mr. BACON's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTUS. The amendment which I proposed has been brought from the document room, and I now ask action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 15, and immediately after the words "or repeal the same," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That every person in whom shall be vested any power in or over the Philippine Islands, before exercising any such power, shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement already stated, I make a transfer of the pair between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). On this vote I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when Mr. VEST's name was called). My colleague [Mr. VEST] is necessarily detained from the Senate Chamber. For this evening he is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Allen,	Clay,	McLaurin,	Teller,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Berry,	Culberson,	Martin,	Turley,
Butler,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Caffery,	Heitfeld,	Pettus,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Rawlins,
Clark,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,

NAYS—41.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Scott,
Allison,	Foraker,	McComas,	Sewell,
Bard,	Foster,	McCumber,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Carter,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Thurston,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.	Warren,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Kean,	Pritchard,
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Proctor,
Dolliver,	Kyle,	Quarles,

NOT VOTING—22.

Bacon,	Frye,	Mason,	Sullivan,
Baker,	Hale,	Money,	Vest,
Clapp,	Jones, Nev.	Morgan,	Wellington,
Daniel,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Depew,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Elkins,	McBride,	Simon,

So the amendment of Mr. PETTUS to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to say that in offering the amendment before the one which has just been disposed of I stated that it came from the document room. I am informed that that was an entire mistake, and that it was on the Secretary's desk. I do not want to do the gentlemen at the desk any injustice. I believe they are the ablest clerks I ever heard of, and they are uniformly courteous. I sent to the document room for the amendment, and an amendment was handed to me, but it was sent to me from the Secretary's desk, as I am informed.

I offer another amendment, on which I shall ask for the yeas and nays. I move simply to strike out what has been called the Spooner amendment. I ask that that be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves as an amendment to strike out what is known as the Spooner amendment, and asks that it be read.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose we shall reach that on a motion to adopt that amendment. It is not yet in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The part proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Alabama is not yet in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. It can not be stricken out until it is inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is clearly not now in order.

Mr. TELLER. I gave notice of an amendment to come in after the word "religion," on line 13, page 39, which I ask may be now stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 13, after the word "religion," it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by inserting:

and secure to them such participation in the affairs of the civil government so to be established as shall be consistent with the safety of the government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays on that, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I wish two or three lines preceding that amendment might be read, so that we may know in what connection it comes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion, and secure to them such participation in the affairs of the civil government so to be established as shall be consistent with the safety of the government.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement heretofore stated between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and myself, pairing the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], I am authorized to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WARREN. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], and as I do not see him in the Chamber I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], if he is not otherwise paired.

Mr. COCKRELL. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] for this evening.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. CHILTON. Then it is necessary for me to withdraw my vote in order to protect the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and I will do so.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allen,	Cockrell,	McEnery,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Culberson,	McLaurin,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Harris,	Mallory,	Teller,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Tillman,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Turley.
Clay,	Lindsay,	Pettus,

NAYS—39.

Aldrich,	Dillingham,	Kearns,	Proctor,
Allison,	Dolliver,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Bard,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Scott,
Beveridge,	Foraker,	McComas,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Foster,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Carter,	Frye,	Nelson,	Simon,
Chandler,	Gallinger,	Perkins,	Spooner,
Clark,	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.	Thurston.
Deboe,	Kean,	Pritchard,

NOT VOTING—26.

Bacon,	Hale,	Mason,	Vest,
Baker,	Hansbrough,	Money,	Warren,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Wellington,
Clapp,	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,	Wetmore,
Daniel,	Kenney,	Quay,	Wolcott.
Depew,	McBride,	Sullivan,
Elkins,	McCumber,	Turner,

So Mr. TELLER's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, inasmuch as the officers in that country are not to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution and laws of the United States are not to be applicable in any sense there, I desire to offer, for the purpose of protecting the people of the Philippine Islands, an amendment to this bill. It is a provision taken out of the act establishing the Missouri Territory in 1812. It was very good Republican doctrine in those days. I have no doubt the amendment will be voted down; but I desire to read it, and then I shall send it to the desk.

I move to insert immediately after the last portion of what is called the Spooner amendment, to come in on page 39, after line 15, the following:

All persons shall be bailable unless for capital offenses where the proof shall be evident or the presumption great. All fines shall be moderate, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted. No man shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property but by the judgment of his peers and the law of the land. If the public exigencies make it necessary for the common preservation to take the property of any person, or to demand his particular services, full compensation shall be made for the same. No ex post facto law or law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be made. No law shall be made which shall lay any person under restraint, burden, or disability on account of his religious opinions, professions, or mode of worship, in all which he shall be free to maintain his own and not burdened for those of another.

Mr. President, I think, after the statement made on this floor of the cruel torture that has been practiced upon those people by the soldiers of the United States and by the natives employed, the Macabebes, that it is very pertinent and proper that this amendment should be adopted; and if those people are to have no protection of the United States laws and are to be absolutely under the power of the autocratic and absolute government that is to be established in violation of every principle of a free government, this amendment ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado desire the amendment which he has offered to be read at the desk?

Mr. TELLER. Not unless its reading is desired by other Senators. I have read it myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And better than anyone at the desk could read it.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before the vote is taken I ask that the first portion of the committee amendment as it is now in the bill may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first portion of what is called the Spooner amendment?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The amendment adopted by the committee on the last page of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The portion of the amendment referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. If he were present I should vote "yea." As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. TURLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is out of the Chamber. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and, therefore, withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allen,	Clay,	Kenney,	Pettus,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Rawlins,
Berry,	Culberson,	McLaurin,	Taliaferro,
Butler,	Harris,	Mallory,	Teller,
Caffery,	Heitfeld,	Martin,	Tillman.
Chilton,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,

NAYS—41.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Quarles,
Bard,	Foraker,	McComas,	Scott,
Beveridge,	Foster,	McEnery,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Carter,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Simon,
Chandler,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Stewart,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Thurston.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.
Deboe,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Pritchard,

NOT VOTING—24.

Bacon,	Hale,	Money,	Turner,
Baker,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Vest,
Clapp,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,	Warren,
Daniel,	McBride,	Spooner,	Wellington.
Depew,	McCumber,	Sullivan,	Wetmore,
Elkins,	Mason,	Turley,	Wolcott.

So Mr. TELLER's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I gave notice that I would offer an amendment extending the Constitution over the islands. The Senate has negatived that idea twice, once on the Vest amendment and once on the proposition that the officers should take an oath to support the Constitution. I do not care to bring the Constitution of the United States into further contempt this evening than it has been brought.

We are about to enact a law that is so contrary to anything that has ever taken place in American history that, even if it is late, I propose to read what the fathers of the Republic said at an early day when they were contending with British power. To say it now I have no doubt is treason, but it was patriotism and good law then. On the 14th day of October, 1774, the Congress of the colonies passed this resolution with some others, and I want to call the attention of the Senate to it. I want to know whether the Senate does not believe when it is read that either that was heresy then or this is heresy now.

Resolved, It is indispensably necessary to good government, and rendered essential by the English constitution, that the constituent branches of the legislature be independent of each other; that, therefore, the exercise of legislative power in several colonies, by a council appointed during pleasure by the Crown, is unconstitutional, dangerous, and destructive to the freedom of American legislation.

All and each of which the aforesaid deputies, in behalf of themselves and their constituents, do claim, demand, and insist on, as their indubitable rights and liberties, which can not be legally taken from them, altered or abridged by any power whatever, without their own consent, by their representatives in their several provincial legislatures.

Mr. President, if the Crown of Great Britain can not establish an absolute government, the Government of the United States can not do so; but that is what you are doing to-night.

Again, in their address to the people of Great Britain, on the 21st day of the same month, that Congress said:

That we hold it essential to English liberty that no man be condemned unheard or punished for supposed offenses without having an opportunity of making his defense.

That we think the legislature of Great Britain is not authorized by the constitution to establish a religion fraught with sanguinary and impious tenets, or to erect an arbitrary form of government in any quarter of the globe. These rights we as well as you deem sacred, and yet, sacred as they are, they have, with many others, been repeatedly and flagrantly violated.

They are to be flagrantly violated by the authority of the Congress of the United States. There is a similarity to which I wish to call attention. These people over there are charged to be in rebellion against the United States, and we assert with great vehemence that they must submit to our will before we will even consider or negotiate with them for any cessation of hostilities. I want to read what occurred in the Continental Congress on the 30th of May, 1775. As I read, I think some of the Senators will find a familiar sound in it:

TUESDAY, May 30, 1775.

The Congress met according to adjournment.

A member informed the Congress that a gentleman just arrived from London had brought with him a paper, which he says he received from Lord North, and which was written, at the desire of his lordship, by Mr. Grey Cooper, undersecretary to the treasury, and as the gentleman understood it to be his lordship's desire that it should be communicated to the Congress, for that purpose he had put it into his hands. The member further observed that he had shown the paper to a member near him who was very well acquainted with the handwriting of Mr. Cooper, and that he verily believes the paper was written by Mr. Cooper.

As I read I think some of the Senators will find a familiar sound to it.

The paper being read, is as follows:

That it is earnestly hoped by all the real friends of the Americans that the terms expressed in the resolution of the 20th of February last will be accepted by all the colonies who have the least affection for their king and country or a just sense of their own interest.

That was a resolution which denied to the colonies their demands, as we hear every day with reference to these people, that we are proceeding in their interests.

That these terms are honorable for Great Britain and safe for the colonies.

That if the colonies are not blinded by factions, these terms will remove every grievance relative to taxation, and be the basis of a compact between the colonies and the mother country.

That the people in America ought, on every consideration, to be satisfied with them.

That no further relaxation can be admitted.

The temper and spirit of the nation are so much against concessions that if it were the intention of administration they could not carry the question.

But administration have no such intention, as they are fully and firmly persuaded that further concessions would be injurious to the colonies as well as to Great Britain.

That there is not the least probability of a change of administration.

That they are perfectly united in opinion and determined to pursue the most effectual measures and to use the whole force of the kingdom, if it be found necessary, to reduce the rebellious and refractory provinces and colonies.

There is so great a spirit in the nation against the Congress that the people will bear the temporary distresses of a stoppage of the American trade.

They may depend on this to be true.

If there is not a familiar sound that we have heard for the last ninety days, then I have not ears to hear. But it is to be said to the credit of the men to whom this was read that they met it just as the people of the several communities in the Philippine Islands met the demands of the military governor of that island. They said they preferred freedom to the specious promises of Great Britain, as these people have said they prefer freedom to the specious promises of the military governor.

Mr. President, it is not a question of Filipinos alone; it is a question of American citizenship. I read here the other day of an outrage that has called forth no protest from any official of this Government—an outrage to an American citizen, a soldier, who had gone there to fight the battles of his country and was there discharged; who wrote an inoffensive article in a public paper, an article that I read, and I challenge any man now here to assert that there was either treason, or menace, or defiance, or anything of the character in it.

I said then, and I repeat it now, that that rule applied would put every editor in the United States in jail, and yet that man was taken away from his business without a trial, without a hearing, except before a military officer, because he had assailed, not in violence, not slanderously either, the collector of the port, a man who appears to have been a pet of the Government, a man who was court-martialed for conduct unbecoming a gentleman as an officer in the Navy, a man against whom the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Hunt, passed the severest condemnation.

I am not going to read it to-night, but I ask to put in the whole proceedings of the court-martial against this man, who had conducted himself in such a way that he was to be reprimanded, and the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Hunt, in 1881, administered to him a reprimand that no man ever deserved who was fit to stay in the American Navy or in the American Army, and he was only kept there because the court-martial had rendered it impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to dismiss him.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1901.

SIR: Replying to your request of February 19, 1901, I inclose a copy of General Court-Martial Orders, No. 36, of 1881.

Very respectfully,
A. S. CROWNINSHIELD,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

GENERAL COURT-MARTIAL ORDERS, No. 36. NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, November 23, 1881.

I. Before a general court-martial, which convened at the torpedo station, Newport, R. I., October 11, 1881, and of which Capt. Ralph Chandler, U. S. N., was president, was arraigned and tried Ensign William Braunersreuther, U. S. N.

Charge, "Conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman."

Specification 1.—"In this, that the said William Braunersreuther, an ensign in the United States Navy, having become justly indebted to William H. Bellis, of Annapolis, Md., merchant tailor, in the sum of $207.25, or thereabouts, for goods purchased and money borrowed from said Bellis, at various times between the 21st day of June, 1875, and the 26th day of September, 1876, has, with the exception of $105, paid on account June 1, 1876, and February 25, and May 27, 1878, up to the present time, notwithstanding repeated promises to pay said debt and the frequent demands for payment made on him by said Bellis, neglected and failed to pay the said Bellis the amount due him, thereby exhibiting a dishonorable indifference to his just indebtedness and a disregard of his obligations as an officer and a gentleman, to the scandal and disgrace of the naval service of the United States."

Specification 2: "In this, that the said William Braunersreuther, an ensign in the United States Navy, having, while attached to the U. S. S. Minnesota, become justly indebted to Maurice Morrissey, a seaman on board said ship, in the sum of $19.50, or thereabouts, for articles purchased from said Morrissey, at various times between the 2d day of May, 1879, and the 22d day of June 1881, and having in June last, when detached from said vessel, at Newport, R. I., promised to pay said debt upon his arrival at New York, has, notwithstanding said promise, dishonorably neglected and failed to pay the amount of said indebtedness, or any portion thereof."

Specification 3. "In this, that the said William Braunersreuther, an ensign in the United States Navy, having, while attached to the U. S. S. Minnesota, become justly indebted to Private Hugo Caro, United States Marine Corps, attached to said ship, in the sum of $30.75, or thereabouts, for articles purchased from said Caro at various times between the 1st day of October, 1879, and the 31st day of March, 1881, and having in June last, when detached from said vessel, at Newport, R. I., promised to pay said debt upon his arrival at New York, has, notwithstanding said promise, dishonorably neglected and failed to pay the amount of said indebtedness or any portion thereof."

To which charge and specifications the accused, Ensign William Braunersreuther, United States Navy, pleaded "not guilty."

FINDING.

The court, having maturely considered the evidence adduced, found the accused, Ensign William Braunersreuther, United States Navy, as follows:

First specification of the charge. "Proved in part; proved except the words 'thereby exhibiting a dishonorable indifference to his just indebtedness and a disregard of his obligations as an officer and a gentleman, to the scandal and disgrace of the naval service of the United States.'"

Second specification of the charge, "Proved in part; proved, except the word 'dishonorably.'"

Third specification of the charge, "Proved in part; proved, except the word 'dishonorably.'"

Of the charge, "Guilty in a less degree than charged; guilty of 'improper conduct.'"

SENTENCE.

The court thereupon sentenced the said Ensign William Braunersreuther, United States Navy, "to be reprimanded by the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and to have the sum of $10 checked monthly against his pay, which said sums are to be paid to his creditor, William H. Bellis, merchant tailor, Annapolis, Md., until such payment shall amount to $102.25."

II. The proceedings of the general court-martial in the foregoing case are approved; and, although the Department can not agree with the court, in its judgment that the conduct of Ensign Braunersreuther, in repeatedly violating his promises to pay his just indebtedness, and in his continued disregard of his pecuniary obligations, is not unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, the findings are approved only because, otherwise, this officer would escape punishment for conduct deserving severe condemnation.

The sentence is also approved, except that portion of it relating to a checkage of his pay for the reimbursement of one of his creditors. This being unauthorized by law, is disapproved. Pay forfeited by sentence of courts-martial accrues to the United States for the maintenance of Navy hospitals, and such forfeitures can not be diverted to the benefit of an individual, however justly the amount may be due him.

III. There are, undoubtedly, instances where officers find themselves hampered by pecuniary embarrassments from which they can not, without difficulty, at once extricate themselves. In such cases it becomes proper that they should practice a rigid economy, and so gradually pay their debts.

But when an officer has taken advantage of the circumstance that he belongs to the naval service of the nation to establish a credit among tradesmen and merchants, he owes it to that service, as well as to his own reputation and to common honesty, that he should see his way clear to meet, within a reasonable time, the obligations he incurs. If, in a spirit of recklessness, he makes use of his position to live beyond his means, and runs in debt in face of a certainty, or the strong probability, that he will be unable to meet his engagements; if he takes advantage of the immunity with which the law protects his pay from seizure in order to defeat his honest creditors, such conduct is dishonorable and dishonest, unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and calculated to bring scandal and disgrace upon the service.

Whilst it is in the near borderland of the crime of common swindling at law, it is undoubtedly amenable to punishment under the rules and practices governing the Navy.

The Department must not be converted into a collecting agency, but it will not fail to take note of such disgraceful practices and to bring those who commit them to speedy and condign punishment.

These observations are intended as a compliance with that part of the sentence of the court which recommends that Ensign Braunersreuther be reprimanded. It is hoped that he will in future take heed of them; and it were well that other officers in the service should give timely attention to them.

WILLIAM H. HUNT,
Secretary of the Navy.

This man, a citizen of the United States, a citizen of the State of Minnesota, an ex-soldier, because he criticized this man in a legal and proper manner, a manner that is allowed in any country where freedom exists, is taken and transported from that country to the United States and his business destroyed, with no redress, and no attempt is made to redress his wrongs.

Mr. President, I called upon the Secretary of War to tell us why this man was brought away from that country, and I want to read his reply. I do not know what I can do about it; and that is the unpleasant and ugly feature in the case, that there may be no redress for this man. Let me read what the general of the army telegraphed, and then let us see if there is not some necessity for just such a provision of law as the Senate has just voted down.

MANILA, ——.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, Washington:

Editor Rice deported San Francisco, January 23. Offense, malicious publication of false charges affecting integrity of administration of office captain of the port, in which formerly employed.

Remember that I read every word this man had said, and it is here in the RECORD.

This with full knowledge of their falsity.

Mr. Rice declared that no charge he had made was false, and from the record of this man there is every reason to believe they were true.

He was informed he must give bond not to republish.

Think of it! An editor of a paper, at the demand of a military captain, is to give bond that he will not criticise the administration of public affairs in the community in which he lives; and call that a free government! Do you mean that that exists anywhere under the flag, and then you boast that you do not intend to dishonor the flag!

He was informed he must give bond not to republish or leave islands, as his actions were creating strife and were menace military situation. He maintained attitude of defiance and was necessarily sent home. Full report was forwarded with all papers February 1.

I never supposed that I would live long enough, and I regret that I have, to see and hear in this body, the greatest legislative body in the world, a declaration that the ordinary rights of citizenship shall be denied to 10,000,000 of men over whom we are now dominating, as well, too, to the 76,000,000 American people, if they shall happen to stray, as they may, into that new country. Every American has a right to go there, and he has a right to have it remembered while he is there that he is an American citizen. These islands may be valuable. If they were covered with gold and full of diamonds, they would not be worth all this, Mr. President, in the eyes of the American people and in the eyes of the world. You intend to continue and accentuate that condition by this legislation to-night. It is possible that this can be done, and it can be continued for an indefinite time, but you will have to take the back track or we will have to abandon all pretenses of freedom under our flag.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to have the so-called Spooner amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment as amended will be read in full.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 2, on page 39, the following:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of such islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion: Provided, That all franchises granted under the authority hereof shall contain a reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal the same.

Until a permanent government shall have been established in said archipelago, full report shall be made to the Congress, on or before the first day of each regular session, of all legislative acts and proceedings of the temporary government instituted under the provisions hereof, and full reports of the acts and doings of said government, and as to the condition of the archipelago and of its people, shall be made to the President, including all information which may be useful to the Congress in providing a more permanent government: Provided, That no sale or lease or other disposition of the public land, or the timber thereon, or the mining rights therein, shall be made: And provided further, That no franchise shall be granted which is not approved by the President of the United States, and is not, in his judgment, clearly necessary for the immediate government of the islands and indispensable for the interests of the people thereof, and which can not, without great public mischief, be postponed until the establishment of a permanent civil government, and all such franchises shall terminate one year after the establishment of such civil government.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if this side of the Chamber, in opposition to the pending amendment, shall permit it to become a law, they will not be able to escape responsibility to the country. It is within the power of those in opposition to the bill to defeat it. There are but five days of this Congress left, when, by the Constitution, it must expire. It is not a difficult matter for those in opposition to this measure, and particularly the so-called Spooner amendment, which is the drastic and vicious feature of the bill, to defeat it by ample, necessary, and proper discussion. So, if it is permitted to pass and become a law, the people of this country are not going to charge the Republican party with responsibility as much as they will charge the Democratic party and its allies in this Chamber with responsibility for its adoption.

I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to be a part of the active opposition to the passage of this bill. What little mental and physical strength I may have I am willing to devote night and day in a systematic, parliamentary opposition to the passage and adoption of this measure. But, of course, the measure can not be successfully combated by one or two men. It must receive the active opposition of all who are in sentiment opposed to its adoption.

The Republican party in this Chamber seems to have gone absolutely wild. Intoxicated with power, inflated with the result of the election in November last, they seem to take it for granted that the people are prepared to receive and accept without complaint any measure that they may adopt. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad," and I am well convinced that the time will come when you gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber, who are looking so complacent to-night, and who are resting in the full confidence that your measure in the course of a few hours, possibly a few moments, will pass this Chamber, will have occasion to regret the action you may take to-night.

I want to give the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] credit for having drafted an amendment that could not be excelled, in my judgment, by any Senator in this Chamber who sought to accomplish the same result he seeks to accomplish by this amendment. Without stopping to read the amendment again, it provides in substance that all military and all civil power shall be vested in the President of the United States, to be exercised over the Philippine Archipelago, until such time as a permanent government may be established in those islands. The Philippine Archipelago fell to the United States on the 1st of May, 1898, by an act of war with Spain. From that time to this it has been under the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States by virtue of our military power. We do not hold it to-day by any other title than such jurisdiction as comes to us by virtue of the war-making power under the Constitution of the United States.

It is true that by the treaty of Paris Spain undertook to cede to the Government of the United States the Philippine Archipelago, but Spain had nothing to cede. She held but a few towns in that archipelago. There never was a time since Magellan discovered the Philippine Archipelago to the 1st of May, 1898, when Spain exercised jurisdiction over those islands. Out of the 10,000,000 people there, she never exercised jurisdiction over to exceed 1,000,000 of them. So when we claim that we got title to those islands from Spain the claim is unfounded in fact.

There is another thing, and I defy any gentleman in this Chamber upon either side to dispute the proposition, and that is that you can not acquire jurisdiction over a people by acquiring their territory. Concede, for argument's sake, that the United States Government got title to the Philippine Archipelago. We did not get title to the people inhabiting that archipelago, for if there is anything well settled and well defined and well determined by international law it is that the allegiance of a people who are conquered does not pass to the conqueror, although the title of the territory they inhabit may pass to the conqueror. So when we speak of the Filipino as a rebel it is a misnomer. He does not owe this Government any allegiance. He never has owed any allegiance to the United States, and, not owing allegiance to this Government, he can not be in rebellion against a Government to which he owes no allegiance.

This amendment provides that:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands * * * shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct.

We have just witnessed the singular spectacle of the Senate of the United States voting down a proposition to extend the Constitution to this new territory. How do we acquire title, if it shall be conceded for the moment that we have title to those islands. By what authority did we acquire title to this archipelago lying there in the Orient? It was by virtue of the Constitution of the United States, for this Government exists only by virtue of that Constitution. So, if we have any power to send our Army and Navy across the ocean to conquer and subdue other people, it is by virtue of the Constitution of the United States.

All military and civil power—all military power means the Army and Navy; all civil power means the executive, the legislative, and judicial power—are conferred upon such persons as the President of the United States may direct and subject to his supervision. So, as a matter of fact, the President of the United States is invested with all military, all executive, all judicial, all legislative, and all executive power over these islands and over these people, without any restraint or restriction.

Sir, is that in accordance with the Constitution of the United States? I appreciated very fully the remarks of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] a moment ago, when he said he did not propose to bring the Constitution into further disrepute by discussing it in this Chamber. Yet I shall be loath to believe that any gentleman will consciously violate any of the provisions of the Constitution. Let me turn briefly to some of its provisions and read and discuss them for a moment. I read first the preamble:

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

The Constitution was completed in 1787. It was then submitted by the Continental Congress to conventions called in the different colonies, and was finally adopted in 1789 by nine of the original thirteen States.

While it is true that the preamble of the law, whether it be a constitution or a statute, is not in a technical sense a part of the text, yet it is likewise true that always in the construction of a constitution or a statute or a document of any kind having a preamble it is proper that we should refer to the preamble to ascertain the general scope and purpose of the text.

The first thing, then, Mr. President, was to form a more perfect Union. Those familiar with the history of the colonies are not at a loss to understand the expression, the formation of a more perfect Union. The first Congress, the great Continental Congress, was called together in 1774. The grievances that existed against the British Crown were well understood. They are well understood by the student of history to-day. Great Britain had dealt with the separate colonies. Her measures were drastic, they were severe, they were unjust, as our measures are drastic and severe and unjust to the Filipinos. The colonies were acting separately.

There had been no uniformity of action between them. New York was acting one way, Massachusetts another, and all the different 13 colonies were pursuing their own respective courses in meetings, contending with the British Crown and in asserting their rights from time to time as their rights were debated. It became apparent to the fathers of the Republic that there must be unity of action upon the part of the colonies.

So the thought uppermost when the Continental Congress came together in 1774 was the formation of a more perfect union between these 13 colonies. And what did they desire to form this more perfect union for? "To establish justice, to insure domestic tranquillity, to provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty."

Acting in their separate capacities their judicial tribunals had been overturned by the British Crown; anarchy reigned supreme in the several colonies; their courts were invaded by the military, the judges driven from their benches, the records of the courts destroyed, so that justice could not be administered between the citizens of the different colonies. Therefore the formation of a more perfect Union would result in the establishment of justice in the colonies, and so they included these words as one of the objects of the formation of that Union.

Then they wanted to insure domestic tranquillity. The colonies had been invaded by British troops. They had quartered themselves in the houses and in the homes of the colonists. They had been guilty of spoliation and of confiscation from time to time without any restraint upon the part of the British Government. So one of the purposes of the formation of the Constitution was to insure domestic tranquillity and provide for the common defense.

We recall well that the separate colonies formed armies of their own. They undertook, each one of them, to erect themselves into a republic. It was found impracticable, and so the common judgment of the colonists was that there should be united action upon the part of these original thirteen colonies or territories providing for the common defense of all.

Then they were to promote the general welfare. Mr. President, we very frequently hear the general welfare of the United States spoken of as it is found in the Constitution. I think there are three different places in the Constitution where the words "to promote the general welfare" are to be found, and I have heard these words construed to mean everything.

Whatever the particular individual might think would promote the general welfare of the people of the United States he would quote these words as apt and applicable. But I submit to any gentleman who is familiar with the constitutional history of this country that the meaning of the words "to promote the general welfare of the people of the United States" is to promote them within the purview of the language and the policy of the Constitution and not outside of it, and the Constitution marks out the pathway and prescribes the means by which the general welfare of the people of the United States is to be promoted.

What was all this to be done for? That our ancestors might secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity, and for that purpose they declared that we "do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

There are the plain purposes for which the Constitution was framed; there are the plain purposes for which it was adopted.

Now we come to the text of the Constitution, which marks out the course and which prescribes the means by which these desirable objects were to be accomplished. The first proposition we meet is that proposition which was so lengthily discussed in the constitutional convention and consumed so much time in the conventions of the respective States, to wit, the division of civil power. Experience had proved that it was unwise to vest the executive, judicial, and legislative power in one person or in one body.

Governments that had pursued the policy of investing all their powers in one person or in one organization had failed and crumbled into the dust; but governments that had divided the power, parceling to one branch the legislative, to another the executive, and to still another the judicial had in the history of the world proved eminently successful.

Our ancestors, profiting by the example and by the precedents of the past, divided all powers, civil and military, distributing certain powers to an organization called the legislative department, certain powers to the executive department, and certain other powers to the judicial department, and it has always been held until this moment that one of these powers can not be transferred, can not be delegated, can not be laid aside, can not be forced aside, but must be exercised by that particular body or organization upon whom it is conferred.

Now, mark this so-called Spooner amendment. It invests all power, without restriction and without restraint, in the President of the United States, or such person as may be designated by him. Now, let me turn to the very first section of Article I of this Constitution:

1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. President, if that is true, how can we delegate the legislative power of Congress to the President of the United States, and how can he in turn transmit or delegate this delegated power to certain other persons in the Philippine Archipelago? It does not say that a part of the legislative power shall be vested in a Congress, but it says all legislative power shall be vested in a Congress consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives. Yet gentlemen upon the other side propose to abandon this power. They propose to delegate it to the President of the United States, and they propose to give him power or authority to delegate it ad infinitum to such persons as he may select from time to time.

Has any gentleman upon that side of the Chamber the hardihood to stand in this presence and say that this so-called amendment is not a flagrant violation of this provision of the Constitution?

Let me turn, Mr. President, to another provision of the Constitution. I come to the Executive Department, Article II, section 1:

The executive power—

So says the Constitution—

shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.

Therefore, so far as the executive power is concerned, this bill gives the President no executive power that he does not possess already by virtue of the Constitution. The President of the United States, as President, lives and breathes by virtue of this provision of the Constitution. If it were not for this provision of the Constitution, the President of the United States would be as powerless and as impotent as an unborn child.

Now, let me turn again to another provision of the Constitution.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

Now, Mr. President, there is the third power. There, by virtue of this section of the Constitution, all judicial power, not a part of it, not a modicum, but all power of a judicial character is vested in the Supreme Court of the United States and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time establish.

Yet it is proposed by this amendment to take the judicial power out of the hands of the Supreme Court and the inferior courts that may be established by Congress and turn this power over to the President of the United States—delegate it to him, uproot the Constitution, violate its meaning and its language, and confer this power upon the President of the United States and upon such persons as he may delegate in turn.

Mr. President, this Constitution is worth fighting for yet. We had the most sanguinary war in this country a little over a third of a century ago that was ever known in the history of the world, and it was all over this Constitution. Four years and a half of the bloodiest war the world ever knew was fought upon this continent for the preservation of this Constitution; and you gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber, who upheld it then, are to-night violating it worse and trampling it under foot with more scorn and contempt than was ever threatened by armed foe upon this continent. Is there no place to stop?

Have you not reached a point where you will stop and consider this document and consider its sacred provisions and its history? Are you prepared to lay it aside entirely and set up absolutism in this country and in the country we have acquired by virtue of the recent war?

Now let me turn briefly to some of the articles of amendment. I call attention to Article XIV of the amendments to the Constitution, section 1:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Mr. President, while the word "State" is used in this article of amendment, according to the judicial decisions the word "State" must be held to apply to a country or a district or any well-defined geographical portion of the earth that is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. So the provision should read thus:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States or any Territory belonging thereto, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

It can not be denied, Mr. President, that the Philippine Archipelago is under the jurisdiction of this country. Whatever may be the true legal relation between the United States and the archipelago, that the archipelago is de facto under the jurisdiction of the United States Government no man can successfully deny; and if it is within the jurisdiction of the United States, if it is subject to the laws of the United States, it is subject to those laws by virtue of the Constitution, and a child born in the Philippine Archipelago since the acquisition of this territory becomes a citizen of the United States and is entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizenship.

The Supreme Court within the last few years has held that a Chinaman can become a citizen of the United States by birth here. A few years ago a Chinaman and his wife came to San Francisco. While there a child was born. They returned after that to their native country, and then they came back, bringing the child with them. The child grew to manhood and undertook to exercise the rights of a citizen of California. He was denied the privilege by the local court, and the Supreme Court of the United States, under this provision of the Constitution, held him to be a citizen of the United States, and he is exercising his right as such to-day.

So, Mr. President, by virtue of this provision of the Constitution of the United States we have ingrafted the "heathen Chinee" upon our territory and incorporated him into our citizenship. Can we not easily contemplate the time, if this rule is to prevail, when that fact alone, by virtue of its deteriorating effect, will undermine this country?

So, if the Chinaman, being born in the territory of the United States and under its flag, becomes a citizen of the United States under this provision of the Constitution, does not the Filipino, by a like course of reasoning, become a citizen of the United States, and being a citizen of the United States, are you prepared to say that there is any constitutional power to deny him the rights and privileges of citizenship?

But, Mr. President, I turn to another provision of the Constitution for the purpose of showing that the Constitution does of its own force go beyond a mere original territory of the United States. Section 1, Article XIII, of the amendments, reads as follows:

ARTICLE XIII.

SEC. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

I read that for the purpose of accentuating the fact that the framers of this amendment had clearly in their minds a distinction between the United States and territories subject to its jurisdiction. The disjunctive is used "within the United States or" territory subject to its jurisdiction. Now, here is territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. It is asserted upon the other side of this Chamber, and it is conceded upon this side. Whether it is legally subject to the jurisdiction of the United States or not is a question we have debated here for weeks. I have not the slightest doubt upon that point. That it is subject to our jurisdiction de facto we all concede.

If the Constitution does not by its own force and by its own vigor extend to this territory, then this provision of the Constitution is a work of supererogation. Wherever the flag of the United States floats, whether it be upon this hemisphere or upon another, there that territory is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and there the Constitution extends.

And yet we propose to take the 10,000,000 Filipinos and hold jurisdiction of them, requiring them to yield allegiance and obedience to our country and to our laws, and at the same time deny them the privileges and immunities that belong by right under the Constitution to the citizenship of this country.

I do not care anything about the policy of this measure. That it is vicious, that it is inexcusable, that its result will come home to plague us in the future, I have no doubt; and I am surprised that grave men, having the intellect and the character to be sent to the United States Senate to represent the different States of this Union, can be so lost to the effect of this policy upon the nation that they would vote this amendment through without reasonable discussion.

I want to say to my friends upon this side of the Chamber again, that if you permit this measure to go through, having it in your power to prevent it, the country will hold you responsible, and they ought to hold you responsible. We are not equal, it is true, in numbers to the other side, but we are enough in numbers to debate this measure until the 4th of March at noon, and let this Congress die and let this bill and this infamous amendment go with it.

It may be said that an extra session of Congress will in that case be necessary. Suppose it is. It may be said that the appropriation bills will be defeated. Suppose they are. If the President of the United States wants to take the responsibility, and his party wants to take the responsibility, of an extraordinary session of Congress, if they want to take the responsibility of defeating the appropriation bills, let the responsibility rest there, not here.

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to know if the Senator has seen, or if he knows whether it has come in, a printed copy of the message of the President of the United States sending us the remaining statutes which were enacted by the Taft commission in the Philippines?

Mr. ALLEN. I have not.

Mr. MORGAN. I have found no statute yet in any act of the Philippine legislature or the Taft Commission which provides for the allowance of the writ of habeas corpus in those islands in favor of any native of the Philippines. Can the Senator from Nebraska inform me whether he knows of any such?

Mr. ALLEN. I know of no ordinances they have passed. They may have passed some.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator, of course, is aware that the Spanish law contains no provision in favor of the writ of habeas corpus?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. And when a man is arrested under that law he is kept incommunicado for a certain length of time, while the officers are inquiring into what he has to say about the crime charged against him. There is no indictment by grand jury there, and there being no writ of habeas corpus, I supposed, of course, that during the existence of the Government of the United States there some provision had been made by which a man could avail himself of the constitutional right of habeas corpus and also the English common-law right.

Mr. ALLEN. I know of no ordinances—because there can not be statutes passed by the Taft commission, they not being a legislative body—I know of no ordinances or rules adopted by the Taft commission referring in the slightest degree to either the property or personal rights of the people of the Philippines or other persons in those islands.

The Senator speaks about the writ of habeas corpus. It is a writ unknown, as I understand, to Spanish law, and known only, I believe, to the common law, and to those countries and States which have adopted the common law. There is no provision for trial by jury there.

My understanding is, although I may be mistaken as to that, that when a person charged with an offense is arrested under Spanish law he is put incomunicado expressly—nobody can talk with him and he can not communicate with anybody. Before he is permitted to employ counsel he is required, or his friends are required, to advance enough money to pay board while he is in prison, to pay his charges, to pay the expenses of his trial. When that money is advanced, then he is permitted to have access to counsel. But he stays incomunicado forever, if the Spanish authorities see fit to keep him, until he or his friends advance this money.

I suppose the Spanish law prevails to some extent, or to a very great extent, in the Philippine Archipelago, so far as there is any law there, because we must recollect that the United States does not exercise jurisdiction over all of those people. We have got less territory and we occupy less territory to-day than we did within three months after Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet. We only occupy a few towns, while the vast body of the country of those islands is in the full and unrestricted possession of the Filipino government.

But, Mr. President, I have no purpose of discussing the policy of this law, and I shall not do so now at any length. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that every line and syllable and provision of this so-called Spooner amendment, with the Hoar attachment, is in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States, and it can not be justified.

Of course, I can well understand that Senators upon the other side will say, "We can go to the country and justify our action, and we will induce the people of the United States to believe we are all right; they are not very critical; they do not read the Constitution very closely; they do not analyze it very closely, and we can blind them through our subsidized press; we can deceive them." I understand that policy. That is the policy of partisan politics, but, Mr. President, it is not the part of statesmanship; it is not the part of patriotism. I would invoke the curse of the Divine Being upon any man, high or low, rich or poor, who would consciously violate a letter or a syllable of the Constitution of the United States.

Suppose you should adopt this amendment and it becomes a law, what do you propose to do then? Do you propose to put down what you call the rebellion in the Philippine Islands? You have not got the power to do that. Nature has so fortified that country for the natives so that you can not reach them. Look at the hundreds and thousands of American lives you have sacrificed in the last three years in this unholy war upon this weak and struggling people.

Go to San Francisco and watch one of the great vessels going out on her voyage to the Philippine Islands. She goes with the youth of the land, soldiers to fight those people simply because they are struggling for the liberty that we ourselves enjoy. Then stand there a week afterwards and witness a vessel coming from the Philippine Islands. She comes with her cargo of American dead; she comes with the emaciated forms of wounded men, who are to be a burden to themselves and a burden to the country during the remainder of their lives.

In what cause have these men sacrificed their lives and sacrificed their health? In a cause that would destroy the liberty and destroy the rights of those people to enjoy a republican form of government.

Are the American people prepared to continue this unholy war upon that people? Mr. President, they come to this Congress for relief; they come here in respectful language, and they come as petitioners to a great Christian Government like this, asking for the establishment of constitutional liberty in their country.

They are alien to us in blood; alien to us in language; alien in their purposes; and there can never be an assimilation with those people. They desire to set up a government of their own, as we set up a government of our own when we wrested our independence from the British Crown. Are we prepared to say to-day that because we have the physical power to subjugate these people we will do so? Why do we want to subjugate them? Simply that we may loot them and loot the islands of their value, of their property.

Look at the final provision of this so-called Spooner amendment and see how skillfully and artfully it is drawn. It reads:

Provided, That all franchises granted under the authority hereof shall contain a reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal the same.

Why, Mr. President, that proviso presupposes that somebody has a right to grant franchises in that country. That is a falsehood upon its face. There is no power in this Government, in its civil or military branch, to grant franchises in those islands. Yet here is an open assumption that that power exists; and it is provided that whenever these franchises are so granted they will be subject to the power of Congress, or whatever authority it may be, to revoke them in the future.

The amendment of the honorable senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], while well intended, is most disastrous. It provides for the maintenance of the status quo as respects the fiscal policy of the islands. There are the crown lands, millions of acres, with their valuable timber being sold off; there are mineral lands that are being sold and disposed of, that are being leased, and their values removed, and the amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts simply holds them in that shape. So that before Congress shall act, or may act, in the establishment of a permanent government in those islands all the franchises of timber, minerals, and other values may be entirely removed.

So, Mr. President, all municipal privileges, street railways, electric lights, gaslights, and all these various priviliges may be granted without restraint by the persons appointed by the President of the United States, and every Yankee, whose cupidity is well known and whose greed is unrestrained when the opportunity presents itself, will have completely absorbed every privilege, every franchise, and everything of value in those islands before Congress shall have established a permanent government there.

So if the time ever comes when these people shall be granted a government of their own—Mr. President, I doubt if that time will ever come—they will find themselves denuded of their lands, of their timber, of their franchises, of their rights, of their privileges, of their property, and that is the purpose and policy of this amendment.

Are we prepared to say, Mr. President, if any American citizen wants to put himself upon that low level of using the Government of which he is a part to rob those people of their rights, because they are weak and inefficient and incapable of competing with us on land or on sea, that he shall have the power to do so?

Let me digress, Mr. President, far enough to call attention to a fact which I think is not generally known. I want to state it conservatively; I want to state it within the bounds of truth; I want to state it within the bounds of what can be proven by ocular evidence. In that country, as we all know, much manila hemp is grown. It is put in bales something like cotton. Those bales of hemp, I am told, are worth in the market at Manila and in the different seaports of those islands something like $26 per bale. Americans are over there speculating in this hemp, and the Army is being used to confiscate much of it.

It is seized in warehouses; it is seized on the farms or the plantations, or whatever they may be called. It is taken because it belongs to rebels, to these people who are struggling for their liberty. It is sent to market, and under the guardianship of the Army of the United States it is put up at auction and sold at $6 a bale, and many of the Army officers are purchasers of it. I am told it is sold by them at from $23 to $26 a bale. All that goes on without restraint under the very nose of the commanding general in the archipelago.

I have performed my duty as I understand it. I am responsible to my own conscience for what I do, and not to anybody else. I would stand here, Mr. President, if I had it in my power to defeat this infamous measure, if a dozen extraordinary sessions of Congress should follow.

You can not compromise with principle; you can not temporize when a great principle is at stake. There is but one of two courses to pursue, either turn and fly from your duty like a coward, or stand and fight for principle manfully until victory comes or until you yourself are overcome.

I have no doubt about the course that should be pursued. I shall vote against this amendment, and I shall vote against the bill if the amendment is adopted. I shall antagonize it at every step when it passes into conference, if it shall pass into conference, and if it comes back I will antagonize the conference report. I call upon you Democrats; I call upon the Silver Republicans and the Populists, few though we are, to stand here to-night, to-morrow, and to-morrow night, and until 12 o'clock on the 4th of March, antagonizing this bill, so that the Constitution of the United States may be preserved and the rights of these weak people may not be overcome and overridden.

Mr. SHOUP. Now, I hope we may have a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Deboe,	Kenney,	Proctor,
Allen,	Depew,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Allison,	Dillingham,	Lindsay,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Dolliver,	Lodge,	Scott,
Bard,	Elkins,	McComas,	Sewell,
Bate,	Fairbanks,	McCumber,	Shoup,
Berry,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Simon,
Beveridge,	Foster,	McLaurin,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Mallory,	Sullivan,
Caffery,	Hanna,	Martin,	Taliaferro,
Carter,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Thurston,
Chilton,	Heitfeld,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Clark,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Turley,
Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Turner,
Cockrell,	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,	Warren,
Culberson,	Kean,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore.
Cullom,	Kearns,	Pritchard,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, there is one principle of constitutional liberty not yet slain, and I desire to give it a little chance for its life. I move the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts submits an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

In the government of the Philippine Islands no person vested with legislative powers shall ever exercise the executive or judicial powers, or either of them; no person vested with executive powers shall ever exercise the legislative or judicial powers, or either of them; no person vested with judicial powers shall ever exercise the legislative or executive powers, or either of them; to the end that it may be a government of laws and not of men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas and Mr. PETTUS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. He being absent, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I wish to state that I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I really believe if he were here he would vote for this amendment, but I am not authorized to say he would, and I therefore will stand paired with him.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KENNEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has not voted. I desire to transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], so that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and I will be at liberty to vote. I will therefore let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allen,	Clay,	McEnery,	Taliaferro,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Teller,
Bate,	Culberson,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Berry,	Hoar,	Martin,	Turley,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Caffery,	Kenney,	Pettus,
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Rawlins,

NAYS—43.

Aldrich,	Carter,	Dillingham,	Foster,
Allison,	Chandler,	Dolliver,	Frye,
Bard,	Cullom,	Elkins,	Gallinger,
Beveridge,	Deboe,	Fairbanks,	Hanna,
Burrows,	Depew,	Foraker,	Hansbrough.

Hawley,	McCumber,	Proctor,	Spooner,
Kean,	McMillan,	Quarles,	Stewart,
Kearns,	Nelson,	Scott,	Thurston,
Kyle,	Perkins,	Sewell,	Warren,
Lodge,	Platt, Conn.	Shoup,	Wetmore.
McComas,	Pritchard,	Simon,

NOT VOTING—19.

Baker,	Harris,	Money,	Sullivan,
Clapp,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Vest,
Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Penrose,	Wellington,
Daniel,	McBride,	Platt, N. Y.	Wolcott.
Hale,	Mason,	Quay,

So Mr. HOAR'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended, on which the Senator from Alabama demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. CLAY. The committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment as amended. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). Under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Delaware, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—45.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Kyle,	Scott,
Allison,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Bard,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Simon,
Burrows,	Foster,	McLaurin,	Spooner,
Carter,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hale,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Clark,	Hanna,	Perkins,	Warren,
Culloin,	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore.
Deboe,	Hawley,	Pritchard,
Depew,	Kean,	Proctor,
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Quarles,

NAYS—27.

Allen,	Clay,	Kenney,	Rawlins,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Culberson,	McEnery,	Teller,
Berry,	Harris,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Butler,	Hoar,	Martin,	Turley,
Caffery,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,

NOT VOTING—16.

Baker,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Sullivan,
Clapp,	McBride,	Penrose,	Vest,
Daniel,	Mason,	Platt, N. Y.	Wellington,
Frye,	Money,	Quay,	Wolcott.

So the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 12, after the words "nineteen hundred" it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the Southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend the proposed amendment by striking out paragraph 3, on pages 2 and 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 3, on page 2, as follows:

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator who moved the amendment whether it is intended that the agreement for coaling stations, and so on, shall be made by the President alone, without the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose if Cuba should attach these provisions to its constitution the Congress of the United States might agree, through the President, with the government of Cuba——

Mr. HOAR. Assenting.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Assenting. I think so.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if it is not one of the provisions of this amendment that all these provisions shall be embodied in a permanent treaty?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. It contemplates the action of the Senate in harmony with the action of the President.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say in a single sentence that, studying this amendment as well as I can, it seems to me eminently wise and satisfactory. I am not able to share in the apprehensions or objections which some Senators in the Chamber have expressed. It seems to me to be, in substance, a proper and necessary stipulation for the application of the Monroe doctrine to the nearest outlying country in America, except Mexico, whose borders touch our own, and under the circumstances one which the protection of the United States as well as the protection of Cuba fairly and properly requires.

There is one exception to that observation, and that is the matter of sanitation, and it seems to me we are reasonably and fairly entitled, by a just regard for our own protection, to secure as far as we can and to secure now the protection of our shores against yellow fever, cholera, and possibly some other diseases not yet developed which might come from the want of sufficient sanitary protection against them in that tropical climate.

It is to be observed that this stipulation, though so highly essential to the protection of the United States, and especially the southern portion of the United States, the Gulf cities, and the warmer portions of our own continental territory, is infinitely more valuable to the people of Cuba—and it will turn out to be so in the future—even than it can be to us.

So, while I have been obliged to differ, so painfully to myself, from the policy which I suppose may be called the policy of the Administration in regard to one of these great questions, it gives me uncommon pleasure to testify, so far as my testimony is of any value at all, to what seems to me the wisdom and the moderation and the unexpected good fortune with which the committee having this matter in charge have solved this difficult problem of our relations with Cuba.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have just moved to strike out paragraph 3 of this amendment, and I am somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Massachusetts express himself as he does. The first and second paragraphs seem to be a practical assertion of the Monroe doctrine, and I do not understand how the Monroe doctrine anywhere gives the United States the right to interfere in the internal affairs of any American State. To the first part of paragraph 3 I have no objection.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence—

I have no objection to that, but what follows I do seriously object to—the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

The reserving to the United States of the right to maintain a government, the United States to be the judge of what that government is, adequate for the protection of life and property would seem to me to be reserving to the United States the right to overturn the government of Cuba whenever it saw fit; and for that reason I moved to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to undertake a defense of this matter. It is not my duty or function. The Senators who have reported it will deal with it as they see fit; but in justification of my own observation it seems to me that is practically what we have been doing now. We recognized Spain as the lawful government of Cuba, and we claimed the right to interfere—to insist on her having a government free and adequate to the protection of life, liberty, and property there; and it seems to me we can not properly leave our task without seeing that that is secured.

I do not suppose that the United States will ever undertake under this clause to interfere in such local commotions or disturbances as every country, especially every Spanish-American country south of us, is subject to. I do not suppose that is anybody's intention; but only in those grave cases where international interference is proper, and where other countries would interfere if we did not, Cuba consents, and it is for her benefit also—and more, indeed, than it is for ours—that the United States shall continue supervision until a government is completely established.

I do not mean to be drawn into an argument. It is no part of my duty especially to deal with this question, but I thought under the peculiar circumstances it was not out of place, having differed with my political associates in this other grave matter, to express my concurrence with them in this.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will withdraw the motion I made to strike out the whole paragraph, and now I move to strike out, in line 21 of the printed amendment, the words:

The maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty.

So as to leave the provision for the Government to guarantee the independence of Cuba and to carry out the obligations to Spain, but entirely striking out those words which would authorize the Government of the United States to interfere in the internal affairs of Cuba.

Mr. LINDSAY. How will it read?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Colorado excuse me? A Senator asks how it will read. It will read:

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

Mr. TELLER. I rose to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that perhaps we might secure the adoption of an amendment, if he would make it of this character.

The government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, etc.

That leaves out the protection of life, property, and individual liberty.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Those were the obligations assumed. There would be no difference.

Mr. TELLER. It might seem a little better to the people to whom we are going to present this. However, I am not going to attempt to correct it. As a member of the committee I did the best I could to assist in getting this into shape. The objection that the Senator from Arkansas has made I made to it, and I did not waive my objection to that feature of this paragraph. It is very much better than I supposed we were likely to secure, and yet it is not at all satisfactory to me, as I said to-day.

I feel at perfect liberty to vote to amend any of these propositions, not being bound by anything that occurred in the committee, because I reserved that right and the right to vote against any single one or all of them if they are put in that shape. I believed that if we were to submit to Cuba any proposition whatever it was the duty of Congress to submit it and not the President, and with that view, knowing that it was to be submitted to Cuba, whether we did or not, I thought it was wise for Congress to act. But I regret to say that I am not in accord with exactly what the Congress propose to do if they adopt the report.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I do not know whether we are proposing to require Cuba to adopt a constitution with such addendum to it in the shape of an amendment or an ordinance, or whether we are making a proposition to Cuba for a treaty.

The Senator from Ohio asked the question of some one on the floor whether or not the last clause in this proposition, the eighth clause, did not provide for a permanent treaty with the United States in respect of all these matters. That is the way it reads. At the same time the inducement, I will call it—that part of the amendment which precedes the designation of the different sections of it—contains this language:

The President is hereby authorized to leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba substantially as follows:

The Cuban people are no more in a situation to make a treaty with the Government of the United States than the people of Arizona or New Mexico, and not so much so, because there is in Cuba no organized government whatever, except that which the United States has carried into the island under the treaty with Spain, and that is a military government. The people of Cuba, under the authority of that military government, have held a constitutional convention, and they have come, we understand by the newspapers, to a conclusion as to the constitution which they will adopt. I do not know whether or not that constitution is to be submitted to the people of Cuba. Does the Senator from Connecticut, who is chairman of the committee, know?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand there is no provision in it submitting the constitution to the people.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no provision?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is what I understand.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator says he so understands. Has the Senator ever read the constitution of Cuba?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have read the draft of it as first sent here—the original draft of it.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the Senator read the constitution as it has been adopted by the convention?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has not been received here. I could not.

Mr. MORGAN. It has not yet been received here?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No.

Mr. MORGAN. We do not know how far that constitution may have to be changed to admit such propositions as are here. We do not know anything about that. These propositions may be right in the teeth of the constitution of Cuba, and the Senate of the United States and the Congress of the United States are now preparing to declare, by public law, that these people shall accept what we here spread before them and make it a part of the constitution or else an ordinance to accompany the constitution of equal force and validity in Cuba. Even after that, we wind up the proposition that all of these matters shall be the subject of a treaty stipulation.

Here is the Congress of the United States legislating. The Senate by a bare majority can pass these propositions. How are we going to get them into a general treaty after we have passed them? With whom are we going to treat? Before we can possibly treat with anybody in Cuba we must establish a government there with such sovereignty that it shall be able to make a treaty. We have that to do. So these two provisions in this amendment are in direct conflict with each other, and when you get it here the matter is quite different, because here is the Senate as a legislative body passing an ultimatum and sending it to Cuba, and then requiring that that matter shall come back before the Senate as a part of the treaty-making power and be ratified by at least two-thirds of this body, which you know you can not get.

We are in great haste about this business. We are legislating on this important subject before the constitution of Cuba has even been sent to the body, and I am as ignorant of it as I am of the constitution of Paraguay or of some other country whose constitution I have never read or perhaps even heard of. So are the other Senators here. Yet we are proposing grave amendments to their constitution in the shape of an ordinance or proposition to be carried into their constitution after they have made it, after they have signed it, and, I suppose, after they have adjourned.

I do not know whether they are in session yet or not. The Senate of the United States as a legislative body sends these propositions to them. Cuba will ask us, "How are we going to treat with you about these things? Must you not first recognize us as a sovereign, free and independent?" "Yes; we have to do that." "Here we are ready. We have our constitution already prepared which contains none of these things."

"You recognized us as a sovereign, autonomous, free, and independent government and propose to make a treaty with us. We are ready. Are you ready?" "No, no, we can not make a treaty with you until you have amended your constitution or passed an ordinance of that kind." "Then if you can not you have recognized us." We put ourselves into that absurdity. Now, I can not call it anything else; it is an inexplicable absurdity, and that is all you can say about it.

Well, it is not only so, but it is an ultimatum sent by the Congress of the United States to the people of Cuba, not to any government there. You have got no government in Cuba except the Government of the United States when you pass this act. It is an ultimatum, then, to the people of Cuba. Have they authorized their representatives in that convention to adopt something like this? When that convention was organized it was upon the basis of the vote of the people of Cuba.

They sent their delegates to that convention, many of hem very able men, and now before we have seen that constitution we demand that that convention or some other convention shall accept these propositions from the legislative department of the Government of the United States and incorporate them into their organic law, and we put it in the form of an ultimatum. "You have got to do it because we say so. We do not ask you to confer with us about it or anything of the sort. We want no conference with you, although we pretend in the closing article of this proposition that this shall all be secured by a permanent treaty, as if there was ever any such thing in this world in the public law of nations as a permanent treaty, unless it was a treaty that passes a title, and then its permanency does not depend upon the fact of its being a treaty and called a permanent treaty, but it depends upon the fact that you can not by revoking a treaty of that kind reclaim what you have passed under it. That is all."

A permanent treaty! Oh, no; it ought to be stricken out, and if you want to make any permanent treaty, make it a compact between the two States, a contract based upon mutual considerations which are inviolable and will be so held.

Now, as to the particular matter that is under discussion in article 3, I think there can be no doubt that the proposition as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts is entirely in error. The Monroe doctrine never had anything to do with a proposition like this, the maintenance of a government adequate to the protection of life, property, and individual liberty in any one of the American States. It has no connection with that.

That gives us the right to go into one of these American States that we say we will protect against Europe or Asia or any other country under the ægis of the Monroe doctrine, and when you go into that State you can exercise the power of the Government of the United States for the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty. Whose life? Whose property? Whose individual liberty? Why, as a matter of course, of the people who are in Cuba, whether they are citizens or whether they are denizens, whether they are foreigners—it makes no difference what country they may belong to.

Now, here is the United States marching into an American republic with the question whether the government of that republic has got sufficient authority or is sufficiently well conducted to protect life, liberty, and property.

Mr. President, that thing has never been done by any government in the world that did not enter as we would in the Indian Territory down here, the boundaries of a government as a dependency for the purpose of exercising our authority over it.

We get that unlimited authority, not terminable according to this agreement by any lapse of time, an authority that stands forever. As long as the Cuban government is there this authority lasts on behalf of the United States; and when we get it for that indefinite period we can at any time enter the territory of Cuba and find out whether she has a government there that is capable and adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty.

Now, could there be any government in Cuba more perfectly subject to the United States than that, and does any person here suppose that those people in Cuba would be willing to accept at our hands that dependent, humiliating, abject position?

We probably can go into one of these Indian tribes under the laws of the United States and ascertain whether they in their tribal relations are protecting life or personal liberty or property, but we could not go into a State and do that. I do not believe that we can go into a Territory and do it. We may have the right to do it in a Territory of the United States, but I am speaking now about some country that is beyond.

Will Cuba ever be a foreign country? No matter what we may say about her right to life, liberty, and property, or to her freedom and independence and sovereignty, will Cuba ever be an independent state as long as that provision is in her constitution or in an ordinance or in a treaty that she signs with the United States?

No, sir. It is a false pretense. It is a piece of arrant hypocrisy on the part of the Congress of the United States to make any such declaration, and in the same connection to say that they are executing the purpose and the pledge of Congress that it shall be a free, sovereign, and independent state.

Mr. President, the fault and the shame of this proposition are both disclosed on the face of the papers, and it is unnecessary to go outside of the four corners of this proposition for any man of ordinary common sense to discover it. There it is.

You leave those words in there, and you compel Cuba at once to subordinate herself at all times to the visitation of the United States, to ascertain how she is dealing with her own people, not ours; whether she is protecting life, and personal liberty, and property there according to our ideas of what she ought to do. Can any man imagine a more absurd position that the Congress of the United States could possibly place itself in than that which is on these papers? I would be ashamed——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has mentioned that these requirements are to be embodied in a treaty which the Senate would have to ratify and that the condition of parties in the Senate after the 4th of March will not give the two-thirds vote necessary. Will the Senator, and the other Senators who are on this committee and who have framed this amendment, tell us what would be the result of that situation?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not on the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know; but I should like to have the Senator give me his opinion as to what would be the conditions, and I should like to have the other Senators, if they are willing, tell us just what the situation would be if we had made a demand and laid down an ultimatum which the Cuban people might be willing to agree to but which the Senate here would not agree to.

Mr. MORGAN. It would be rejected; it would be null and void.

Mr. TILLMAN. It would be null and void of course, and then what would be the situation?

Mr. MORGAN. Cuba would be relegated, I suppose, back under the treaty——

Mr. TILLMAN. The question that I am more particularly interested in making the inquiry is whether the troops would be withdrawn before the treaty was ratified, and whether Cuba would be allowed to set up a government under its constitution or whether we would maintain military possession and treat it as a common province.

In other words, are there not more complications and dangers in the situation which the Senator, with his great wisdom and foresight, has looked forward to and has shown us might exist? Would not the situation be more unpleasant and dangerous than to strike out those words in regard to our right to interfere?

I presume if in the future the Cuban Republic shall go the way of all the South American republics that have thrown off the Spanish yoke—and they will have to learn by degrees to govern themselves—we might find it necessary to interfere, if the conditions there became intolerable. But that would be reaching away ahead, and I do not think we need to run and hunt trouble.

Here is the whole difficulty—that we are, in the face of Almighty God and Christendom, telling a lie when we make that demand, because the declaration of war did not warrant any such expectation.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MORGAN. Did the Senator address a question to me?

Mr. HALE. When have we felt called upon in any way to interfere with the Central and South American Republics because they have not got so perfect a scheme of government there as we have? Have we not let them go on and work out their own salvation?

Mr. TILLMAN. There is an insurrection against the Government in Colombia now, and we read every day about a certain attitude and condition of two contending factions.

Mr. HALE. Suppose there is.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is none of our business.

Mr. HALE. That is it. We do not interfere, do we? Why not revert Cuba to that same condition and let them take their chances?

Mr. MORGAN. We have got to do that.

Mr. HALE. And that is what this amendment proposes—to leave the government to the people of Cuba.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is accepted and adopted, that would leave us with the right to intervene in behalf of Cuban independence against any foreign interference and maintain the Monroe doctrine, but it would shut us out from going there to meddle with those people.

Mr. HALE. I do not speak about foreign interference. I have not the least fear of foreign interference. There never will be any foreign interference in Cuba. This proposition that is presented gives to the Cubans the opportunity to work out their own government and nobody will interfere. It will not be as perfect as ours, but they will have an opportunity to work it out.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I will abandon the field.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will withdraw the request.

Mr. MORGAN. I am in the time of everybody who wants to talk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have the opportunity of merely stating my position; that is all. I do not want to filibuster here, but there will be filibustering going on between this and Cuba if you adopt that, as that is a nest of filibustering.

It is an invitation to it. And when they want to go down there to rectify the Cubans we will keep a sort of Sunday school down there with an army, at any time and every time that they do not do exactly what we want them to do. They will never put themselves into that attitude. We could not extend a better invitation to those high-tempered and honorable people to rebel, to kick at least against what we are doing, than to put in that provision, which is continuous.

The Senator from South Carolina asked me when it would end. I will tell him never, in my opinion. It is continuous, giving us a right to interfere with their method of conducting their own government in respect to their own people, and then trying to house that or shelter it under the idea of the Monroe doctrine.

Whoever heard of such an application as that made of the Monroe doctrine before, that it gives us the right not only to fence off outside the United States and prevent them from coming in and establishing institutions that might be dangerous to the liberties of the United States, sooner or later, but also the right to enter into these different governments, to visit them, look into their affairs, to determine whether or not their governments are adequate to the protection of the life, personal liberty, and property of their own people?

Mr. President, we can not hope for anything from those people when we start at them in this way, and the world will laugh at it. They will mock when we come at them on the one hand and say you shall amend your constitution and put these things in the organic law, and then on the other hand say all these matters shall be provided for in a treaty.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Alabama pardon me a minute?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will direct his attention to a dispatch which came two days ago, I think, from England, that this proposed suzerainty, for it is nothing more than that——

Mr. MORGAN. That is it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is a sweet morsel under the tongues of Chamberlain and Salisbury, because they are excusing themselves now to Christendom by comparing the purpose of the United States, in the face of the solemn obligations in the declaration of war, with their infamous proceedings in South Africa.

Mr. MORGAN. I saw the dispatch, Mr. President, and, having spoken the day before I saw it in the same line with respect to the parallelism between our case and that of England with reference to the Boers, I was afraid I would be accused of plagiarizing some British idea in the discussion of this question in the Senate.

It is a perfectly obvious case. We are giving to the British people, and they are adopting it instantly, the best argument we know how to give to those people to justify them under the claim of suzerainty in the butcheries which are inflicted upon the Boer people.

Now, I have not had much to say, I have not had anything to say, about the Boer or the British war. But, Mr. President, before the war broke out quite a good while I had the honor of introducing a resolution here pledging the Government of the United States to maintain republican institutions in Africa and Liberia and the Transvaal, the Orange Free State, and wherever else republican institutions might be found. It went to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it had not touched the table until it was dead. It is dead yet.

But my views on that question have not died. I have not thought it was worth while for the United States to do more than I asked the United States Government to do for Cuba, to declare our neutrality between the contending forces. I thought that was our duty, and I did that, and I was willing to abide by it, and I am yet, until some event may occur when we shall have an opportunity of determining for ourselves whether it is better for the institutions of freedom that we have incorporated in the American system and in the American Constitution that we should assist by advice, counsel, or intervention.

We are not free from that yet. That is the cloud, Mr. President, that still hovers over Africa as it is hovering over a good many other countries besides Africa to-day. I am not inattentive to it, but at the same time I am helpless to do anything, and I do not want to do anything that will involve our country in a responsibility that is not necessary and unless it is absolutely imperative.

But we are furnishing the example here; we are establishing a suzerainty, a protectorate over the island of Cuba, and this particular part of this third proposition that the Senator from Arkansas moves to strike out is the farthest reach that suzerain or protector has ever made in the direction of the control of the internal affairs of a government over whom we assume a magistracy.

That is the situation we are in to-night, and it is a dreadful situation. It is an alarming situation, and I have begged from the time this thing was first brought into the Senate that it should not be pressed upon this bill.

I took an attitude of supplication about it, because with my extreme apprehension of the dangers in which we are involved, looking forward to the time that there might be something like this, I repeat, I offered the other side of the Chamber an amendment which would increase the power of the President of the United States to call the militia into service in Cuba. To-day we have got no such law. Cuba is a foreign country—or elsewhere that it might be necessary to protect the treaties or the laws of the United States against rebellion or insurrection or some other obstruction.

You rejected it. I did not care about arguing it. I did not want to argue it for the reason that I did not want any person to say that I had even by suggestion waked up an idea which was going to be one of a threatening character to the people of the United States. I remained mute and let you kill that amendment. I offered it to you.

Now, Mr. President, I am perfectly persuaded in my own mind that if we put this legislative ultimatum at those people in Cuba it will not be two months, perhaps it will be less time than that, when the roll of the drum will be heard in our country summoning the volunteers to go to Cuba to put down an insurrection. I believe it is the best invitation for strife and war that has ever been put into a paper to be tendered to another government, and having cleared my skirts of this I do not care to say much more about it.

Yesterday I read a statement that I made to the Cubans when they came and asked me for it, headed by General Garcia and some 20 gentlemen of great importance and great ability, who are now the chief men in the management of the constitutional convention in Cuba. I was frank to state to them, as they requested it in 16 propositions, I believe, exactly what I thought of the legal situation, and I would not converse with them except on paper.

They replied to me, and I have got the reply in my desk. I have not read it to the Senate for the reason that I do not want to express the indignation of those gentlemen at the propositions that I had to make to them, I being known amongst them as well as other people as one of the best friends they ever had in the United States.

They expressed their indignation to a friend. I informed the State Department by sending the paper directly to the State Department. I had no conversation with any person in the world about it, but I know what I am talking about, and I know that that same spirit to-day prevails in Cuba and will not be given up without strife, and our best plan with those people is to treat them with absolute justice and fairness, but to hear what they have got to say; not put a legislative ultimatum at them that we have got to repeal hereafter if it is not in accordance with the wishes of the Cuban people.

And we go at them in regard to this Isle of Pines to which we have got a clear title, perfectly clear, undeniably clear, and we say to them the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty. There is another trouble that we invite, and there is no necessity for it. They are perfectly willing to admit upon a fair interpretation (there is no interpretation about it, it is an express thing) that we are entitled to the Isle of Pines when we present that.

But, Mr. President, they are not willing, having formed their constitution, to amend it by an ordinance that will contain the proposition that the Senator from Arkansas wants to strike out of this third article. They will not be willing to do it, and we are wasting time and doing very much worse than that by tendering it. I do not care about debating it. I have said as much about it as I want to say.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, before this amendment is adopted I want to say a word for the people of the United States. I am not speaking to-night for the people of Cuba or any of their rights. I want, as far as it is possible for me to do so, to preserve the honor of the people of the United States and their organic law.

Mr. President, the fundamental error in this amendment, which establishes a protectorate over the island of Cuba, consists in supposing that every officer of the United States all combined is a sovereign. That is the fundamental error. All of them combined is not a sovereign. It is not intrusted by the people with that power. It is intrusted by the people with certain named powers, and those powers have been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The people of the United States made this Government. They made the law themselves through their representatives—not the Senate, nor the House, but the convention of the people from the different States framed the law, and we lose sight of the fact that the people enacted that law and only the people can change it.

Mr. President, you will search that instrument in vain from one end of it to the other among the powers granted to the Congress, to both Houses, or to the President, or to the judiciary, to find any authority of any kind to establish a protectorate. You can not pass laws if you obey that Constitution that will apply to any spot on earth that the United States does not own.

Mr. President, so much I have said in reference to trying to save the people's law. I want to say one word now about their honor.

Senators and Representatives and the President pledged their word in the plainest possible language, written by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. He induced the Senate and the House of Representatives to pledge their word, and it is on your statute books, that these people "are, and of right ought to be, free and independent." That is the pledge we made, and so far as I am concerned I intend to keep it.

Mr. MORGAN. And the sovereign.

Mr. PETTUS. Free and independent are the words used in the resolution; that they "are, and of right ought to be, free and independent." That takes it all in. You can not add another word to that sentence that would make them more separate than those do from all other authority.

That is our pledge. Now, what are we doing here to-night? Mr. President, we are violating that pledge as plainly as men can do it, and there is no man, I do not care who he is, who is not bound to see it, although he may waive it off as we do other things we do not want to perform.

But there is one pretense in this thing that is so naked that every Senator sees it without its being pointed out. You say that you reserve the power over Cuba to carry out your pledges as to what you would do there; that you retain it for that purpose. What pledges, what obligations has this Government ever assumed in any way in reference to Cuba after a permanent government has been established there? This Government did assume the power and did declare that they would establish a government in Cuba—a free and independent government.

When you have done that, what obligation are you under? Yet there is a pretense in that very amendment that we shall be under obligation afterwards, when there is no sign or scintilla of an obligation that will rest upon us after a government is established there. We pledged ourselves to that course, and to-night we are violating every one of the pledges we made to the people of Cuba and to the world, and we are bringing disgrace on the name of the American people. That is what we are doing.

Ah, Mr. President, the man who has read history would be a blind man if he did not see what it means. It means exactly what that old English adage meant—

> That they should take who have the power,
> And they should keep who can.

This is a great nation, a powerful nation, a wonderful nation. It has the power, and it intends to take, and it intends to hold. That is the disgrace that we are bringing upon the American name; and if we have any spark of love of country in our bosoms we ought to keep that name untarnished at home and abroad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, paragraph 3, line 21, after the word "independence," it is proposed to strike out the words:

The maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, paragraph 3, line 21, after the word "independence," it is proposed to strike out "the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty;" so that the paragraph if amended would read:

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and vote "nay."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], who has not voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Bate,	Culberson,	Martin,	Turley,
Berry,	Foraker,	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,
Caffery,	Kenney,	Rawlins,
Clay,	Lindsay,	Teller,

NAYS—43.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Kearns,	Proctor,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Bard,	Foster,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Beveridge,	Gallinger,	McComas,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Hale,	McCumber,	Simon,
Carter,	Hanna,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Penrose,	Thurston,
Deboe,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Warren,
Depew,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore.
Dillingham,	Kean,	Pritchard,

NOT VOTING—24.

Allen,	Elkins,	McLaurin,	Scott,
Baker,	Fryo,	Mason,	Sullivan,
Chilton,	Harris,	Money,	Taliaferro,
Clapp,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Vest,
Clark,	McBride,	Platt, N. Y.	Wellington,
Daniel,	McEnery,	Quay,	Wolcott.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. For the purpose of giving the conferees a chance to save the Isle of Pines to the United States without a row with Cuba, I propose to strike out the sixth proposition of the amendment, in lines 19 and 20, which read "the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, paragraph 6, line 19, after the word "Cuba," it is proposed to strike out "the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty;" so that the paragraph, if so amended, would read:

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be adopted. It seems to me this is the most apparent illustration of the Anglo-Saxon greed for land ever presented in a legislative body. The Isle of Pines is a sand bank, uninhabited, utterly worthless, without a harbor, and although it has been heretofore a part of Cuba under the government of Cuba, governed from Cuba, and regarded by all the world as a part of Cuba, the same as the other islands along its coast, we propose to present a proposition for a contention over this worthless sand bar, simply to illustrate our greed for something that is not worth having, because it is a piece of the earth's surface.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Government of the United States could throw away a great deal of territory which the Senator from South Dakota thinks is not worth having, I have no doubt; but he is very much mistaken, or else I am, and the geographers are very much mistaken, if the Isle of Pines is not a very valuable possession, if it has not got a good harbor with deep water, if it is not a very important naval station, and if it is not also the only place in which the United States can defend herself against the supposed power of Great Britain at Santa Lucia and at Jamaica.

I do not care now about having a controversy with the Senator on questions of geography, which I suppose can be settled by a reference to the books; but certainly he has stated just the reverse of what I stated yesterday upon authority and after consultation with the Senators who had this matter in charge, and who, I think, know what they are talking about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I move now, for the purpose of giving the conference committee a chance to relieve us from presenting an ultimatum to Cuba, which is going to produce great discord here, to add, on page 2, after line 3, the words "which are hereby submitted for the consideration of the constitutional convention;" so that these propositions shall be submitted to the consideration of the constitutional convention, which we say here that convention shall adopt as a part of its ordinances.

I do not want to compel the convention to accept it by an act of Congress unless the convention shall have some opportunity at least to debate it and consider it. The language will read as follows, if the amendment be put in:

The President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows, which are hereby submitted for the consideration of the constitutional convention.

I think we had better put this subject rather politely than otherwise, to say the least of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 3, paragraph 5, line 11, after the word "plans," I move to strike out the words "to be mutually agreed upon."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, paragraph 5, line 11, after the word "plans," it is proposed to strike out the words "to be mutually agreed upon;" so as to make the paragraph read:

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as the commerce of the Southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, since the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to the fifth paragraph of this amendment has been voted down, I deem it just to myself that I should take about two minutes in explaining the reasons why I shall vote against this amendment.

I do not entertain the same views in regard to Cuba that I do in regard to the Philippine Islands. As an original proposition, if the people of the island of Cuba were to ask to be annexed to the United States, with the lights that I have before me now, I would vote in favor of the annexation of Cuba to the United States, but I desire to say that we made a sacred promise and pledge on our part that we would not interfere with the affairs of the island of Cuba; and I do not believe that we can adopt this entire amendment and carry out in good faith the promise which we made to the island of Cuba.

If you take the third paragraph of the amendment, it authorizes the Government of the United States to go to the island of Cuba every time there is an insurrection there for the purpose of suppressing it; and, consequently, we can send our soldiers there every year for the purpose of maintaining what we may believe to be a good government there. It will be indirectly the United States carrying on a government in the island of Cuba.

I believe that the time will come when the people of the island of Cuba will ask to be annexed to the United States. I believe the way for us to expect to bring about this result is to be just and to carry out the promises which we have made to the people of the island of Cuba. This will lead to good feeling between those people and our Government, and will finally result in the island of Cuba being annexed to our Government. But I believe that a nation ought to carry out all of its promises; and when we insert in this amendment that we reserve the right to go there and interfere in their internal affairs, to see to it that they shall maintain, I say, a good government there, we practically take charge of their internal affairs. If that amendment had been adopted, I would have voted in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]; but, for the reasons I have stated, I shall now vote against the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. The fourth section of the resolution declaring war against Spain is familiar to all Senators, but some of them seem to have forgotten its exact language. It reads as follows:

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

That resolution was adopted at 1 o'clock at night, after one of the most exciting and momentous debates that I have ever known in this Senate or that any other man has ever known. The reason why every Democrat voted against it, although the Democratic party had forced the Republicans to bring on the war, was because we contended that it ought to carry with it a recognition of the then existing government.

I want to read to Senators a list of some of the Republicans who, at that solemn hour——

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator's words might be misunderstood. We voted for the fourth resolution, but we voted against the conference report, which left out the "republic of Cuba."

Mr. TILLMAN. I am only speaking of the parlimentary situation. While we had forced this vote up to the last vote, we voted against the conference report because it left out, as the Senator from Colorado says, the section which provided for the recognition of the then existing Cuban republic. We voted for this resolution, of course; and here are the Republicans, or some of them, who, under their oath of office, and as men, gentlemen, and Christians, or who claim to be and who are recognized as such, made this solemn pledge to Almighty God, to their country, to Cuba, and to the world:

Messrs. ALDRICH, ALLISON, BURROWS, CARTER, CHANDLER, CULLOM, DAVIS, ELKINS, FAIRBANKS, FORAKER, FRYE, GALLINGER, HOAR, HALE, HANNA, HAWLEY, LODGE, MCMILLAN, MASON, MORRILL, PENROSE, PERKINS, PLATT of Connecticut, PROCTOR, QUAY, SEWELL, SPOONER, and WOLCOTT.

Now, gentlemen, you say you have the power and are ready to take the responsibility. If your action to-night shall precipitate a war between the patriots of Cuba, who have cherished their desire for liberty and held Spain by the throat, with her two hundred and odd thousand men there until she was helpless and could not repress their aspirations; if you choose by your greed and inordinate purpose, unreasonable and unholy, to belie your professions and want to do this infamy, then I wipe my hands of all responsibility for it and you may have it all.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am loath to differ with anything that the committee has brought in here after careful consideration, but the more I think about it the more I think it would be unfortunate to adopt this amendment without changing the third clause, and I move that the third clause be amended as follows:

After the word "independence," in line 21, page 2, insert "and;" then, in line 22, strike out the words "protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for;" change the word "discharging" to "discharge," and insert the word "of" before the words "the obligations," in line 23; so that it would then read as follows:

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the discharge of the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

Mr. CLAY. That is similar to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. FORAKER. It is not exactly the Jones amendment, but it reaches practically the same result. It seems to me that if we adopt this amendment as it was reported by the committee it will be a constant menace to both the United States and Cuba. I may be mistaken about this.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I simply want to ask a question. Can the Senator point out any obligation that the United States will be under in reference to Cuba after a permanent government has been established there, or after the island has been pacified and surrendered to the people?

Mr. FORAKER. I am not asserting that there is any such obligation; but the committee has assumed that there is such an obligation, and if that be true, whatever it may be, the government of Cuba will have to assume to discharge it.

Mr. PETTUS. I wanted to know, just in that same connection, if the committee think there may be such an obligation, what in the name of Heaven is the obligation that will exist after we have surrendered the government of the island to its own people?

Mr. FORAKER. I believe there is in the treaty some language to the effect that the United States, when it leaves Cuba, will advise the government that succeeds us there and assume to discharge certain obligations in the way of protecting life, liberty, etc. That is my recollection, but I have not the text of the treaty before me.

Mr. SPOONER. I have it before me. It is the sixteenth article.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish the Senator would read it, if he has it.

Mr. SPOONER. It is as follows:

ARTICLE XVI.

It is understood that any obligations assumed in this treaty by the United States with respect to Cuba are limited to the time of its occupancy thereof; but it will, upon the termination of such occupancy, advise any government established in the island to assume the same obligations.

Mr. PETTUS. "Advise?"

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; "advise." What that language may mean men might differ about. I am assuming that the committee is correct in what it evidently assumed, that there would be some kind of obligation.

What I was about to say when I was interrupted by the Senator from Alabama was this——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to have another moment myself, but I will yield with pleasure to the Senator, if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to suggest as a possible reason why the language which you have just spoken of is put in, and ought to stay in, that we have witnessed in the recent past the entry of a European battle ship into the harbor of San Domingo, I believe it was, making a demand at the mouth of a cannon upon that Republic for something, I do not know what—some supposed claim or obligation to some German citizen, I think it was.

Now, if Cuba is a kind of a ward in chancery of the United States—and I think it is—we would not tolerate any European nation going there and undertaking to browbeat or to rob that people; but I can see a great deal of reason and justice in the contention that we are under some obligations to European powers to have Cuba not do such things to their citizens as will embroil her with them.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if I may be allowed now to proceed, I want to state what it was in my mind to say a moment ago when interrupted, that if we adopt this amendment as reported by the committee it seems to me that it is likely to lead to conditions down there that would seem to invite intervention.

Suppose they have an election. One party or the other will be defeated. The party that is out is liable to complain, and with this kind of a provision, it seems to me it might be very naturally done; it would be thought that by making objection, by making trouble, and creating difficulties, they would make a condition that would lead to an intervention of the United States to put the successful party out. It seems to me that, instead of having a restraining influence, it would have an exciting influence and that the very result which the committee evidently sought to accomplish would be defeated, and the opposite would result.

Again, it seems to me that it is unnecessary. The language of this paragraph is that we shall be allowed to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence and the maintenance of a government capable of discharging the obligations the United States has assumed.

Now, if we intervene we will intervene for the purpose of maintaining a government of that character. It is necessarily a government that can protect life, liberty, and property.

We are not to intervene when they have a government on the ground that their government does not protect life, liberty, and property, but we are to be allowed to intervene, according to this, only when they do not have a government capable of it. If they have a government capable of discharging the obligations which the United States has assumed, it will of necessity be a government capable of protecting life, liberty, and property.

Therefore I think we are accomplishing the same result which the committee had in view when we change the language as proposed, and it removes the invitation, if I may so characterize it, to which I have referred, which it seems to me would be a sort of standing menace to us as well as to the Cubans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 21, after the word "independence," insert the word "and;" after the word "the," in line 22, strike out the words "protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for;" in line 23 change the word "discharging" to "discharge" and insert the word "of" immediately following; so that the paragraph will read:

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the discharge of the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. FORAKER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Bate,	Culberson,	Martin,	Turley,
Berry,	Foraker,	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,
Caffery,	Kenney,	Rawlins,
Clay,	Lindsay,	Teller,

NAYS—42.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Bard,	Foster,	McComas,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Gallinger,	McCumber,	Simon,
Burrows,	Hale,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Carter,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Penrose,	Thurston,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Warren,
Deboe,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, Conn.	Wetmore.
Depew,	Kean,	Pritchard,
Dillingham,	Kearns,	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—25.

Allen,	Frye,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Baker,	Hansbrough,	Money,	Vest,
Chilton,	Harris,	Morgan,	Wellington,
Clapp,	Heitfeld,	Platt, N. Y.	Wolcott.
Clark,	McBride,	Quay,
Daniel,	McEnery,	Scott,
Elkins,	McLaurin,	Sullivan,

So Mr. FORAKER'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. BERRY and Mr. LODGE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to state that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] has sent word to me that he is in favor of this amendment and is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. I announced the pair.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Aldrich,	Chandler,	Fairbanks,	Hansbrough,
Allison,	Cullom,	Foraker,	Hawley,
Bard,	Deboe,	Foster,	Hoar,
Beveridge,	Depew,	Gallinger,	Kean,
Burrows,	Dillingham,	Hale,	Kearns,
Carter,	Dolliver,	Hanna,	Kyle,

Lodge,	Penrose,	Quarles,	Stewart,
McComas,	Perkins,	Sewell,	Thurston,
McCumber,	Platt, Conn.	Shoup,	Warren,
McMillan,	Pritchard,	Simon,	Wetmore.
Nelson,	Proctor,	Spooner,

NAYS—20.

Bacon,	Clay,	Lindsay,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Teller,
Berry,	Culberson,	Martin,	Tillman,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Turley,
Caffery,	Kenney,	Pettus,	Turner.

NOT VOTING—25.

Allen,	Frye,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Baker,	Harris,	Money,	Vest.
Chilton,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Wellington,
Clapp,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.	Wolcott.
Clark,	McBride,	Quay,
Daniel,	McEnery,	Scott,
Elkins,	McLaurin,	Sullivan,

So the amendment submitted by Mr. PLATT of Connecticut was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is a committee amendment which was passed over.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment appears on page 12.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, beginning in line 20, the Committee on Military Affairs reported to insert as an amendment the following:

Provided, That appointments to fill original vacancies in the grade of captain in the Quartermaster's Department, Subsistence Department, and Pay Department may be made from officers of volunteers commissioned since April 21, 1898, and the age limit prescribed as to chaplains shall not apply to persons who served as chaplains of volunteers after said date who were under 42 years of age when originally appointed.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The first vote is on the pending amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. CHANDLER. I could not hear what the amendment was.

Mr. CARTER. It is the amendment on page 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The vote first is on the amendment to the amendment, which includes all the staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland submits an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated. The Chair was not aware that it had been presented.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the beginning of line 21, page 12, the following:

In the lowest grade in the Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, and the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, and-

Mr. PETTUS. We do not understand the amendment, because it is not stated in connection with the text. How will it read when amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will again be stated, and the amendment will be reported as it will read if amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in line 21, page 12, the following:

In the lowest grade of the Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, and the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, and.

So that if amended the clause will read:

Provided, That appointments to fill original vacancies in the lowest grade in the Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, and the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, and in the grade of captain in the Quartermaster's Department, Subsistence Department, and Pay Department may be made from officers of volunteers commissioned since April 21, 1898, and the age limit prescribed as to chaplains shall not apply to persons who served as chaplains of volunteers after said date who were under 42 years of age when originally appointed.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Only a word. That includes all the staffs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHOUP. By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, after the word "possessions," in line 7, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That leaves of absence which may be granted officers of the Regular or Volunteer Army serving in the Territory of Alaska or without the limits of the United States for the purpose of returning thereto, or which may have been granted such officers for such purpose since the 13th day of October, 1898, shall be regarded as taking effect on the date such officers reach, or may have reached, the United States, respectively, and as terminating, or as having terminated, on the respective dates of their departure from the United States in returning to their commands, as authorized by an order of the Secretary of War dated October 13, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

For the engraving of medals of honor authorized by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1863, and for the purchase and engraving of bars or clasps for the same, $200: Provided, That whenever an officer or enlisted man of the Army to whom the Congressional medal of honor has been or shall hereafter be awarded shall again earn the medal under the conditions prescribed in said act an additional medal shall not be issued to him, but in lieu thereof the President may cause to be presented to him, in the name of Congress, a suitably inscribed bar or clasp to be worn with the medal previously awarded to him, and a similar bar or clasp may be awarded for each subsequent occasion on which such officer or enlisted man shall earn the medal by most distinguished gallantry in action: Provided further, That hereafter no award of a medal of honor or of the bar or clasp herein authorized shall be made after the lapse of more than three years from the date of the performance of the act for which such award shall be claimed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation.

Mr. CARTER. I will briefly state that the point of order is not well taken, for the reason that the proposed appropriation is recommended by the Secretary of War in a communication which I hold in my hand. It has been presented here by authority of a majority of the committee. This item is an appropriation pure and simple, with certain regulations attached to the expenditure of the money, considered under all the rules, I believe, as being pertinent and proper. I do not wish to detain the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that it is recommended?

Mr. CARTER. It is recommended.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is not estimated for. There is no estimate for it that can be produced.

Mr. CARTER. It is recommended by the head of a Department, and in that behalf comes under the rule.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is not an estimate. The Senator is well aware it is not an estimate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair correctly understand that it is to carry out the terms of existing law?

Mr. CARTER. The appropriation is for the purpose of carrying into effect the conditions and requirements of an act approved March 3, 1863, relating to the subject-matter to which the amendment relates.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, Mr. President, it is new legislation, enlarging the scope of existing law, and it is not to carry out its provisions at all. That law has been in force and has been carried out for years, ever since it was enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendment provides that a medal shall not be given for any event that occurred more than three years ago. Now, nobody in the war of the rebellion, however brilliant the act may be discovered to have been on examining his history, can have a medal. They can not go back more than three years to give a man a medal.

Mr. PETTUS. As I understand the amendment, it authorizes the President of the United States to give a medal to those to whom he thinks proper to give it. Is that the understanding of the mover?

Mr. CARTER. The conditions under which medals may be awarded for gallant service in action are not changed. Those conditions are prescribed by the act of March 3, 1863. This amendment, however, provides that instead of granting a new medal for each act of gallantry there shall be added a bar, upon which an inscription shall be made indicating the particular act of gallantry for which the bar stands in the record.

Mr. PETTUS. Who is to award it?

Mr. CARTER. Of course the act of 1863 provides that the Secretary of War shall award medals for gallant conduct.

Mr. PETTUS. He shall determine who shall have them?

Mr. CARTER. The conditions of the law are very specific, and the particular point of limitation referred to by the Senator from Connecticut is the only proposition here that adds, if you please, to existing law. Under the act referred to there is no limitation as to the time within which proof of gallant service or of a gallant act shall be submitted. The records of the Department are now being burdened with applications for medals based upon acts over 40 years old. It is found exceedingly difficult to get at the very truth of the conditions to which these applicants refer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Can nobody remember more than three years?

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator allow me for one moment? It is desired by this amendment to provide that proof of gallant service shall be submitted when the facts are within the recent knowledge of the person testifying.

Mr. HOAR. Then it does change existing law.

Mr. CARTER. It does not change existing law. It fixes limitations which existing law does not provide.

Mr. HOAR. The existing law, as I understand the Senator from Montana, authorizes this to be done at any time.

Mr. PETTUS. I am claiming my rights, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to finish the sentence?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly; but I like to have it done in order.

Mr. HOAR. The existing law authorizes and directs the thing to be done at any time. Now we come in with a new law, which says it shall not be done in any case that is more than three years old. I can not see why it is not a change of existing law.

Mr. PETTUS. I asked a question of the Senator from Montana, but he did not answer it. Who is to decide who shall have the medals?

Mr. CARTER. This amendment has nothing whatever to do with the designation of the person who is to decide. The act of 1863 in specific terms prescribes that the Secretary of War shall award the medals.

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to ask my friend whether he thinks three years is a reasonable limitation?

Mr. CARTER. I submit the mattter as submitted by the War Department. If it appears to the Senator that five years would be a more reasonable time, that might be substituted for three.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should say ten or twenty.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the friends of this bill have more controverted questions and new legislation to put upon it, it seems to me we had better adjourn and take another day for it. I supposed, of course, they had perfected their bill and were ready to vote upon it, but if not, I shall very soon make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CARTER. This is the last amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. THURSTON. I second the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Rather than have any controversy about the matter I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted as an additional section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to have suitable medals of honor struck, to be presented to the volunteers, regulars sailors, and marines who voluntarily remained on duty in the Philippines after their terms of service had expired, and that for the purpose of this section a sum sufficient is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is a controverted question. None of those men stayed there voluntarily. The amendment would be a lie. They were forced to stay there. They were compelled to stay there, engaged in an unwilling service. With the word "voluntarily" stricken out I am willing that the amendment shall be adopted. It ought to read "conscripted and forced to stay there by the Administration," as they were. The testimony is abundant to that effect, and if the amendment is to be adopted I will put in that evidence.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the fact to be that the Senator from Pennsylvania does not insist upon his amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand the Senator from South Dakota will not object to the amendment if the word "voluntarily" is stricken out.

Mr. PETTIGREW. No.

Mr. PENROSE. All right. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, page 2, of the amendment, it is proposed to strike out the word "voluntarily."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania as amended.

The amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to come in on page 9, after line 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, after line 14, add:

and any original vacancy in the grade of major, not filled by the promotion of officers of said department, may be filled by any volunteer officer now in service in said department.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems remarkable to me that new amendments entirely foreign to the bill should be insisted upon at this hour, and it did not come from the Committee on Military Affairs at that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary has not yet concluded the reading of the amendment. The text will be read as it will read if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That upon the occurrence of a vacancy in the grade of colonel in the Inspector-General's Department after the present lieutenant-colonels therein shall have been promoted or retired, such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter the number of officers authorized for that department shall be as follows: one inspector-general with the rank of brigadier general; 3 inspectors-general with the rank of colonel; 4 inspectors-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 9 inspectors-general with the rank of major; and any original vacancy in the grade of major not filled by the promotion of officers of said department may be filled by any volunteer officer now in service in said department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know what particular persons this is intended to take care of.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is intended to take care of all persons now in the service in that department.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no point of order on this amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; the Chair will rule that there is not, if you tell him to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon, and will suggest to the Senator that he ought to observe the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will undertake to satisfy the Senator from South Dakota. The committee put in a ten-line amendment to the bill, and this is an addition to that and clearly in order if the original amendment is adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota make a point of order against it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I did make a point of order upon the amendment, but I do not insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are changes made there that I never heard anything of, either in the Committee on Military Affairs or elsewhere. I do not know where the creature was born.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHOUP. I have an amendment to propose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope we will quit amending the bill and pass it. It is getting to be time to go to bed, after as much deviltment as we have done to-day.

Mr. SHOUP. On page 36, line 12, after the word "clerks," I move to insert:

and other civilian assistants.

So that if amended it will read:

For services of surveyors, draftsmen, photographers, master laborers, clerks, and other civilian assistants to engineer officers of the staff or division corps and department commanders, $25,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I desire to offer an amendment, and I ask to have it read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 1, after the word "employees," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That one of the above-mentioned employees shall be an expert embalmer and undertaker of at least ten years' practical experience and understand every detail of this profession and also disinfecting, and be required to pass an examination as to his fitness to examine and instruct. His duties shall be to examine and instruct all those employed by the Government for this purpose in the proper sanitary manner of caring for the dead. Also to examine and report on all articles and supplies used for this purpose and such other duties as the Secretary of War may from time to time direct. He is to be appointed by the Secretary of War and is to have the pay and allowance of an examining dental surgeon.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move to lay that amendment under the table. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it; the noes have it, and the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I did not understand that we were voting upon the amendment, and at this hour of the morning I have no disposition to take the time of the Senate, but the Senate voted upon it apparently without any true conception of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will still be open if the Senator desires to address himself to it. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, this is a simple proposition. A very large amount of money has been spent by inexperienced persons in the matter of embalming the dead that are conveyed from Manila and the islands here.

The work has been performed by inexperienced persons, not having the fluids and other things necessary for the preservation of the dead. It may strike some Senators as something remarkably funny, but it is a matter of fact. It is one of the duties we owe. If we attempt to bring back to the mothers and friends the remains of the dead who die across the water, the bodies should be treated scientifically and properly, so that all that is common and usual and decent in Christian treatment of the bodies of the dead should be had.

There is no such provision now, and I believe that there ought to be. The amendment provides that a man shall be appointed who shall have a certain number of years of experience and is competent to prepare the bodies. The expense will be slight, and it will put intelligence in the charge of the care of our dead, where we now have nothing but ignorance.

The evidence which has been brought to my attention of the lack of care of the dead soldiers of our country whose bodies have been brought is something appalling and shocking even to think about, to read about, and to speak about. This is a simple plan whereby a scientific man, a man who understands his business, shall be selected by the Secretary of War who will be competent to teach others and to pass upon the material used. Large sums of money are being wasted, if not improperly wasted and squandered, whereas this would not be the case if there was a man who understood the business to properly prepare the materials and educate other people in the use of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land in force in the Philippine Islands to control the official conduct of every officer or agent of the Government of the United States who now holds or shall be appointed to any legislative, or executive, or judicial office or function in the civil government of said islands under the provisions of this act, and it shall be so respected and obeyed by such persons in their official conduct relating to the government of the people of said islands.

Mr. MORGAN. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). I announce a pair between myself and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANNA (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and owing to his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I see that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] is not here, and I withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bacon,	Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Teller,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Berry,	Culberson,	Martin,	Turley,

Elkins,	McBride,	Quay,

So Mr. MORGAN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. No appointment to office in the Philippine Islands shall be made by the President, after the date of the approval of this act, without the advice and consent of the Senate, but the President may issue commissions to persons selected for appointment in the manner provided by the laws of the United States which apply to offices in the States and Territories thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MCCOMAS. Is not that liable to a point of order? I will make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland make the point of order?

Mr. MCCOMAS. No, I will not insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I should like to know what amendment it is that we are voting upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], which was read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I did not hear it, and I do not know what the proposition is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the roll call.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Turley,
Bate,	Culberson,	Pettus,	Turner.
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Teller,
Butler,	Mallory,	Tillman,

NAYS—41.

Clark,	Jones, Nev.	Morgan,	Wolcott.
Clay,	Kenney,	Platt, N. Y.
Daniel,	Kyle,	Quay,
Elkins,	Lindsay,	Rawlins,

So Mr. MORGAN's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no other amendments proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the question will be put on concurring in the amendments in gross. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no amendment be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. COCKRELL. In consequence of the amendments which have been put on the bill in regard to the Philippine Islands and Cuba I shall feel constrained to vote "nay."

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BERRY and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MASON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Kean,	Proctor,
Allison,	Elkins,	Kearns,	Quarles,

Clark,	Lindsay,	Quay,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	McBride,	Rawlins,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CARTER and Mr. NELSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to give notice that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. NELSON. To-morrow morning, at the close of the routine business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the Army appropriation bill just passed, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana moves that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. That never has been done on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BERRY. It has been done on specific bills. It has not been the custom to do it on a general appropriation bill, as I have understood the Senator from Iowa to say.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This bill ought to take the regular course and it should go to the House for action upon the amendments.

Mr. CARTER. At this late hour in the session I believe it is important to expedite the public business as rapidly as possible.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator will expedite the bill faster if he will pursue the usual course.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not believe we shall advance rapidly the progress of the bill by requesting a conference now.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It will not advance the progress of the bill; that is sure.

Mr. CARTER. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota withdraw his motion temporarily?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to withdraw that motion until I can make a report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall insist upon my motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be done until I have had an opportunity of reporting the sundry civil appropriation bill with amendments in order that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14018) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments and to submit a report thereon. I ask that it may be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar and the report will be printed, under the rule.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock a. m. Thursday, February 28, 1901) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, February 28, 1901, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of this session the daily hour of meeting be 11 o'clock in the morning instead of 12.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that during the remainder of the session the hour of meeting be 11 o'clock instead of 12. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CLAIM OF GUISEPPE DEFINA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, in connection with my message of January 29, 1901, relative to the lynching of certain Italian subjects at Tallulah, La., a report by the Secretary of State touching a claim for $5,000 presented by the Italian ambassador at Washington on behalf of Guiseppe Defina on account of his being obliged to abandon his home and business.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 26, 1901.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

By unanimous consent, the following resolution of the Senate was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill of the Senate 2471, for the relief of Olivia M. Clifford.

PROPERTY TAKEN BY MILITARY FORCES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1136) for the relief of parties for property taken from them by military forces of the United States, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be well to make a brief statement as to what this is. At the last session of Congress this bill passed the House, I believe unanimously. This is the basis of the bill: Under the terms of surrender of the Confederates to the Union troops——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear, there is so much confusion.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman?

Mr. COX. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

FRANK B. CASE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11598) for the relief of Frank B. Case, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following managers on the part of the House: Mr. METCALF of California, Mr. WATSON of Indiana, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

WILLIAM E. WOODBRIDGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 149) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 9303) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Shell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following conference report. I ask unanimous consent that the report be not read, but that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report, and that the statement only be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We want to be able to learn what this is first.

Mr. HULL. It is the Military Academy bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before consent is given, I ask that the report itself be ordered printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. SULZER. I would like to inquire how long this report is?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee was asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask that the report be printed, although not read.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee this is the same report as was submitted before and rejected by the Senate on account of a code of laws being inserted on hazing.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say it has been printed?

Mr. HULL. It has been printed a week ago.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not ask to have it reprinted if it has been printed.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee ask that it be reprinted?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, not if it has been printed.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill is still open to objection. I rose for the purpose of objecting.

Mr. HULL. I do not understand it can be.

The SPEAKER. That is not the question now. The first question is upon the dispensing with the reading of the report, and upon that the gentleman from New York wants to ask a question.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa how long this report is?

Mr. HULL. Very short.

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12846) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11 and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Navy," at the end of line 17, page 1 of the amendment, add: "or Marine Corps, until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 2 of the amendment, lines 17 and 18, strike out "allowance and emoluments;" and on page 3, line 6, strike out "officers and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL,
CHAS. DICK,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. J. SEWELL,
F. E. WARREN,
W. A. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Amendment No. 1 relates to examinations for admission of cadets to the Military Academy and to hazing. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment and agrees to the same with an amendment limiting penalty to two years after graduation of class, and making it apply to Marine Corps.

Amendments Nos. 2, 3, and 4 are corrections of errors only, and House recedes.

Amendment No. 5 relates to military band at the Academy and establishes by law the band as now organized. The House recedes and agrees to the same with an amendment which gives the teacher of music the pay of a second lieutenant, but refuses him the right to be retired as an officer.

Amendments Nos. 6, 7, and 8 are corrections, and House recedes.

Amendment No. 9 simply specifies number of paragraphs.

Amendment No. 10 simply transposes words.

Amendment No. 11 relates to pay of master of swords, and Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 12 gives the master of swords the rank of first lieutenant, and provides that when a vacancy occurs in the office an officer of the Army should be detailed. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 13 relates to totals, and Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 14 relates to additional facilities for lecture rooms.

Amendment No. 15 makes an $80 appropriation immediately available.

Amendment No. 16 relates only to the total.

Amendment No. 17 increases the appropriation for the cemetery.

Amendment No. 18 appropriates for two double sets of officers' quarters, and House recedes.

Amendment No. 19 inserts appropriation for roads left out by mistake.

Amendment No. 20 makes an additional appropriation for officers' quarters and mess.

Amendment No. 21 relates only to total appropriation.

J. A. T. HULL,
CHAS. DICK,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. What does the gentleman wish?

Mr. SULZER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if this report is unanimous?

Mr. HULL. Absolutely unanimous; signed by all the members of the committee of the Senate and the House, on both sides.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman to explain that amendment with an amendment touching hazing?

The SPEAKER. The Chair must ask the House to be in order. Gentlemen actively trying to discharge their duties can not hear for the conversation on the floor of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I should like to hear the gentleman make an explanation of the amendment as amended.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the amendment in regard to hazing was the only objection encountered in the former conference report. At that time the committee of conference inserted in lieu of the provision of the Senate the bill as prepared and introduced by the special committee of the House, giving a full code of laws on hazing. The Senate refused to accept the report, and the Senate conferees notified the House conferees that the Senate would rather see the bill fail than to have an entire code of laws provided on an appropriation bill; that they believed it ought to be taken up as a separate measure, where amendments could be made and a full discussion had in the House and Senate upon it as an independent measure. I am satisfied, as one of the conferees, and so are my colleagues, one of whom was the chairman of the special committee, that the best thing to be done in this bill was to accept the Senate amendment as originally put in, with a little additional amendment. The Senate amendment is as follows:

That the Superintendent of the Military Academy shall make such rules, to be approved by the Secretary of War, as will effectually prevent the practice of hazing, and any cadet found guilty of participating in or encouraging or countenancing such a practice shall be summarily expelled from the Academy, and shall not thereafter be appointed to the Corps of Cadets or be eligible as a commissioned officer in the Army or Navy.

That is the Senate provision in the bill. The committee amended it by striking out the word "or" after the word "Army" and making it read, shall not "be eligible as a commissioned officer in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps for at least two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member."

That addition was made by reason of the fact that evidence was given by one of my colleagues [Mr. DICK] that a man who had been dismissed from the Academy heretofore had been commissioned in the Marine Corps, and had a higher rank than he would have had if he had gone on and graduated with his class. This amendment was put in so that any cadet expelled from the Academy could not go to another corps and be commissioned in it and thus really benefit by the act of expulsion. I think that is the only question involved here that there is any trouble whatever about: and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in the closing days of the session, with as drastic a measure as this inserted, that it will utterly destroy hazing at West Point; and the best thing the House can do is to adopt the conference report and take it out of further discussion. I want to say further that in my judgment, after conference with Senators and reading the debate, if we send this back to the Senate with a disagreement they will at once recede from their amendment.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VANDIVER. As I understand, and I agree with what the gentleman has said, but I would like to have a little more information on this point——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order.

The SPEAKER. Order is demanded by the gentleman from Texas. The point of order is well taken. All gentlemen are requested to be seated, and to cease conversation.

Mr. VANDIVER. As I understand it, one of the greatest difficulties in the way of enforcing any regulation against hazing at West Point has been found to be this: That after the officers in charge have done their duty and investigated cases of hazing and expelled the cadets the cadets still have recourse to the influence of Senators and Members of Congress by which they have been enabled to be reinstated.

Mr. HULL. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that this provision, if enacted, deprives a cadet of being reappointed to the Academy at any time, and provides against his being commissioned in the Army or the Navy or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class to which he belonged.

Mr. VANDIVER. I heartily indorse that provision because the weakness of the administration largely is due to the fact I have stated.

Mr. HULL. I want to say that in the past, no matter what Administration it is under, any cadet who was expelled went to the delegation and Senators from his State, who would go to the War Department and assume the responsibility and get him put back or commissioned in some other arm of the service. Congress is more to blame than the Department.

Mr. VANDIVER. I hope the gentleman will allow me to say that I think he is mistaken in the interpretation or meaning of my use of the word "administration." I referred to the administration at West Point.

Mr. HULL. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me three or four minutes?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, rather than have the provision with reference to hazing fail entirely, I think it would be better to accept the conference report. But I feel it my duty to call the attention of the House briefly to the case of a cadet appointed by me, which I have learned about since the investigation was held by the committee appointed by the House. Two years ago I nominated as cadet to West Point a young man named Frederick Kensel. He got that appointment not through any favor from me, but as a result of a competitive examination. It happened that his father had been in the Regular Army, was a graduate of West Point, had been an instructor at West Point, and that the boy himself enlisted the day after the Spanish war broke out, and served honorably until November of that year, when he was discharged. He had in him qualities to make an excellent soldier.

He entered West Point on the 13th of June. Very early in July the report shows that he was in the hospital on account of trouble with his eyes. It was not the season of study at West Point and he never had had any difficulty with his eyes before entering the Academy. What happened was that while standing on his head in a tent, which was the rule for the plebes whenever an upper class man entered, he was kicked in the right eye, possibly accidentally, by an upper class man, and he was sent to the hospital. He got out in a few days and while attempting to swallow a teaspoonful of Tabasco sauce, another delicate little pleasantry, he choked and it went over his handkerchief. He was blindfolded with this handkerchief afterwards and that sauce got in his eye. He had to go back again to the hospital on account of trouble with his eye.

The report shows that about the 12th of August he was taken off the sick list and his eyes had so far recovered that he could resume his duties. Three days afterwards he was again in the hospital, as the report shows, with "stomach trouble."

Now, what happened to him during these three days might have been a coincidence simply, without effect upon his health, but this is what happened: He had to eat a great quantity of rice, a couple of boiled cabbages, some 63 prunes, and was compelled to attempt to do 150 eagles, and went into convulsions, and a pillow or blanket was placed over his face, so that his cries could not be heard. As a result, I believe beyond question, of this treatment the physical condition of that boy has been much impaired. On account of this injury and the trouble with his eyes, which necessitated an operation, he was never again able to really do work at the Academy, and had to resign.

Now, I do not wish to call the young gentlemen who indulge in practices of that kind brutes. That epithet has been resented by the defenders of the fine sense of honor at the Academy. I fear also that I might be thought unfair to the brutes if I made such a comparison. But I want to say here, with regard to statements that have been made on this floor, that no such system of hazing exists in any reputable college in this country. While there may be occasionally men who ought never to be anywhere except in a penal institution who get into educational institutions, I believe the sentiment of the college faculties and of the students in all colleges above the fifth grade in this country is overwhelmingly against any such brutal practice. There is no doubt that such practices exist, that they are organized into a system at West Point, and I am glad the conference committee has brought in here a proposition which it seems to me will go a long way toward repressing this practice.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McCALL. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. After the statement the gentleman has made to the House, I want him to say whether he believes these young men guilty of such outrages toward this cadet ought to hold a commission in the United States Army two years after their class graduates, or at any time.

Mr. McCALL. I think those particular young men ought to be in the penitentiary.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to know whether it is customary to have the modification that is recommended by the committee? The Senate expressed its views upon this subject in the language of this amendment. In it there was a provision for all time that cadets deporting themselves as described herein should never be in the Army. This House passed, I think, a drastic measure, quite as drastic as this. I would like to know how this modification came about—whether it came from the conferees on our side. Certainly it could not, it seems to me, come from the conferees of the Senate, for they had declared themselves the other way.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolutions:

House concurrent resolution 89.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses are authorized to include in their report such alterations, changes, and recommendations as they may deem proper with reference to so much of the text of said bill as relates to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3205) for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia.

S. R. 163. Joint resolution regulating licenses to proprietors of theaters in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 81.

Resolved by the House of Representative (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and substantially bound 2,000 copies of "A digest of all the contested-election cases in the House of Representatives of the United States from the First to the Fifty-sixth Congress, inclusive," compiled by Chester H. Rowell, 1,500 for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate, and that in addition to said number there be printed and substantially bound 500 copies, the same to be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the House and distributed from time to time on his order, and that there be further printed and substantially bound the additional number of 50 copies, 10 each to be deposited in the Library of the House of Representatives and in the rooms of the Committees on Elections, and 10 to be delivered to the compiler.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. FRANK G. CLARKE, late a Representative from the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do take its recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to give the House all the information I can on that subject. When we went into conference the conferees of the Senate wanted to withdraw their amendment entirely; they were in favor of eliminating the entire provision on the ground that the Senate had radically changed its views, and if we went back with no modification the chances are that the Senate would refuse to accept this.

One of our conferees on the part of the House, a member of the Committee on Accounts, after thorough examination into the matter, was anxious to have inserted in the bill a proviso which would prevent the issuing of a commission in any other corps than the Army or the Navy to a man who had been expelled. I believe I am correct in that. He brought to our attention the fact that cadets who had been expelled for hazing had come to the Department here, backed by their Congressmen or their Senators, and had received commissions in the Marine Corps, placing them in rank above those of their own classes; so that instead of their expulsion being a punishment to these boys it was a benefit, because it gave them higher rank than they would otherwise have held.

The provision which we propose in the report says, virtually, that no cadet expelled for hazing shall ever afterwards be a graduate of the Military Academy. It provides that he can not be commissioned in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps for two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member. And we believe—I think all of us—that by getting in the additional words "the Marine Corps" we get that which more than counterbalances what we give up in regard to the other matter.

I think my colleague will agree with me on another point, that where a boy who has been expelled for hazing becomes a reputable citizen and wants to go into the Army in case of war, his Representative will introduce here a bill and will insist that the education that the young man had must make him useful in the service, and that he ought not be forever barred because of his action as a youth. We believe that under such circumstances a bill of that character would pass this House and the Senate, just as we have been passing bills in the House restoring men to the ranks in every case of that kind.

To my mind this provision will absolutely kill hazing in the Military Academy. And if it does not, we have before us a bill, drawn by the able members of the special committee, which can be taken up at the next session of Congress, and if we get the necessary votes in the Senate and House can be passed, which will establish a full code of laws on the subject of hazing. But this provision, as it stands, will at least protect the students of the Academy from hazing for the next two years, and, in my judgment, for all time.

I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that while this amendment is desirable, it does not meet one of the serious difficulties in this case. I am informed that there has been issued by the War Department an order giving to every cadet in the examination of matters of discipline at the Military Academy the right to say that he can not answer a given query because it will tend to convict him of a crime. I understand that this order is one of those most vigorously enforced at the Academy. It seems to me that that order is a mistake; that it is not in support of a constitutional provision; that it does not guarantee a constitutional right. The gentleman who has such an idea fails, I think, to appreciate properly that provision of the Constitution which enables anyone to refuse self-conviction. That provision was never intended to apply to the schoolmaster—to him who stands in the place of the parent, and who, in the school, is but carrying out the discipline of the family.

Otherwise, before a father can "spank" a child the younster must have a trial by jury and be convicted of the offense for which the parent proposes to punish him. These officers at the Academy, while they are there in charge of those youth, are standing in the place of the parents of those boys; and that constitutional provision, in my judgment, no more applies to them than it would apply to any parent in maintaining the discipline of his household.

Mr. TALBERT. Does not the constitutional provision have only this effect, that it provides a man can not be put upon the witness stand for the purpose of convicting himself; but after going upon the witness stand is he not obliged to answer any question, even though it may criminate him?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, it is not necessary for me to decide that proposition in order to maintain the one I am urging.

But I understand there are in all these cases of fights 18 persons who know the facts. But under this order the seal of silence is placed upon the lips of those 18 witnesses; any one of them may decline to testify because of that order. If this matter should be sent back to the conference, can not the gentleman do something to remove that sort of trouble in ascertaining and punishing cases of this kind?

Mr. HULL. I do not believe that we could secure the passage of additional legislation beyond what we have submitted to this House if we should go into conference and remain in conference. In my judgment the discussion that has been had on this question in this House and the Senate, and the investigation made by the special committee of this House, has of itself killed hazing at the Military Academy for the next ten years, even if there were not a line of legislation adopted upon the subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, our provision does disgrace the boy who engages in hazing, does make it impossible for his Representative and Senators to secure his reinstatement, does deprive him of a commission in the Army under any circumstances for at least two years after the graduation of his class.

If my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DICK], desires to speak on this subject, I yield him five minutes.

Mr. DICK. Mr. Speaker, this amendment as reported by the conference committee is, in my judgment, the only legislation that can be passed in this Congress upon the question of hazing. I am of the belief that the bill presented by the special committee, if adopted, would have been much better than the alternative which we must now choose. But rather than go without any legislation whatever I favor the amendment reported by the conferees.

It is only fair to say that all six of the managers at the conference—representing both bodies—were thoroughly in favor of the bill prepared by the special committee, but the Senate conferees assured us at the last conference that under no circumstances could they hope to have the Senate adopt this bill as presented.

Mr. TALBERT. As I understand, the special committee of which the gentleman was chairman has introduced a bill touching this subject of hazing?

Mr. DICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. And that bill, I believe, is now before the House.

Mr. DICK. It is on the Calendar of the House.

Mr. TALBERT. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he accepts this amendment in lieu of that bill and will not push the bill?

Mr. DICK. What we aimed to do was to get our bill adopted in place of the Senate amendment to the Academy appropriation bill. Failing in that I believe in the adoption of this amendment, trusting to the adoption of such further legislation as may be necessary to a future Congress. It seems to me that we can well afford to adopt this amendment for the purpose of giving it a fair trial. I believe that with the adoption of this amendment and the voluntary resolutions adopted at West Point by the cadets themselves, hazing will be eventually abolished at the Academy. I am of the opinion that when once the matter has had a fair trial the resolutions which the cadets voluntarily adopted on the night that we closed our examination at the Military Academy will be among the traditions of which the cadets and the institution will be most proud.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman said, as I understood, that in his opinion, if this legislation should be adopted, hazing would "eventually" cease. Does he mean that it would continue for a time and would by and by be stopped?

Mr. DICK. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What did the gentleman mean by the word "eventually?"

Mr. DICK. Perhaps I ought to have omitted that word entirely. I say that hazing has ceased at West Point, and I am inclined to believe that it has permanently ceased.

A MEMBER. And voluntarily?

Mr. DICK. Yes, voluntarily. I wish that the bill recommended by the special committee might have been adopted; for I believe that had it been the voluntary resolutions of the West Point cadets would have been enacted into permanent law, and would forever shut out the possibility of the recurrence of hazing at the United States Military Academy. But I urge this House to adopt the amendment reported by the conferees as the only legislation on this subject possible in this Congress.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. I am very desirous of bringing this matter to a conclusion. We have already had a full discussion on both sides.

Mr. DRIGGS. I wish to make only a brief statement. I ask the gentleman to allow me three minutes.

Mr. HULL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DRIGGS. Only three minutes.

Mr. HULL. I will yield the gentleman three minutes, after which I shall ask a vote.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, as I have the honor of being one of the subcommittee for the investigation of hazing at West Point, I desire simply to state at the very outset of my remarks that the question has been asked me many times by members of this House as to the responsibility of Colonel Mills, the Superintendent of West Point Military Academy, for the bad condition of discipline at the institution. I believe he should receive the highest commendation for the suppression of hazing as much as it has been suppressed in the last two years. The regulations seem to have been so drawn at West Point as to admit of all kinds and sorts of hazing. Since the administration of Colonel Mills a new regulation has been adopted by the War Department, at the suggestion of Colonel Mills, that makes hazing now almost an impossibility. So far as hazing is concerned, I am heartily in favor of adopting at the present time the amendment, or rather the conference report, that has come in this morning. I believe the Senate amendment will to a certain extent stop hazing, and when you couple with it the resolutions adopted by the cadets themselves the joint result will be most beneficial.

I do not believe the people of the United States have backed down one iota from their proposition and desire for the suppression of hazing. I believe this is also the unanimous sentiment of all who served on the West Point committee. We have been assured that the bill reported by the House committee will be brought up and considered at the next session of Congress, and then, when it is adopted, you never again, in the history of the country, will hear of any hazing at West Point. I do not intend to go into a discussion of the various types of hazing at West Point. My views on that subject are far too well known to every member of this House, and I am satisfied that in these closing hours of this present Congress the best legislation that we can possibly produce or secure is that suggested by the conferees of the House on the Military Academy bill. I trust it may be accepted and adopted.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I agreed to give three minutes to my colleague, Mr. SMITH of Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions adopted by the cadets the night your special committee left West Point distinctly state that they are adopted out of regard to the public sentiment of the country as evidenced to them. It is therefore of the utmost importance that some legislation be passed by this Congress signifying to them that they have not misapprehended the genuine public sentiment of our people.

This being the best legislation we can obtain, I think it should be adopted by the House; but I do not think it ought to be adopted until some of its fundamental defects are in a measure pointed out. At the Academy a system of challenge fighting exists. Cadets are ordered to fight by fighting committees of 6, so that we have these 6 committeemen, 2 combatants, 4 seconds, 1 referee, 1 timekeeper, and 4 sentinels, making 18 persons in all who are familiar with the facts concerning every fight. Prior to June, 1879, the cadets at the Academy were required to answer all questions propounded to them, and failure to do so was punishable as disobedience of orders. But at that time an amendment to the regulation was adopted which provides that no cadet shall be compelled to answer any question if the answer will tend to criminate him.

This has been construed by the cadets and officers of the Academy to mean that no cadet need answer any question that tends to subject him to discipline. The result is that it is impossible, by reason of the sentinels posted at these fights, for the tactical officers to ever discover the persons in the act of fighting, and as every one of the 18 persons is cognizant of the fact that he is, under the rule of the War Department, exempt from answering, no Superintendent can enforce the law at the Academy. It is absolutely essential for the maintenance of discipline that the law require that these cadets shall answer such questions as touch on infractions of discipline.

I understand it is claimed such a law would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States. But the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has shown the fallacy of this proposition by showing that the schoolmaster is, under all the decisions in England and this country, in loco parentis and has exactly the same right, in the enforcement of discipline, to ask questions and administer punishment as the head of the family. But there is another reason why they can be compelled to answer, and that is that the great provisions of the Constitution with reference to the rights of persons prosecuted in the criminal courts are not applicable in the discipline of the Army of the United States. The right which a man in the Army has to refuse to answer a question which tends to criminate him is derived from one of the articles of war and not from the Constitution. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HULL. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to print remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEELE. I want it understood that under this leave remarks are to be confined to the bill.

Mr. OTJEN. They will be entirely.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects unless those remarks are confined to the matters involved in the bill. Without objection that condition will be added. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for general leave to print for five days. Three or four gentlemen on each side want to print remarks on this question, their remarks to be confined to this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general leave to print be given for five days, to be confined to the discussion of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And the conference report.

The SPEAKER. On the passage of this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, the testimony taken by the select committee of this House in the investigation of hazing at the United States Military Academy at West Point discloses a surprising state of affairs. I am glad to note that the committee have found that a very large number of the upper class men have always been opposed to the more serious and brutal forms of hazing. I will add as a part of my remarks some of the testimony given in this investigation by Frederick H. Cunningham, a former cadet and classmate of Cadet Douglas MacArthur, and a part of the testimony given by Cadet Albert R. Dockery, showing the brutal hazing of Cadet MacArthur by Cadets Dockery and Barry.

It was my privilege to recommend the appointment of Cadet Douglas MacArthur to the Military Academy. I have personal knowledge of this young man. I know that he is a young man of gentlemanly and soldierly bearing, an industrious and painstaking student, of exemplary habits, and modest in his demeanor. There is nothing in his conduct or bearing that would warrant visiting upon him such cruel and inhuman treatment as this testimony discloses. It can only be charged to the wicked and vicious system that has grown up at the Academy. Any cadet guilty of such brutality as is shown by this testimony is, I believe, at heart a coward and will prove to be a skulking coward in the face of a real enemy. Brave men do not derive gratification or satisfaction from visiting upon their victims indignity and cruelty. It is a trait of real bravery to treat even a foe with consideration and kindness. It is only a brutal and cowardly savage who delights in such practices as have taken place at this Academy and such as was visited upon this cadet.

I have been inclined to place the blame and responsibility upon those in authority for the condition of affairs existing at the Academy, not being aware of the rule or regulation of the War Department relieving a cadet from answering any question which would tend to criminate him, a rule which has always been construed by the cadets to mean that no cadet need answer any question if the answer would tend to subject him to discipline. It is this vicious rule, or the misconstruction of it, that has been the breeder of the very state of affairs now existing there. If it is a matter of honor and a correct rule or principle to relieve a cadet from answering any question relating to his misconduct, then it is a correct rule or principle worthy to be applied to all schools throughout the country. It is not difficult to see that soon all order and discipline would be destroyed. Code of honor; yes, cadets should have a code of honor, a code of honor which is based upon strict honesty and integrity, upon absolute truthfulness, upon manly and soldierly conduct.

A code of honor that shields a cowardly ruffian who is guilty of acts scarcely less than crime is not worthy of the name. I would now wipe out these evil and disgraceful practices once for all. I would dismiss every officer, professor, and instructor at the Academy who in the least sympathizes with hazing and will not in good faith do everything in his power to stop this evil practice. I would stop it if I had to dismiss individual members of classes or to dismiss a whole class or classes. Let there be such action taken and such legislation enacted that never again will disgrace be brought upon the fair name and honor of the Academy.

By Mr. WANGER:

Q. Do you remember an occasion when MacArthur had been in a tent being exercised, and on returning to your tent was overcome?
A. I do.
Q. About when was that?
A. It was about the 13th or 14th of July.
Q. At what time in the evening?
A. It was probably about half past 7 or 8 o'clock.
Q. Did you remain at the tent?
A. I did.
Q. And when did you see him?
A. I saw him reel into the tent about an hour later.
Q. Then what took place?
A. I got up and caught him as he fell.
Q. And what did you do to him?
A. I laid him gently on the floor of the tent.
Q. Was he in violent convulsions?

A. He classed them as cramps.
Q. I am asking you to tell us what you thought.
A. I think if you saw him in the same condition on the street you would call them convulsions.
Q. Was his body writhing?
A. Yes, sir; he showed the most activity, however, in his limbs.
Q. To what extent were his limbs in motion?
A. To such an extent I had to hold them to keep them still; and finally he asked me to throw a blanket under them in order that the company officers could not hear his feet strike the floor. He had no control over them.
Q. Did you put a blanket under them?
A. I did.
Q. Was there anybody else in the tent besides yourself and MacArthur?
A. I am not sure, but I know as soon as MacArthur returned his inquisitors came around back of the tent and were very much concerned over what they had done.
Q. Who were recognized as the worst hazers of that camp?
A. I can speak only definitely connected with A Company, and the tents nearly around him—that is, one side of the A Company tent looked in the B Company tent. Barry, Dockery, and Duvall were unquestionably considered in that part of the camp the worst hazers.
Q. What time did he, MacArthur, come into your tent?
A. I think it must have been quarter to 10 or half past 9 o'clock.
Q. Then for about an hour he required considerable attention?
A. He was rather ill for an hour; yes.
Q. He was not able to undress himself, of course?
A. He was certainly helped. We thought it necessary to do so.
Q. Did he also lose control of his arms?
A. His arms and legs were in convulsion more than any other part of the body, and during the convulsion he had no control over his arms.
Q. Did MacArthur state to you at any time which one of the two cadets, Dockery or Barry, gave the last order to him?
A. I do not know.
Q. Did he state to you which one of the two men were in his tent at the last?
A. You mean during the soiree?
Q. During the soiree?
A. I do not remember whether he did or not.
Q. You have no recollection whether Dockery was in the tent, according to MacArthur's statements, up to within a few minutes of the close of the soiree?
A. No, I can not say that I have. It is my impression that—I think I have a dim impression that Barry was in the tent some time during the soiree. As a rule, they were just outside of the tent. That is the way it generally is in those soirees.
Q. Did Mr. Dockery ever apologize to Mr. MacArthur, so far as you know?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. And the only statement that Barry made is the one that you have given in your testimony?
A. That is the only one I have heard.

[Extracts from testimony of Cadet Albert R. Dockery.]

By Mr. DRIGGS:
Q. You are satisfied that you hazed Mr. MacArthur?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are also satisfied that he was sick after you got through hazing him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You heard that he had convulsions more or less?
A. Yes, sir.
By Mr. SMITH:
Q. When did you first hear that MacArthur had gone into convulsions or into an hysterical state or anything of the kind?
A. It was probably an hour and a half or two hours after.
Q. Didn't that frighten you when you heard that he was in that state, for fear that his condition would result in revealing what you had been doing and subject you to severe punishment?
A. Yes, sir; I was very sorry that I had any hand in causing a cadet to be in that condition.
By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. When you fight, you fight until the man is unconscious, do you not, or it isn't a fight?
A. Not always, sir.
Q. Well, if it isn't, then it is decreed a draw; is that right?
A. Yes, sir; or something may stop them before that.
Q. But if it is a finished fight, it is a fight where in the end one or the other is knocked unconscious or insensible?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, now, because MacArthur didn't fight wasn't the reason why you exercised him into a state of convulsions, was it?
A. No, sir.
Q. Were you there when he was making the outcries?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you remember their speaking to you about his condition?
A. All I know is that somebody told me that he was sick.
Q. You heard that he was having convulsions?
A. Yes, sir; or had had them.
Q. Had any medical aid been summoned in his case?
A. Not that I know of, sir.
Q. Are not matters of that sort promptly reported to the officers in charge?
A. Which sort?
Q. When a man goes into convulsions.
A. That is the only case that I knew of and that was not reported.
Q. Well, when a man is taken violently ill in camp it is usually reported promptly by someone, isn't it?
A. Yes, sir; he generally goes to the hospital.
Q. But in this case it was not reported?
A. No, sir.
Q. Why not?
A. Well, one thing, I suppose the reason it wasn't, they knew the men would be dismissed that did it.
By Mr. SMITH:
Q. And if he refused to subject himself to liability under the rules of the Academy at your unlawful behest, then he had no alternative but to be hazed into convulsions or go into the fight where he had to stay in the fight until he was knocked into insensibility; that is correct?
A. He was not intended to be hazed into convulsions.
Q. Well, that was all the alternative he had. You did haze him into convulsions?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the only way that he could escape was to go into a fight where he would be knocked into insensibility?
A. Yes, sir.

[From report of select committee.]

It is, of course, impossible to determine with mathematical accuracy just what has been the effect of this long course of cruel and annoying treatment upon fourth class men. We do know that several, notably Cadets MacArthur, Breth, and Burton, were hazed into convulsions; that many more, including Cadets Hascall, Kensel, McGinnis, and Pegram, were hazed until they fainted. Cadet Van Natta, and perhaps others, have been hazed until sick. Cadets Booz and Breth were both treated with great severity, and were never well after they left the Academy, and each died in his young manhood before the graduation of his class; but we can not affirmatively find that their death was caused by their treatment.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, while discussion is being had upon the subject of hazing in the Military Academy, and while the attention of the country is directed to that subject, I desire to have printed in the RECORD an article recently clipped from the Washington Post, written by Dr. S. S. Laws, a gentleman whose great learning and wide experience in educational matters entitles his views on this subject to the most serious consideration.

EDITOR POST:

Will you allow me to call attention to what I conceive to be the true and rational remedy for the irrational and worse than useless practice in our United States Military Academy, which has been attracting so much attention and comment lately? That remedy is to reduce the course to two years and make the Academy a strictly professional school.

Under the appointment of President Garfield I served on the Board of Visitors, and availed myself of the opportunity to look carefully into the interior workings of West Point. At that time the question of extending the course from four to five years was still agitated. I believe that when Jefferson Davis was Secretary of War he recommended five years, and that for a short time the five year term was tried. My point of view was strictly that of an educator, with a somewhat mature experience in college and university work. I attended the examinations and canvassed the entire course of instruction; and finding that the faculty was loaded with a mass of elementary subjects in the physical sciences, in mathematics, and even in language, which could now be taught as well or better in the private and State schools of the country, I proposed that the course should be reduced to two years—i. e., to one-half the time—instead of increasing it.

Educators will understand and appreciate my idea when I state that the principle underlying it was that of checking out all subjects and studies of general culture, and leaving only the technical studies. The result of this elimination would reduce the time to two instead of four years and actually improve the service; in a word, make West Point a professional school instead of an omnibus concern, where academic studies of general culture and technical studies of special or professional culture are commingled to the disadvantage of both.

As I stated, my standpoint was and is that of a professional educator, and I still affirm and am prepared to show—unless a transformation has occurred of which I am not informed—that the change suggested would be of advantage to the Academy as a school for the soldier and also to the educational institutions of the entire country. Let the ridiculously elementary entrance examination be dispensed with, and admit only graduates from approved colleges, attested by diplomas or examinations. Every West Point appointment is a scholarship of over $500 a year, and the stimulus of keeping these scholarships filled, of furnishing candidates for these three or four hundred prizes within every two years, would be a powerful uplift to educational work all over the land when it is considered how the patronage is distributed.

The notion that poor boys would thereby be left and overslaughed is utterly fallacious, for the greater part of our college graduates are poor in purse but rich in brain.

When West Point was founded our educational work was undeveloped, and there was then some reason for taking on these elementary studies, but now every State has not only its common schools and academies, but its university or universities.

The present practical bearing of this view is that if the entrants were properly educated and matured young gentlemen they could not be led out like lambs to the hazing slaughter by the advanced class contingent of vulgar, unmanly ruffians. Look on the scenes of warfare in the present and in the past, and how common is it for honorable and self-respecting soldiers to be disgraced by the unsoldierly conduct of men who do not deserve to be named the comrades of decent men who are worthy of the uniform they wear and of the flag they bear.

My experience of more than a quarter of a century in association with youth in their college and university life tells me that the raising of the standard of admission and the conversion of the Academy into a strictly professional military school would not only expunge the idiotic impositions of hazing, but also extinguish the ugly class antipathies. The efficiency of the school in the entire range of its influence would be raised, and the effect on the educational institutions of the entire country would be favorable. Who ever heard of hazing in our strictly professional or technical schools? At present West Point can not claim to be such a school. I have had an exceptionally extended and varied personal experience in such schools as pupil and officer, and I never knew or heard of a case of hazing in such a school.

Judged by its theory, design, and history, West Point is simply an educational institution, under the patronage and control of the General Government, for the specific purpose of educating officers for the Army. The law school does not aim at educating its pupils simply as men or as citizens, but as lawyers to practice law. The medical school also sloughs off all extraneous matters, however important in other connections, and educates its pupils to practice medicine. And so West Point, I respectfully submit, should confine itself to the specialties of the soldier's vocation.

S. S. LAWS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 28, 1900.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I submit the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The report is quite lengthy, dealing with 166 items, and I ask that the reading of it be omitted and that the statement be read, which fully explains what our conference committee has done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and that the statement be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont if this is the final report.

Mr. GROUT. It is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On all controverted and disputed subjects and items? I think the report might be printed in the RECORD, in order to get the benefit of it, and then let the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. Coupled with the request of the gentleman from Vermont is the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection to these requests? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13575) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

On Nos. 163 and 164: Makes immediately available the sum appropriated for refitting the Oneida for the District Naval Militia, and provides, as proposed by the Senate, for the disposition of deductions made from the pay of officers and enlisted men of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

On Nos. 165 and 166: Appropriates for a foreman in the water department at $1,400, instead of $1,200 as proposed by the House and $1,500 as proposed by the Senate.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $8,504,960.94, being $763,305 more than as it passed the House, $364,060 less than as it passed the Senate, $575,734 less than the estimates, and $927,600.63 in excess of the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,
JOHN M. ALLEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly, for a question, but not the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not in any particular hurry, but I will ask the gentleman to make a statement in reference to amendment 151.

Mr. GROUT. I will explain amendment 151 in a moment, but I would like first to have the House understand the reasons for the increase of this bill over the bill of last year. That increase is $927,600.63 over the appropriations for the current year, as was just read in the report.

The items that go to make that sum are as follows: First, for sewers, $331,000 more than last year. This provides for the pumping plant, a large item of cost in the general sewer plan for the city. This plan is already largely executed, at an outlay of nearly $2,000,000, and will call for as much more. There is $20,000 more for the repair of county roads in this bill than in the last one. There is $25,000 more for Connecticut avenue bridge. There is $300,000 more for the filtration plant than last year. There was $200,000 appropriated last year and $500,000 this year. There is $188,960 more for public schools than last year, principally in building new schoolhouses and providing additional teachers, and in necessary repairs of school buildings.

There is $28,140 more for the Metropolitan police, and for the fire department $19,700 more, part of which, you will remember, is to meet the increased pay of the firemen. It has been long thought that the pay of the fireman was not large enough.

There is $22,500 more for Rock Creek Park and $27,500 more for the municipal almshouse, making a total of $962,800 that this bill carries more than the last one for these particular objects. This, you will notice, considerably more then accounts for the excess of this bill over the last. Sewers, schools, and the filtration plant account for $819,960 of the increase, leaving but $107,680 increase in all other departments of the District government. I wanted the House to understand the branches of the public service which called for these additional allowances, that it might see that the money will go to the betterment of the sanitary conditions of the city and for the enlargement of the public-school system.

Now I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I noticed by amendment No. 151, which comes to the House as an original proposition from the Senate, the Senate amendment provided for the appropriation of $25,000 for the purchase of a site on which to build an almshouse. The conferees have attached an amendment to that providing for the donation by the United States Government of 59 acres in a tract of land near the Government Insane Asylum upon which an almshouse is to be built. I first desire to ask the gentleman whether he does not think that provision is exceeding the authority of the conferees and is subject to a point of order?

Mr. GROUT. I can not see why it is outside of the matter properly submitted to the conferees. It all relates to procuring a site for an almshouse. The Senate amendment was agreed to with this proviso added, which is simply permissive, not in any way directory; but supposing it were directory, I think the subject was fully within the scope of the conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is in the general line of the object, but it is a change of the scheme. The Senate bill provided such an amount for the purchase of a site. Under the law the District of Columbia would pay one half and the United States Treasury the other half. Now, you make a donation of 59 acres of land for this building.

Mr. GROUT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not dwell upon this, because it has passed the point where a point of order would lie; besides, I insist it is subject to no point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Well, Mr. Speaker, after conference with the gentleman, who is seeing that there is no excessive appropriation, I make the point of order now.

Mr. GROUT. The point comes too late. We have entered upon the discussion of the report.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. GROUT. That the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana comes too late.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I just learned it from the statement which has been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the point of order made by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GROUT. It is that it comes too late, and besides it is not subject to a point of order. The action of the conferees is strictly within the subject-matter submitted on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The point I make is that the conferees exceeded their authority by ingrafting new legislation and that it was unascertainable on my part until now.

The SPEAKER. So many gentlemen come and talk to the presiding officer that it is impossible for the Chair to keep run of the business. The Chair is of the opinion that when discussion has been entered upon and no reservation has been made as to a point of order it comes too late afterwards to make the point, and the Chair will sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to have some arrangement with the gentleman as to discussion of this as an original proposition. I think the conference report ought to be voted down.

Mr. GROUT. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think thirty minutes.

Mr. GROUT. I do not feel that I ought to yield the gentleman thirty minutes. Can he not present his reasons in less time?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, well, if the gentleman will be generous with other members who want to speak upon this matter, very well. I only want ten minutes.

Mr. GROUT. We will be reasonable; but the gentleman must remember that the gentleman in charge of the bill only has one hour.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will explain about this provision.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. GROUT. I yield, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Indiana ten minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this is an aggravated instance of how measures will come before the House without the consideration of the House, presented as it is in conference, and without any opportunity on the part of the House members as a legislative body to fairly consider it. It is clearly legislation in conference. This measure slips into the House silently and furtively. It does not come through the open door. Measures such as this is will never come into the House of Representatives through the open door. The bill went to the Senate without any provision for building the almshouse, and there was amended by a provision appropriating $25,000 for the purchase of a site. Under that law the District of Columbia would pay one-half the sum, and the other half would come from the Treasury of the United States.

This District of Columbia appropriation bill provides, for the purchase of sites for schoolhouses in the District of Columbia, something like $557,000, one-half of which is to be paid by taxation of the District and the other half by the United States Treasury. But now, by a provision passed by a Senate amendment as an original proposition when the bill went there from the House, and unheard of in this House before, it provides for the appropriation of $25,000 for the purchase of a site for the District almshouse. That was regular. It goes to conference, however, and the conferees insert in the bill this new provision:

> Providing, if acceptable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to them for the site for such almshouse the tract of land containing about 60 acres belonging to the United States, lying south of Congress Heights, east of Nichols avenue, and detached from the present site of the Government Insane Hospital.

This provision is a reecho of the measure we had on the floor of the House the other day for the purchase of more land for the District insane asylum, and we then defeated the scheme for the purchase of more land for the insane asylum. This 60 acres of land, according to different estimates, is worth from $30,000 to $60,000; according to the estimates of the Appropriation Committee, recommending the purchase of more land a few days ago, it is worth $60,000. That is the land now owned by the United States Government within one-quarter of a mile of the District of Columbia asylum, and useful for purposes of farming, as it was stated on the floor. It was further stated then that adjoining land was needed by the asylum for farming purposes. But now it is proposed that the United States shall give 60 acres of its land to the District of Columbia without a dollar of compensation—donating it; and that is the provision inserted by the conferees and is not the Senate amendment, and it is not a House provision, but it comes here now for the first time.

It was said upon the floor of the House before that we did not have land enough at the asylum for the useful purpose of farming. Not only is this a measure slipped in by the conferees; not only is it a donation of land worth from thirty to sixty thousand dollars belonging to the United States, but it is sought to place the almshouse of the District of Columbia in the most unhealthy locality in the District. You have at the asylum over there 2,100 inmates, whom it is claimed are soldiers and sailors. Eleven hundred of them are from the District of Columbia, and you have already donated a site for that, and to take care of the District insane out of the United States Treasury in making appropriations to build an asylum under the guise of the Army and Navy insane asylum, but it is really for the District of Columbia.

Of this 2,100 people insane over there, one-half of whom, only, are from the Army and Navy, 10 per cent die every year. The autopsies in 1,400 cases show that 23 per cent die from pulmonary diseases aggravated by the malaria from the Potomac Flats. These are conditions within the knowledge of all who have investigated the records or observed the physical conditions. It is claimed by the surveyors and engineers of the District that by a proper construction of dikes and embankments 130 acres of land contiguous to the 189 acres now used by the asylum can be reclaimed for the Government use. The Potomac River flowing over it has produced a degree of malaria unheard of, in my judgment, anywhere else in the District and anywhere else in the country.

Now, it is proposed over there not only to put the poor soldiers and sailors where they die at the rate of 10 per cent every year, but also the poor of the District; and in order to secure on the part of the United States Government a part of this land, it is provided that this almshouse shall be built there without a cent being paid for the purchase of a site; and this is done in contravention of the safe and useful rules of the House. Under the law of 1878 the District pays one-half of the expense for school sites and school buildings; it pays one-half of the expense for the building of bridges in this District; it pays one-half of the expense for the maintenance of the waterworks plant.

And now the United States Government is asked to yield 60 acres of land for the purpose of acquiring a site for the erection of an asylum for the poor of this District in the most unhealthy locality known. The death rate in this District already is high enough; and when you inquire of the man who for many years has been in the wash room of the House of Representatives [Charles Carter], when you inquire of another of the House employees who has been in the barber shop here for years [John Williams], when they tell you what they know about the conditions in that part of this District you will find that they, with their families, were driven out, to protect themselves against the malaria of the Potomac Heights. It is far from charity to locate the unfortunate poor over there.

It may be that it is useful to pass this kind of legislation in this way, but I appeal to those who are in favor of economy; I appeal to those who are interested in charity. I ask members of this House not to sanction a species of legislation which would never receive their approval had it been presented otherwise than in a conference report. How long shall we abdicate our powers as members of the House and yield legislative powers to our conferees? It is not often that we have measures slipped in in this sly way, but you find here, covered over with a veil of charity, an ingenious project. I might add that this is coupled with another proposition that will come up later on in the sundry civil bill that will affect the insane asylum across the river.

You find here a veiled attempt to get for the District of Columbia land in a neighborhood which gives it such a value, and which was stated to be so valuable only a few days ago, when we refused to purchase additional land for the insane asylum. This is the same plan, the same plot, the same scheme; and it justifies every lover of economy, every lover of the human race, in voting against this conference report and teaching conferees, as was well said by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] on yesterday, to go out and do their duty under the rules of the House.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] admits that if this point of order had been made in time it would have been fatal. Therefore let us preserve our prerogatives——

Mr. GROUT. "The gentleman from Vermont" does not admit that if the point of order had been made in time it would have been good.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not want to misstate the gentleman's position; but I understood him to say that the point of order, if raised in time, would have been well taken.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But however that may be, here we are in the closing days of this session, with every possible scheme that can be devised by man, and especially schemes relating to the District of Columbia, coming here to confront us; and now is a good chance to assert our prerogative as legislators in this House.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] asks that the Chair may determine this point of order on its merits. I am willing that it should be so determined. I stated both grounds to the Chair.

Mr. LOUD. One of which evidently the Chair listened to.

Mr. GROUT. The Chair could not have failed to hear both grounds. I am perfectly willing to submit the point of order on its merits.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. GROUT. I do it. I will take the decision of the Chair now on that question. I am perfectly willing to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). The present occupant of the chair is unwilling to overrule his predecessor, but will say that if this were an original proposition he would hold that the point of order did not come too late.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I appeal to the generosity of the gentleman from Vermont to allow this matter to come before the Chair as an original proposition.

Mr. GROUT. Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Chair understood the point I presented. When this point of order was made it was insisted by myself that the matter was not subject to a point of order for two reasons, first, because it was entirely within the scope of the subject submitted to conference—was not outside of the matters submitted—and, second, that it was not made in season.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that this question can only come up now by unanimous consent, and there is one member objecting.

Mr. GROUT. Very well. Now, then, as to why this was done, I will tell all about it. Here was a proposition to purchase a site for a municipal almshouse, the necessity for which we need not consider for a moment. It is conceded by all. The House conferees were inclined to agree to the amendment of the Senate; but the question arose with us—wholly within the walls of the room where the conference was in progress—whether we might not utilize some of the ground which the Government owned, instead of purchasing other land. We realized how excited our friends on the other side become when a question about the purchase of land arises. They get just wild on that subject.

In view of that fact, and it being within the knowledge of the committee that this tract of land which the superintendent of the asylum, Dr. Richardson, had stated was of no practical use to the asylum, we thought it might be well to put the almshouse there.

Instead of buying land, knowing that Dr. Richardson had recommended that this 59-acre piece be disposed of, and knowing, also, that steps were being taken to dispose of it, the conferees thought that this land, which was of no account for asylum purposes, might well enough be utilized for the purpose of an almshouse site, hoping and expecting (incorrectly as it turns out) that in this way we would avoid opening the subject of the purchase of land, which was proposed by the amendment of the Senate, and which, every time it comes up in the House, makes certain gentlemen frantic.

Mr. LOUD. The District should have paid the half of this expense, but you propose that the United States Government pay the whole.

Mr. GROUT. I will say to my friend from California that we agreed on this proposition for the purpose of avoiding the purchase of this land—for the purpose of utilizing land which everybody who knows anything about the subject knows is not used by the asylum, and which the superintendent was recommending should be disposed of; and if I may be allowed to refer to it, I may say that a proposition is pending in another place to dispose of this land.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why should not the District of Columbia pay one-half of the cost of this land?

Mr. GROUT. That question is a fair one, and I will answer it. This land cost the Government $6,000 for the 59 acres. That is all. The Senate amendment proposed to tax the General Government $12,500 for this site, when, if this land were taken, it would cost the Government less than one-half as much.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What is the value of the site selected at present?

Mr. GROUT. It is undoubtedly worth more now than $6,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Ought not the District to pay half the appraised value?

Mr. GROUT. Possibly. I was going to speak about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not the general agreement that the District shall pay half of these expenses?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly; and to be frank with the gentleman, speaking for myself alone, the thought of dividing the cost of this land never occurred to me at the time this matter was under consideration in conference, or I, standing constantly as I always have for the half and half division between the District and the General Government, might have stipulated for a provision of that kind. That can be done at any time, however, in the future. We have corrected in the present bill the appropriation of $10,000, which was inadvertently put upon the General Government in excess of its share last session. These matters are always under the control of Congress; are always in our own hands.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SHAFROTH. After the grant is given, will it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado must first address the Chair.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, would it not be too late to attempt to impose upon the District any part of the cost of this site?

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, it would not. This whole business of District expenditures is inquired into at every session of Congress, and whatever is not right is always open to correction. I just stated to you that we brought into the House in this bill an item of $10,000. It was not properly divided last year. But the money has been expended.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why can not it be corrected now?

Mr. GROUT. It can not without voting down the report and going back into conference, if it was thought desirable to do so; but I do not. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Colorado asked the question I was going to ask. As I understood the gentleman, if under this permission to use these lands the District Commissioners should locate the almshouse upon it, instead of buying land somewhere else, that it is quite competent for Congress at the next session, or at any other time, to care for the half that the District ought to pay out of the District funds.

Mr. GROUT. Precisely so, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Illinois makes that very plain. Should we come to the actual appropriation of this land, we can then adjust the cost of it between the Government and the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOUD. Why did not you incorporate it?

Mr. GROUT. I have already fully explained how there is no necessity that it be done in this bill. I am wondering why the gentleman is so swift to-day with questions and so full of the subject.

Mr. LOUD. I am swift in trying to get information.

Mr. GROUT. I am glad to know the gentleman wants information and will willingly tell him all I know about it. Remember this provision for the transfer of that land does not make it obligatory; it is simply permissive so far as the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioners are concerned.

Mr. LOUD. But this makes it final.

Mr. GROUT. Power is conferred on the Commissioners and the Secretary of the Interior, and if they do appropriate for the almshouse the land, that will settle the question, and in another session Congress can rightfully settle the question of cost. But now——

Mr. LOUD. Would it not be legislation, if you want to correct it; and any one member of the House on an appropriation bill on a point of order would be able to throw it out, and you would have to do it on a separate bill or by unanimous consent?

Mr. GROUT. It would not be legislation, because under the act of 1878 the District and General Government must bear equally all the municipal expenses. This almshouse is an item of municipal expense and there is full authority under the organic act to deal with it in an appropriation bill.

Mr. LOUD. But——

Mr. GROUT. Wait a moment. This is a municipal expense; and if in our transactions, in our bookkeeping, we happen to make an error when we make the footings at one time, can there be any question but that it is always open for us to correct it at another?

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman assume that if the United States Government deeds to the District of Columbia a piece of property, they will have the right to correct the deed hereafter as an error and charge the District of Columbia something for that property for which it has got a deed?

Mr. GROUT. There is no deed authorized. It is simply a transfer of property——

Mr. LOUD. What is a deed but a transfer? They would evidently have a title.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, to state it exactly, this is a transfer of the use of this property from one Government purpose to another; that is all. It is already owned by the Government and supposed to be used for a certain purpose. But it turns out that it does not suit that purpose, and so is turned to use for one for which it is suited. Now, to put my friends at rest, I will state that I have just received a dispatch from the Secretary of the Interior that he does not approve this proposition to turn this land over for an almshouse site; that he has other use for the land; and as the amendment only authorizes him, but does not direct him, that ends the matter.

Mr. LOUD. Why do you put it in here, then?

Mr. GROUT. I did not know of this view of the Secretary till just now. We put it into the bill to close the conference. The gentleman asks every imaginable question, and I will tell him everything I know about it. We thought it a prudent step and likely to save the expenditure of money for land and avoid a discussion, if possible, in the House about the purchase of land; but we find our mistake in this. We have evidently got into a deeper wrangle than if we had proposed to buy the land. The Secretary of the Interior has been communicated with to-day, and he is putting this land to another purpose, he says. I do not know certainly what it is, but suppose I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, what is the purpose?

Mr. GROUT. Well, I am willing to give the gentleman all the information I have, and will do so by reading the Secretary's dispatch:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, February 27, 1901.

Hon. WM. W. GROUT:

Replying to your telephonic inquiry of this morning, I have to state that a tract of 59½ acres of land, known as Stevens's farm, and lying immediately south of what is now known as Congress Heights and east of Nichols avenue, was purchased by this Department for use of the Government Hospital for the Insane in 1867 for the sum of $6,000 under an appropriation made therefor by Congress.
